This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world’s books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that’s often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book’s long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google’s system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google “watermark” you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can’t offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book’s appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google’s mission is to organize the world’s information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world’s books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/
THE

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

CONDUCTED BY

ASHBELE GREEN. D.D.

VOL. IV.
FOR THE YEAR 1826.

NEW YORK.
PUBLIC LIBRARY

— By manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.—2 Cor. iv. 2.

PHILADELPHIA:
PUBLISHED BY
A. FINLEY, N.E. CORNER OF CHESNUT AND FOURTH STREETS.
Clark & Raser, Printers, 33 Carter's Alley.
1826.
PREFACE.

On completing the fourth volume of the Christian Advocate, the editor would devoutly acknowledge the goodness of God in enabling him thus far to continue his labours, with the hope that he has not laboured altogether in vain.

This Miscellany may now be considered as having obtained an establishment, which, under proper management, will ensure its permanency. Its patronage indeed must still be regarded as scanty, if compared with the extent and resources of the church to whose service it is specially devoted—whose doctrines it advocates, and whose institutions it aims to defend and promote. Yet the increase of subscribers, in the year which is closing, has been greater than in any preceding year; and the pecuniary avails of the work are now such as to afford its conductor a moderate compensation for his toil. But in his laborious vocation, the editor is chiefly animated by evidence which he thinks he ought not to distrust, that the contents of the Christian Advocate have commended themselves to the decisive approbation of many of the most pious and intelligent of its readers, in more than one denomination of Christians; and that his work has efficiently co-operated with other works of a similar character, in checking error, in diffusing knowledge, in prompting and encouraging Christian effort and enterprise, and in promoting, generally, the interests of evangelical religion, pure morals, and sound literature. It has been gratifying to learn that in some places, and to a considerable extent, this Magazine has been circulated and read, without cost, among the friends of the subscribers—It would be still more gratifying, if such of these gratuitous readers as can well afford it, would become subscribers for themselves. Yet let them, by all means, continue to read without charge, rather than neglect to read at all.

To those who have furnished articles for insertion in the Christian Advocate, and to all who have used their influence and exertions to extend its patronage, the editor returns his cordial thanks; and he respectfully solicits the continuance of assistance and favour—for which he hopes never to be found ungrateful. It would give him real pleasure to mention the names of certain individuals, to whom he holds himself particularly indebted. But he is not authorized to do this; and till he is, he will not hazard a trespass on the feelings of others, for the gratification of his own.

Several improvements, which it is believed would add considerable value to the contents of this Miscellany, have been in contemplation. Some of them, it is hoped, will appear in the next volume. But the editor is of the mind that it is better to exhibit improvements made, than to pourtray them in promise.

The completion of a volume of his work, and the close of the year, ought forcibly to admonish the editor, and may not unaptly remind all his readers, that every present engagement, and life itself, is hastening to a close. Then, let us remember, the solemn inquest, involving the destinies of eternity, will be made, how we have passed our probationary existence; how every year, and day, and hour of time has been employed; by what motives we have been actuated in all we have done; whether, in the course of life, we have been supremely influenced by a regard to the glory of God, and to our own best interest and that of our fellow men; whether we have lived for eternity more than for time; whether we have been laying up treasure in heaven, or only on the earth. These inquiries, therefore, should command our most serious attention, while investigation may be gratifying. Seriously pursued, the inquiries cannot fail to bring home the conviction to every conscience, that transgression and neglect have left us no hope of an acquittal by our final Judge, but from a personal interest, secured by unfeigned faith, in the atoning merits and prevalent intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ. To him, therefore, let the eye of faith be constantly directed; from him, as the inexhaustible source of all spiritual supplies, let grace and aid be earnestly sought, to perform with increasing activity and effect every incumbent duty; that at length—justified by his righteousness, sanctified by his Spirit, and formed into his likeness—we may be admitted to the rest and the reward "which remain for the people of God."
THE
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

JANUARY, 1826.

Religious Communications.

The following discourse was committed to the press, immediately after it was delivered; and a subscription for the copies of a small impression, was opened at the same time. Contrary to expectation, the number of copies subscribed for, was greater than the number printed. Hence, some of the subscribers, as well as some others, who have since expressed a wish to obtain a copy, have been disappointed. These considerations, together with the importance and general interest of the subject discussed, have determined the editor to give the discourse a place in the Christian Advocate. Those of his readers who may already possess copies, will excuse the appropriation of a few pages to the gratification of others, and to the promotion, it is hoped, of a most important charity.

THE CHRISTIAN DUTY OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN. A Discourse, delivered in the Church of Princeton, New Jersey, August 23d, 1825, before the Princeton Female Society, for the Support of a Female School in India. By Ashbel Green, D.D. Published at the request of the Society.

Mark xiv. 8.—First part.
"She hath done what she could—."

These words are found in the narrative of a very interesting incident, in the life of our blessed Redeemer. Six days before the Jewish Passover at which he entered on his last sufferings, a supper, or festival entertainment, was made for him at Bethany; a village in the environs of Jerusalem, frequently mentioned in the evangelical history, and particularly memorable as the residence of Lazarus, whom he raised from the dead. The supper was made at the house of one Simon, a leper; who, it is highly probable, had been cleansed by the miraculous power of Christ. Lazarus was a guest at this entertainment; which some suppose was made, either wholly or in part, at his expense; and his sisters, Martha and Mary, were both present. With her characteristic activity, Martha served at the supper-table; and Mary, with her wonted reverential love to her Lord and Redeemer, and animated no doubt with the liveliest gratitude for the interposition of his almighty power, in calling her beloved brother from the tomb, gave him, on this occasion, a signal expression of her sense of obligation, and of the high estimation in which she wished that others should hold him. She had made preparation for this expression of her gratitude and love, by procuring an alabaster box of the most costly and fragrant ointment; such as was then used about the persons of individuals the most distinguished by birth or office—that with this she might anoint her benefactor, whom... she also knew to be the long expected Messiah, the Prince of peace. His recumbent attitude, then always in use at the supper table, was peculiarly favourable to her design. Approaching him in this reclining posture, she broke the box of liquid Nard, and poured it, first on his head, and afterwards on his body and his feet. And then, while the house was filled with the odour of the ointment, this holy devoted woman kneeled at the feet of Jesus, and wiped them with the flowing tresses of her hair.

Christian sisters, are you tempted to envy your sister Mary?—To envy the opportunity she had to express, in a most striking and affecting manner, her humble, ardent attachment, to your common and adored Redeemer? Envy not—but imitate her. Opportunities still occur, to express love and gratitude to your unseen Saviour, by acts as acceptable to him as that of Mary was; and which he will, ere long, acknowledge and reward, before the assembled universe.

Who would expect that any disciple of Christ could disapprove of such a testimonial of reverence and esteem, as that which he received from the sister of Lazarus? Who would not rather expect, that the whole company would witness it with delight, and applaud the happy ingenuity by which it had been devised, and the lovely enthusiasm—shall I not call it—with which the device was executed? But it was not so. Judas was among the guests. He, it has commonly been believed, had been appointed the purse-bearer of the holy family, from his reputed integrity, care and capacity, in the management of pecuniary concerns. His opinion therefore, on a point of economy, especially when that which might be saved was to be given to the poor, would naturally have much weight with his fellow apostles; knowing too, as they well did, that their Master had never affected worldly honours, nor required any extraordinary expenditure for his own gratification. They therefore joined in the murmuring which began with Judas—Not suspecting that he was hypocrite, thief, and traitor, all in one; and that he only wished that the “three hundred pence” (about fifty dollars of our money) for which “the ointment might have been sold,” should have been added to the common stock; that he might carry off a richer prize, when he should abscond with the whole; which it appears he had, about this time, determined to do—Not in the least suspecting anything of all this, the other disciples were influenced by the suggestions of a base and wicked avarice, to join in the murmurs, that there had been, on the part of Mary, a profligate waste of property, which might have been applied to a better purpose.

The whole of this murmuring, Christian friends, both in its origin and tendency, was, in my apprehension, exceedingly like the complaints which we have lately heard from certain quarters, that much money is wasted—is wantonly and foolishly thrown away—in profess ed attempts to honour Christ, by sending his gospel to the heathen and the Jews.

But the Saviour vindicated Mary, and reproved her calumniators. Her views of duty, dictated by her liberal spirit, and her warm and generous heart, were far more correct than their calculating and cold-blooded reasonings on the subject. The Saviour reminded them, that every duty must have its proper time and place. The poor they would always have with them, and would never be without an opportunity to show them kindness; “but me (said he) ye have not always?”—His departure from them was now just at hand, and whatever tokens of their regard he was to receive must be speedily bestowed, or the opportunity for bestowing them would be past forever. It is not probable, indeed, that Mary, any more than the apostles, had foreseen that Christ, before the expiration of that very week, would suffer the death of crucifixion. It was the ardour of her affectionate reverence for her Lord, which prompted her to do what she had done. But she had done what was right in itself; and the overruling providence of God had so ordered it, that this honourable anointing of the sacred person of the Messiah, should take place immediately before he was cut off—“She hath done, (said he) what she could; she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.” As if he had said—“Others are about to insult and despise me, and to put me to an infamous and painful death; but she hath done what she could for my gratification, and to show me honour and respect; and let her not be blamed for this—The anointing of the dead is indeed attended with considerable expense. But would you grudge such an expense to my dead body? My enemies would not permit Mary to do what has occasioned this cost, after my decease; and God hath therefore put it into her heart to anoint me aforehand.” Nor did the Saviour content himself, with simply justifying this noble and affectionate expression of Mary’s attachment and devotedness. He went farther in his commendation of it than he ever went—so far as we are told—in approving any other act of kindness or respect, that was shown to his person. He declared that wherever his Gospel should be preached in the whole world, and to the end of time, this deed of Mary should be told, as an honourable memorial of her. Accordingly we find, in fact, that although the action is apparently not of the greatest importance, in the history of our Lord, and very many of his own acts, as St. John informs us, are not recorded at all, yet this deed of Mary is circumstantially narrated by three of the evangelists. And it is a delightful thought, that after the lapse of near twenty centuries, and at the distance of half the circumference of the globe from the place where the prediction was uttered, I am, at this moment, contributing my mite, to its verification.

Do we not learn from all this, that when, from real and fervent love to Christ, we do what we can to serve and glorify him, he marks it with the most peculiar approbation, and will confer on it the most distinguished reward?

“She hath done what she could”

—It seems to be a legitimate inference from these words, a general proposition which they will fairly support, that Christian women ought to do all that they can, to manifest their love to the Saviour, and their desire to do him honour.—For who will say that others ought not to do as Mary did? Few indeed, it is believed, except avowed infidels, will deny the truth of this doctrine, when proposed in the abstract form in which it is here stated. Yet when we come to examine it in detail, and to apply it to practice, we find that opinion is by no means uniform, even among professing Christians.

We propose, therefore, in the sequel of this discourse, to endeavour to ascertain and state, what Christian women may do; and what they may not do; in manifesting their love to Christ, and their desire to do him honour.

It may be proper just to remark, in a preliminary way, that genuine love to Christ, and a rational desire to do him honour, will always manifest themselves in earnest endeavours to render the Redeemer precious in the estimation of others.—In using all proper means to propagate the knowledge of his glorious person; of his excellent doctrines; of his great salvation; of the obligations which sinners owe him; and of the absolute necessity of their embracing for themselves his

...red mercy, as the only sure ground of their hope for eternity. It is by thus doing that we comply with our Lord's own directions on this subject. "Herein (said he) is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples—If ye love me, keep my commandments—Feed my sheep, feed my lambs—inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Let it be remembered then, that our Saviour is identified with his religion; and that to love, to promote, or to adorn the religion of Christ, is to express love to himself, and to honour him before the world. Our representations and language, in the discussion before us, will be in conformity with this remark.

In prosecuting our purpose, as already stated, we may find it advantageous to consider—

I. The negative part of our subject; namely, what Christian women may not do, in manifesting their love to their Saviour, and their desire to do him honour.

It is plainly intimated in the text, that Mary's efforts to honour her Redeemer, were limited. When it is said, "she hath done what she could," the implication is obvious, that she would have done more, if more had been in her power—if propriety would have permitted, or if means and opportunity had not been wanting. By what circumstances and considerations, then, were her efforts limited? In the first place, I answer—by the bounds prescribed to her by her sex itself. Happy is that woman who always finds that she cannot do, what it is improper for her to do as a woman; whose whole mind and feelings are so set against whatever misbecomes her, that she experiences a fortunate incapacity to attempt it. The Saviour, to whom Christian women are to manifest their attachment, is their Creator and Lord. He framed them with that shrinking delicacy of temperament and feeling, which is one of their best distinctions, which renders them amiable, and which, while it unfitts them for command, and subjects them, in a degree, to the rougher sex, gives them, at the same time, an appropriate and very powerful influence. It was therefore not to be expected, that he who formed them with this natural and retiring modesty, and under a qualified subjection to man, would ever require, or even permit them, to do any thing in violation of his own order; and least of all that he would permit this, in his own immediate service. Hence I apprehend it is, that we find in the New Testament, such texts as the following—1 Tim. ii. 11—14. "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." Again, 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church."

The same apostle, who, under the unerring guidance of Divine inspiration, delivered these plain and positive injunctions, has also said—1 Cor. xi. 5. "Every woman that prayeth, or prophesieth, with her head uncovered, dishonoureth her head; for that is even all one as if she were shaven." Here, unquestionably, is a direction how women ought to appear and act, when speaking in a publick Christian assembly; for the connexion of the passage shows clearly, that it is of such an assembly that the apostle is here treating. This latter direction, therefore, has the appearance of militating pointedly with the texts before recited; and as we know that inspired truth can never contradict, or be inconsistent with itself, it becomes a serious question—how is this apparent inconsistency to be cleared up? We answer, that in our apprehension it can be done in one way only; but in that way, easily and perfectly. Let it be carefully observed then, that during the period of miraculous endowments, under the Gospel dispensation, as well as under that of Moses, the gift of supernatural inspiration was sometimes conferred on women, as well as on men. We are told expressly, that Philip the Evangelist “had four daughters, virgins, that did prophesy.”

Now, in the last quoted passage, the apostle is plainly speaking of women under supernatural inspiration; but in the other passages, of women under no such inspiration. It appears, therefore, that by a miraculous gift, the great Head and lawgiver of the church, took the case of the women on whom he bestowed that gift out of the general rule; and authorized them to utter, even in publick assemblies, what his own Spirit dictated at the time. But on all other and ordinary occasions—to which our first quotations refer—they are absolutely required not to speak, but to keep silence in the churches. It is also worthy of special remark, that even when divinely authorized to speak, they were still commanded to be covered; as indicative of a delicate reserve, and as recognising a state of subjection. The explanation here given, as it seems indispensable to the reconciling of one part of Holy Writ with another, so it will be found to be countenanced and warranted, by the context of the passages we have recited. But as we assuredly believe, that miraculous inspiration has long since ceased in the Christian church, no such excepted cases as those we have mentioned, can any longer occur. The general rule, therefore, laid down by the Spirit of Christ, speaking by the mouth of St. Paul, is now in force, without an exception. Women are, in no case, to be publick preachers and teachers, in assemblies promiscuously composed of the two sexes. This is explicitly and pointedly prohibited. Here, then, is one thing that Christian women may not do, in their endeavours to promote and extend the religion of Christ. And I am well assured, that in making the statement you have just heard, all that I have said, accords as fully with the views, wishes and feelings of that Society at whose request, and in whose behalf, I now speak, as it does with the spirit and injunctions of Sacred Scripture.

2. The endeavours of Christian women to promote and extend the religion of Christ, must be limited by a due regard to the means they may have at command, and the opportunities which may offer for the purpose. This indeed is a rule of duty which, taken at large, is as applicable to men as to women.—The efforts of all to do good, must be bounded by their means and opportunities. But there is a special application of the rule to the female sex, which ought to be distinctly noticed and carefully regarded. Their means of contributing both to publick and private charities, must frequently be derived from the other sex. What they give must often come from the purses of their husbands, fathers, brothers, or other near kindred, or particular friends; and they certainly, in all such cases, ought to be consulted, and to determine on the amount of charity which, in any given instance, it is proper to bestow—unless indeed a general discretion has been previously allowed.

Sometimes, we know, the case is otherwise. In a number of instances, women have property of their own, entirely free from any foreign control; and then their duty, as to charitable donations, is clearly under no other restriction, than that which is common to them with men; and this seems to have been the case with her to whom our text refers. We are not, indeed, expressly told that such was the fact. But the circumstances which are narrated appear to indicate, that what she did was unlooked for by the whole company, except by Him who knew all things—that neither Lazarus nor Martha was acquainted with their sister's design, till it was executed. If this were so, the expensive purchase which Mary had made, was probably made from her separate and independent part of the family estate; or from her own earnings. Be this as it might, it is an obvious duty for every Christian woman to submit to her relatives, implicitly, the disposition of their own property; after laying before them, as she lawfully may, the considerations and motives which influence her own mind in favour of a contemplated charity.

I cannot, however, forbear to mention here, that it is a noble expression of Christian benevolence, which is now witnessed in various parts of our country, where pious and publick spirited females cheerfully sacrifice superfluous expense in dress or equipage; and others as cheerfully labour with their own hands, in forming garments, or in making for sale to the rich, certain articles of taste or ornament; and both classes put the proceeds of the whole into the treasury of the Lord;—to extend, in various ways, the inestimable blessings of his precious Gospel. These sacrifices and labours, when kept within any moderate bounds, are by no means to be considered as violations of female duty;—and those who endeavour harshly to restrain them, or to discourage them by ridicule and banter, act a part, to which we give only its proper character, when we say that it is, at once, unmanly, base and wicked.

On the circumstance, that the opportunities which women have to do good are more circumscribed than those of men, we only remark in general, that as we can easily see that the propriety of what was done by her to whom the text relates, depended much, not only on the known character of the Saviour, but on what she did being done at the house of a friend, and in the presence of her own family and of many other witnesses; so Christian women now, ought to be sensible, that they can seldom be required to expose their persons to insult, or their characters to unfavourable imputations, by any enterprises or errands of benevolence; or by any exertions to propagate the Gospel. I will not indeed say, that there may not be some extraordinary occasions, on which it may be their duty to put both safety and reputation at considerable risk. But all such cases must be clearly and strongly marked. Duty, in general, will consist, in submitting to the allotments of God's providence, in all the circumstances of our character and state; and not in disregarding his order, by an indiscreet attempt to render services, beyond the limits which he has prescribed.

Let us now consider, more directly,

II. What Christian women may properly do, as a manifestation of their love to their Saviour, or for the promotion or extension of his religion.

Here we might say, summarily and at once, that women may and ought to do, in the service of their Saviour, whatever is not prohibited in the exceptions and restrictions that have been specified.—That, with these exceptions and restrictions, their moral and religious duties, are, in all respects, the same as those of men: and this is unquestionably the general truth, in regard to this subject, which ought to be remembered and acted on. But questions sometimes arise, as to the particular acts that ought, or that ought not, to be considered as exceptions and restrictions: and it may also be of use a little to explain and inculcate, as well as to enumerate, female duties. We therefore proceed to state,

First, that Christian women should be very sensible that the religion of their Saviour is greatly adorned, and sometimes directly promoted, by an exemplary discharge of all the customary duties of life; and by sustaining all its relations in the most praiseworthy manner. It is creditable, in a very high degree, to evangelical piety, when the world itself is constrained to confess, that its professors are more exact and active in fulfilling all social and relative obligations, and are more amiable and exemplary in their whole deportment, than those who are destitute of religion. Perhaps it belongs to women to prove the truth of this observation, more frequently and strikingly than can be done by men. The apostle Peter says—"If any obey not the word, they may, without the word, be won by the conversation of the wives, when they behold your chaste conversation, coupled with fear." It should, therefore, never be forgotten, that Christian women ought practically to demonstrate, that the influence of their religion has rendered them better wives, better mothers, better daughters, better sisters, better neighbours, and better friends, than they would otherwise be; and more active, punctual, conscientious, and persevering, in the discharge of all the ordinary duties of life—That although they cannot sacrifice their allegiance to their Saviour to any worldly consideration whatsoever, yet only allow them to maintain that allegiance unimpaired, and you shall find them ready to make any other sacrifice to which they may be called.

2. It is one of the peculiar and most important duties of Christian women, to instruct and pray with children, and to endeavour to form their tender minds to piety, intelligence, and virtue. Here is a wide and fertile field for their appropriate labours, in the service and for the honour of their Redeemer. The earliest years of children are usually and necessarily past, almost wholly, under female care; and it is much earlier than is commonly supposed, that their minds and moral feelings take a cast, which is often as lasting as life. Of what inconceivable importance is it then, that this first moulding of the mind and heart should be favourably made; and that mothers should know and remember that if so made, it must commonly be made by them. They have the capacity of mingling, as it were, their own souls with the souls of their children—of breathing into them, with a maternal tenderness and sympathy for which there can be no substitute, those sentiments of filial reverence for their Creator and Redeemer, and of veneration for all that is holy and lovely in the religion of the Gospel, which, under the Divine blessing, may become; and do often in fact become, the germ of early and vital godliness.

By pious mothers, chiefly, must children be taught to use, and to use properly, those little forms of devotion, in which they may lip their petitions and thanksgivings to God; and those hymns and spiritual songs, by which "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings," the Saviour's praise is "perfected;" and to become familiar with those Scripture narratives, with which nearly the whole of sacred story is connected; and by which the fundamental doctrines of revealed truth may be taught and inculcated. By the prayers of pious mothers, must their dear offspring be commended to the providential care and effectual grace of God, with that frequency and fervour, to which the most favourable answer may reasonably be expected; and to which such an answer has often been most remarkably returned.
But I cannot pretend to detail all that pious and intelligent mothers may do—and that pious sisters, who will act a mother's part, may sometimes do—to train the infant mind to heavenly aspirations, and to the love of virtuous action. Point me to an instance of very early and eminent piety, which might not be clearly traced to this source, and you will show me such an instance as my reading and observation hitherto, have never furnished.

Nor does maternal influence, in favour of piety and virtue, terminate with the infant, or early years of children. A mother's influence is of the utmost consequence—very often it is greater than any other influence—through the whole of youth, and even to a more advanced age. The young man, or young woman, on whom the counsels, prayers, and tears of a pious mother have lost their commanding effect, has indeed reached the threshold of hopeless perdition.

I have spoken of early religion, but in reading the history of the church, both by inspired and uninspired penmen, it is worthy of remark, how often the matured and eminent religion of the most distinguished men, and all their extensive usefulness, has been plainly, and sometimes confessedly, the fruit and product of a mother's goodness and care, early begun and long continued. Nor is this wonderful. Roman virtue and ambition, was often traceable to the same powerfully operative cause; and its effects in the production of modern sages and heroes, has sometimes been equally conspicuous. To the nursery, Christian friends—to the nursery, both the Church and the State must look, for their best support; for those who are destined to become their firmest pillars, and their brightest ornaments.

Allow the speaker to say, before leaving this part of his subject, that the leading ideas which have just been thrown out, were those which induced him to take the early and zealous part which he has taken, in recommending the institution of such Societies, as that at whose instance he now addresses you.

The influence of the sex is, and ought to be, great, in ways almost innumerable. But their agency, in first forming the minds and habits of children and youth, is, and must be, nearly exclusive. Till the women of India, therefore, are raised from that state of ignorance and degradation, in which they have been sunk for ages past, the diffusion of Christianity in that country cannot be general and lasting. To produce this effect, we must—at least till the time shall arrive when “a nation shall be born in a day”—look for a generation to arise, which well instructed Christian mothers shall have helped to form, and on which well informed Christian women, shall exert all their natural and inestimable influence.

3. Christian women may show their love to the Saviour, and promote his cause, in a variety of instances of a private nature, at which we can do little more than glance. They may devise, and suggest, and recommend schemes of benevolence and piety, the execution of which must chiefly be left to men.—Having as deep an interest as the other sex, in the proper choice, settlement, and support of a minister of the gospel, and in all the concerns of a Christian church and congregation, it is reasonable, that on these subjects their opinions and wishes should be regarded, and that, with modesty and discretion, they should be made known to those, on whom the active ordering of such concerns must ultimately depend.—There seems to be no reasonable doubt, that it was the office of the deaconesses—for such a description of females there certainly was—in the primitive church, to distribute Christian charities, in a discreet and beneficial manner; to visit, instruct, and console the poor, the sick, and the afflicted; to converse in private with all who might seek their counsel on the concerns of their souls; and especially with persons of their own sex, in cases in which a community of sex might invite to an increased freedom of communication. There is no evidence that these deaconesses were ever formally or officially appointed. Their services seem to have been perfectly voluntary at first, and afterwards, when found to be useful, to have received the encouragement and approbation of the apostles, and other ministers of the church. In all these ways, then, the door of duty is as fully open to the Christian women of this age, as to those in the days of the apostles. And as there are some with us who are willing to enter upon, and to perform to a considerable extent, the services that have been specified, so would to God, that their number were increased a hundredfold.

Here too we must mention those kind and gratifying attentions, and some most substantial services, which Christian women may privately render to Missionaries, and to the Ministers of Christ in general. Holy women “ministered of their substance” to their Saviour, in the days of his flesh. Our text itself, is but the record of one such illustrious instance. And the apostle Paul had been deeply indebted, for personal kindnesses and services, to another Mary. “Greet Mary (said he) who bestowed much labour on us.” The Missionaries of the present day, owe a large part of their comforts to their Christian sisters. And the settled pastors in nearly all our churches, would, I am confident, be ready to testify, that the kind services and attentions which they and their families receive, from the pious women of their several charges, are among the greatest and most grateful alleviations of the anxious cares, and laborious exertions, of their arduous office—endearing their people to them exceedingly, and rendering them doubly willing to spend and be spent in their service. These things are good and acceptable to God; and in these, let women, who love their Saviour, be careful to abound.

4. Christian women, who are engaged in the teaching of children and youth, may express their love to their Saviour, and manifest a commendable zeal in his service, by the instruction of those committed to their care, in the elementary principles of revealed truth; by endeavouring to impress that truth on the hearts and consciences of their tender charge; and by constantly imploring for them, in earnest prayer, the special blessing of God their Heavenly Father. That these are duties proper for female teachers, is as clear as that it is right for them to be teachers at all. For no instruction is so important as that which relates to our eternal well being; and which therefore ought never to be omitted, by those to whom the education of youth is entrusted. The schools of female teachers, moreover, are wholly composed, either of youth of their own sex, or of those of the other who are but little advanced beyond the age of infancy. Blessed be God, the duty here contemplated, has, we have reason to believe, been more frequently and carefully performed of late, than at some former periods. Schools under female instruction, have been opened and closed with prayer; and in them religious knowledge has been acquired, and religious duty inculcated, in the whole course of a useful and ornamental education.

But what shall we say of Sabbath Schools? We say, without reserve, that they appear to be among the happiest devices of Christian ingenuity, in an age of Christian enterprise, for carrying instruction and piety into the families of the poor, the ignorant and the vicious; and of thus extending the blessings of the Gospel to a very large portion of every community, which had before, even in Christian lands, been almost entirely neglected. In the instruction of these schools, pious and benevolent females, without any other earthly reward than that which they find in doing good, have taken a most active and efficient part. In some regular Christian congregations, as well as in other places, they are the only instructors of these schools; and in every place, so far as my knowledge extends, their exertions have kept full pace with those of their fellow labourers, of the other sex; and in certain places, have far outgone them. God has remarkably smiled on those concerned in this blessed work. Numbers of them have been visited with his special grace, and been added to his church on earth—-with numbers of those in whose conversion their labours have been instrumental: and doubtless it will be with peculiar delight, that the teachers and the taught will meet, and rejoice together, in the church triumphant above. Let every Christian woman be, as far as she can, the patroness and promoter of Sabbath Schools.

5. Christian women may manifest their love to their Saviour, to his cause, and to communion with himself, by associations for prayer among themselves; and by keeping up the worship of God in their households, in the absence of a male head of the family. We have not time for extended argument, on the propriety of what is here stated as female duty. We only remark, that it interferes in no respect, with what has been shown to be divinely prohibited. The supposition is, that in female prayer meetings, women only meet with women. In the devotional exercises carried on in such circumstances, there is surely no ground for the charge of arrogant assumption, or of any trespass on female decorum. Why then should any object to this sacred communion of sisterhood, in which devout women mingle their prayers and their praises—their prayers for each other, for their husbands, for their children, and for the church of God? Verily, we believe that these female offerings come up as sweet incense, before the throne of a prayer-hearing God; and that often, in the most signal manner, he returns to the offerers answers of peace.

In the absence of a husband, the wife becomes the head of the family, and ought to maintain family prayer. Let her do it without a form, if she can do it thus, with freedom; but let her not scruple to use a form, rather than to omit the duty.—Spirit of my sainted mother! If I shall be so happy as to join thee in thy celestial abode, shall I not thank thee there, for the family prayers which in my early years, and in the absence of a praying father, I heard from thy hallowed lips! Well may I recommend what I know to be practicable—what I know to be profitable.—The obligation to pray with their households is statedly incumbent on widows, unless a pious son, or other inmate, will assume the service.

Christian women too, especially if they have prayerless husbands, ought frequently to pray with their children, by themselves apart. That husband must be without feeling, as well as without religion, who would not rather rejoice at this, than regard it with displeasure.

6. Christian women may testify their love to their Saviour, and their desire to extend the benefits of his redemption, by taking part, in a variety of ways, in missionary concerns. “Have we not power (says St. Paul) to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord and Cephas.” Here, we believe, is a complete scriptural warrant, for missionaries to be attended by their wives. Some of the apostles—the original and inspired missionaries—were plainly so attended. Nor, when missionaries go forth by families, or companies, is there any transgression of female delicacy or decorum, if unmarried women accompany them. Often they are still under the guardianship of fathers, or brothers, and always under the protection of men of the fairest and purest character. The services of unmarried women may be, as they have often been, of the very highest importance, in missionary operations.

At home, Christian women may, with entire propriety, not only contribute to missionary funds, when founded by others, but form associations of their own, for raising funds, to be appropriated by themselves, to such objects as they may find themselves most disposed to favour. To deny them this privilege, would be to manifest such injustice as requires no words to expose.

Even Female Missionary Societies have been formed in our country, and conducted with unimpeachable propriety and undeniable utility. While so conducted, who will censure them? Who will not rather countenance them, and bid them God speed? By the intervention and aid of ministers of the Gospel, and of pious and discreet laymen, their missionaries may be selected, and missionary services may be assigned and inspected, without any trespass on the rights of men, or the delicacy of women.

7. Bible Societies, Tract Societies, Education Societies, Jews Societies, Charity Schools, Orphan Asylums, Widows’ Asylums, and all institutions of a similar character to these, present to Christian women objects and opportunities for manifesting their love to their Saviour and his cause, which they may seize and improve, with the greatest freedom and advantage. And truly they have, in our day, seized and improved them, with an activity, and to an extent, which are worthy of the highest praise. In several instances, within the knowledge of the speaker, the energy, perseverance, and success of Christian women, in cultivating these fields of pious usefulness, have reproved the more sluggish efforts of men. It was reserved for the age in which we live, and it is among the indications, as we hope, of a better age approaching, that female agency should be called on, to take part in almost every plan and effort for extending the Gospel, or for abating the sufferings, or meliorating the condition of mankind. The effect has been wonderful; and it seems scarcely less wonderful, that such efficient aid was never brought into action before.

But among all the benevolent associations that have been mentioned, and to which it seems as if every one who loves either God or man, must cordially wish success, there is not one, that is, in my view, more worthy of the special attention of Christian women—not one that more appropriately belongs to them—than such societies, as that whose anniversary we this day celebrate. Consider its object. It is to deliver one half of the human species, in the most populous region of the earth, from a state of the deepest and most complete abjection—From a state which exhibits them as mere animals; not worthy to be considered as reasonable and immortal beings; not the fit subjects of intellectual improvement, and of religious happiness and hope; not the companions of men, on the footing of intelligence, or of any approximation to equality; but only as his slaves, and the instruments—but I cannot proceed in the description of their state. It is not of a nature to be described before this audience; nor even to be thought on by one’s self, but at the expense of every species of painful and sickening emotions. I solemnly ask then, if there can be a louder
call for humane, for benevolent, for Christian exertion, from every one in whose bosom the feelings of humanity, benevolence, and Christian compassion, are not “twice dead, plucked up by the roots”—than that which is here made, to lend a helping hand, in lifting up these millions on millions of the human family, from this state of absolute bestial ignorance, degradation and servility, to a state of rationality, intelligence, happiness, dignity, and the hope of heaven? And if this may be asked of every man, who has the soul of a man, what shall be said to women, to Christian women, in behalf of their own sex; whose feelings they must best know, and in whose wretchedness and sorrows they can best sympathize? Do they occupy themselves in other works of kindness and charity? And can they neglect this? Ought not this to be their peculiar, their favourite object? Ought not the women of the whole civilized world, to make common cause, in rescuing more than one half of their common nature, from the condition of brutes? Ought not all Christian women to do this? Yes, they ought—and bear with me, if you cannot think and feel as I do, when I say that I have wondered, and do wonder, that the known condition of women in India, and in other regions where Heathenism and Mahomedanism prevail, has not operated with an electrick force, on the whole enlightened part—and especially on the Christian part—of the sex, to rouse them to the most vigorous action, and to unite them in a concentration of effort, to bring out female nature from this horrible abyss of reproach and infamy; and to raise it to the standing for which it was formed and intended by the Great Author of our being. Heathens and Mahomedans all together, male as well as female, are, we know, in a state of awful ignorance and wretchedness: but there is a speciality in the case of women among them; and it is of this I am now speaking—Women are debased far below their lords and masters, who are themselves debased. They are, of wretched and degraded tyrants, the more wretched and degraded slaves and drudges; or the mere instruments of their base sensuality. In the deep of Heathen and Mahomedan abominations, there is “a lower deep;” and there it is, that the whole female sex with them is found. Thanks to God, that those who are trying to bring them relief, have some encouraging indications of success. A considerable number of the poor natives of India, have surrendered their female children for education, to the thrice blessed missionaries; to the heavenly minded men and women who began, and who are still engaged in this Godlike work, of restoring them to the rights of human nature, and the prospect of eternal felicity. To have made this good beginning, is to have done much. Let but the happy effects of female education be once visible, although it be on a small scale—let but a few well educated females, from among the lower castes in India, go forth into life, and make their superiority to degraded men, as well as to degraded women, to be seen and felt—the certain consequence will be, that the desire of female education will become general and ardent; and the great object in view, will be in a train to be reached, as speedily as the nature of the case will permit. To furnish these specimens of well educated women—and we hope they will be Christian women too—in the various parts of India, will indeed require funds and exertions, a thousand times greater than any of which at present we have the knowledge. But still, the work has been commenced, and is in progress; and we believe it to be God’s work, and that, under his smiles and benediction, it will go on and prosper.
Thus, my respected female friends, I have endeavoured to perform, in the best manner I could, the service to which you have called me on this occasion. It is a time at which, as has been said, women are taking part in almost all that is done, in the holy cause of religion and humanity. For this, you suffer unsparing censure from some of my sex, and from some of your own. By this censure, some among you have been intimidated; and others, I question not, have been made honestly to doubt, in what manner they ought to act. Instead, therefore, of confining myself, in this service, to a single point, or of indulging in general declamation, I have rather chosen to show, as far as my limits and my ability would permit, what Christian women may do, and what they may not do, in expressing their love to the Saviour, and manifesting their desire to promote his religion. The sneer of the infidel we look for, and are prepared to disregard it; but what is Christian duty, is for us a most serious inquiry. In pursuing this inquiry, I have taken the word of God for my guide—In its letter, where I found its letter explicit; and in its spirit, as far as I could ascertain that spirit, in all that I have said.

As to the special purpose for which your association has been formed, I shall add but little, to what you have already heard. It is your high praise, that while too many have been, and still are, negligent of their duty, and as it seems to me, sealed up in apathy and stupor, in regard to the great object of your society—you, like Mary, have done what you could. Go on, Christian sisters. "Be not weary in well doing, for in due time you shall reap, if you faint not." Often think of the number of immortal souls, that are every day and every hour passing into eternity, from the multititudinous population of India—vicious, polluted throughout, and totally ignorant of that Saviour, whose blood alone "cleanseth from all sin." Often think on your special obligations to "God who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." Often think on the distinguishing and merciful allotment of his providence, in giving you birth and education, in a Christian, instead of a heathen or Mahomedan land. And while you perceive, as you cannot fail to perceive, that women have a peculiar interest in the propagation of revealed truth—since the influence of that alone has ever raised them to their proper rank in society, and sustained them in it—feel that you are under peculiar obligations to extend the knowledge of that truth, by all the means in your power; to extend it for the benefit of all, but especially for the benefit, both temporal and eternal, of your own sex. Never was there greater encouragement to proceed with animation and energy in a good work, than that which you have already received. The cheering intelligence has reached you, within the year past, that on the schools of Ceylon, the very schools to which you afford your aid, God has most remarkably poured out his Holy Spirit. Under his sacred influence, those schools have become Bochims and Bethels—places of weeping and houses of prayer; houses in which daughters, as well as sons, have, we trust, been born to God and glory. In this most joyous event, remember that your prayers, and your alms, have had a happy instrumentality. Go on, then, to pray earnestly and to give cheerfully, for God is with you; and before the throne of God and of the Lamb, many of the female children of India, shall yet meet you, and bless you, and rejoice with you, through eternal ages.

Men and brethren, who hear me on this occasion. Be reminded that there is a divine injunction laid on

But he never presented himself before them in the character and style of a beggar. No. But he directed Timothy to "charge them that are rich in this world—to be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." And a greater than Paul, commended the two mites of a poor widow, cast into the treasury of the Lord, beyond all the offerings of the rich.—Therefore, men and brethren, it is in the name of the Lord, unworthy as I am, that I come to you; and I deliver to you his charge, and not my own, that, for his sake, and for your own sakes, you help these women who labour in the gospel. I tell you in his name, that the day is coming that will call you to account before Him, as the Judge of quick and dead, for the manner in which you shall have disposed of all your property.—The day when what you shall now give, if you give it from right motives, will afford you more pleasure, than all that you ever spent in luxury and show, and superfluous personal gratification. Give then from a pure, a noble, a truly benevolent desire to do good. Give thus, I repeat it, for your own sakes, and for the sake of your Saviour's precious cause, and as you will wish to have done, when he shall say to those on his right hand—O! may you and I be there—"Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger and ye took me in: Naked and ye clothed me: I was sick and ye visited me: I was in prison and ye came unto me—Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me—Enter ye into the joy of your Lord."—Amen.
THE VOICE OF THE NEW YEAR.

We think the following extract from the expository works of Archbishop Leighton, may, with peculiar propriety, receive the title we have placed at the head of this article.

1 Peter, iv. 3.

"For the time past of our life may suffice us, to have wrought the will of the Gentiles."

The past may suffice; there is a figure in that,* meaning much more than the words express: It is enough, Oh! too much, to have lived, so long, so miserable a life.

Now, says the Christian, "Oh! corrupt lusts and deluding world! look for no more, I have served you too long. The rest, whatsoever it is, must be to my Lord; to live to him by whom I live; and ashamed and grieved am I, I was so long in beginning. So much past,—it may be the most of my short race past,—before I took notice of God, or looked towards him. Oh! how have I lost, and worse than lost, all my by-past days? Now, had I the advantages and abilities of many more, and were I to live many ages, all should be to live to my God and honour him. And what strength I have, and what time I shall have, through his grace, shall be wholly his." And when any Christian hath thus resolved, his intended life being so imperfect, and the time so short, the poorness of the offer would break his heart, were there not an eternity before him, wherein he shall live to his God, and in him, without blemish and without end.

Spiritual things being once discerned by spiritual light, the whole soul is carried after them; and the ways of holiness are never truly sweet till they be thoroughly embraced, with a full renunciation of all that is contrary to them.

All his former ways of wandering from God are very hateful to a Christian, who is indeed returned and brought home; and those most of all hateful, wherein he hath most wandered and most delighted. A sight of Christ gains the heart, makes it break from all entanglements of its own lusts, and of the profane world about it. And these are the two things the apostle here aims at, exhorting Christians to the study of newness of life, and showing the necessity of it. He intimates that they cannot be Christians without it; he opposes their new estate and engagement, to the old customs of their former condition, and to the continuing custom and conceit of the ungodly world; that against both they may maintain that rank and dignity to which now they are called, and, in a holy disdain of both, walk as the redeemed of the Lord. Their own former custom he speaks to, ver. ii. iii. and to the custom and opinion of the world, ver. iv. and both these will set strong upon a man, especially while he is yet weak, and newly entered into that new estate.

1. His old acquaintance, his wonted lusts, will not fail to besit themselves, to accost him in their most obliging familiar way, and represent their long continued friendship. But the Christian, following the principles of his new being, will not entertain any long discourse with them, but cut them short; tell them that the change he hath made he avows, and finds it so happy, that these former delights may put off hopes of regaining him. No, though they dress themselves in their best array, and put on all their ornaments, and say, in the known word of a certain courtesan, I am the same I was, the Christian will answer, as she was answered, but I am not the same I was. And not only thus will he turn off the plea of former acquaintance that sin makes, but turn it back upon it, as, in his present thoughts, making much against it. "The longer I was so deluded, the more reason now that I be wiser; the more time so mispent, the more pressing necessity of redeeming it. Oh! I have too long lived in that vile slavery. All was but husks I fed on; I was laying out my money for that which was no bread, and my labour for that which satisfied not, Isa. iv. ii. Now I am on the pursuit of a good that I am sure will satisfy, will fill the largest desires of my soul; and shall I be sparing and slack, or shall any thing call me off from it? Let it not be, if that took so much pains, early and late, to serve and sacrifice to so base a god; shall I not now live more to my new Lord, the living God, and sacrifice my time and strength, and my whole self, to him?"

And this is still the regret of the sensible Christian, that he cannot attain to that unwearied diligence, and that strong bent of affection, in seeking communion with God, and living to him, that sometimes he had for the service of sin; he wonders that it should be thus with him, not to equal that which it were so reasonable that he should so far exceed.

It is, beyond expression, a thing to be lamented, that so small a number of men regard God, the author of their being, that so few live to him in whom they live; returning that being and life they have, and all their enjoyments, as is due, to him from whom they all flow. And then,
how pitiful it is, that the small number that is thus minded, minds it so remissly and coldly, and is so far outstripped by the children of this world, that they follow painted follies and lies with more eagerness and industry, than the children of wisdom do that certain and solid blessedness that they seek after. * Strange! that men should do so much viole to one another, and to themselves in body and mind, for trifles and chaff! and that there is so little to be found of that allowed and commanded violence, for a kingdom, and such a kingdom that cannot be moved, Heb. xii. 28; a word too high for all the monarchies under the sun.

And, should not our diligence and violence in this so worthy a design be so much the greater, the later we begin to pursue it? They tell it of Caesar, that when he passed into Spain, meeting there with his elephant, he cried unto him, thou hast never been so much more early, having performed so many conquests in those years, wherein he thought he himself had done nothing, and was but yet beginning. Truly it will be a sad thought, to a really renewed mind, to look back on the flower of youth and strength as lost in vanity; if not in gross profaneness, yet in self-serving and self-pleasing, and in ignorance and neglect of God. And perceiving their few years so far spent ere they set out, they will account days precious, and make the more haste, and desire, with holy David, enlarged hearts to run the way of God's commandments, Psal. cxix. 32. They will study to live in a little time; and, having lived all the past time to no purpose, will be sensible they have none now to spare upon the lusts and ways of the flesh, and vain societies and visits: Yea, they will be redeeming all they can even from their necessary affairs, for that which is more necessary than all other necessities, that one thing needful, to learn the will of our God, and live to it; this is our business, our high calling, the main and most excellent of all our employments.

Not that we are to cast off our particular callings, or omit due diligence in them; for that will prove a snare, and involve a person in things more opposite to godliness. But certainly this living to God requires, 1. A fit measuring of thy own ability for affairs, and, as far as thou canst choose, fitting thy load to thy shoulders, not surcharging thyself with it. An excessive burden of businesses, either by the greatness or multitude of them, will not fail to entangle thee, and depress thy mind; and will hold it so down, that thou shalt not find it possible to walk upright and look upwards, with that freedom and frequency that becomes heirs of heaven.

2. The measure of thy affairs being adapted, look to thy affection in them, that it be regulated too. Thy heart may be engaged in thy little business as much, if thou watch it not, as in many and great affairs. A man may drown in a little brook or pool, as well as in a great river, if he be down and plunge himself into it, and put his head under water. Some care thou must have, that thou mayest not care; these things are thorns indeed; thou must make a hedge of them, to keep out those temptations that accompany sloth, and extreme want there waits on it: But let them be the hedge; suffer them not to grow within the garden: Thou shalt not set thy heart on them, nor set them in thy heart. That place is due to another, is made to be the garden of thy beloved Lord; made for the best plants and flowers; and there they ought to grow, the love of God, and faith, and meekness, and the other fragrant graces of the Spirit. And know that this is no common nor easy matter, to keep the heart disengaged in the midst of affairs, that still it be reserved for Him whose right it is.

3. Not only labour to keep thy mind spiritual in itself, but by it put a spiritual stamp even upon thy temporal employments; and so thou shalt live to God, not only without prejudice of thy calling, but even in it, and shalt converse with him in thy shop, or in the field, or in thy journey, doing all in obedience to him, and offering all, and thyself withal, as a sacrifice to him: Thou still with him, and he still with thee, in all. This is to live to the will of God indeed, to follow his direction, and intend his glory in all. Thus the wife, in the very oversight of her house, and the husband, in his affairs abroad, may be living to God, raising their low employments to a high quality this way. "Lord, even this mean work I do for thee, complying with thy will, who hast put me in this station, and given me this task; thy will be done. Lord, I offer up even this work to thee, accept of me, and of my desire to obey thee in all." And as in their work, so in their refreshments and rest, such Christians pursue all for him, whether they eat or drink, doing all for this reason, because it is his will; and for this end, that he may have glory, bending all their use of all their strength, and all his mercies, that way; setting this mark on all their designs and ways, this for the glory of my God, and this further for his glory, 1 Cor. x. 31, so from one thing to another throughout their whole life. This is the art of keeping the heart spiritual in all affairs, yea, of spiritualizing the affairs themselves in their use, that in themselves are earthly. This is the elixir that turns lower metal into gold, the mean actions of this life, in a Christian’s hands, into obedience and holy offerings unto God.

* Plus illi ad vanitatem, quam nos ad veritatem.

And, were we acquainted with the way of intermixing holy thoughts, ejaculatory eyeings of God, in our ordinary ways, it would keep the heart in a sweet temper all the day long, and have an excellent influence into all our ordinary actions and holy performances, at those times when we apply ourselves solemnly to them. Our hearts would be near them not so far off to seek and call in, as usually they are, through the neglect of this. This were to walk with God indeed; to go all the day long as in our Father’s hand; whereas, without this, our praying morning and evening looks but as a formal visit, not delighting in that constant converse which yet is our happiness and honour, and makes all estates sweet. This would refresh us in the hardest labour; as they that carry the spices from Arabia are refreshed with the smell of them in their journey; and some observe, that it keeps their strength, and frees them from fainting.

If you would then live to God indeed, be not satisfied without the constant regard of him; and whosoever hath attained most of it, study it yet more to see the Lord always before you, as David professeth, Psal. xvi. 8, and then shall you have that comfort that he adds, He shall be still at your right hand, that you shall not be moved.

And you that are yet to begin to do this, think what his patience is in that; after you have neglected so many calls, you may yet begin to seek him, and live to him; and then, consider, if you still despise all this goodness, how soon it may be otherwise; you may be past the reach of this call, and may not begin, but cut off forever from the hopes of it. Oh, how sad an estate! and the more, by the remembrance of these slighted offers and invitations! Will you then yet return, you that would share in Christ? Let go these luts to which you have hitherto lived, and embrace him, and in him there is spirit and life for you. He shall enable you to live this heavenly life to the will of God, his God and your God, and his Father and your Father, John xx. 17. Oh! delay no longer this happy change; how soon may that puff of breath that is in thy nostrils, who hearest this, be extinguished! and art thou willing to die in thy sins, rather than that they die before thee? Thinkest thou it a pain to live to the will of God? Sure it will be more pain to lie under his eternal wrath. Oh! thou knowest not how sweet they find it that have tried it! Or thinkest thou, I will afterwards? Who can make thee sure either of that afterwards, or of that will, if but afterwards? Why not now present, without further debate? Hast thou not served sin long enough? may not the time past in that service suffice, yea, is it not too much? Wouldst thou only live unto God as little time as may be, and think the dregs of thy life good enough for him? What ingratitude and gross folly is this! Yes, though thou wert sure of coming unto him, and being accepted; yet, if thou knowest him in any measure, thou wouldest not think it a privilege to defer it, but willingly choose to be free from the world and thy lusts, to be immediately his, and wouldst, with David, make haste, and not delay to keep his righteous judgments: all the time thou livest without him, what a filthy wretched life is it, if that can be called life that is without him? To live to sin, to live still in a danger, to lay thyself alive to the will of God, is to walk in liberty and light; to walk by light unto light, by the beginnings of it to the fullness of it, that is in his presence.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

CHRIST’S REPROOF AND CALL TO HIS DISCIPLES.

“Sleep on now and take your rest!—Behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners!—Rise! let us be going: behold he is at hand that doth betray me!”

Hark! hark! from heav’n the Saviour’s voice
To slumbering saints address’d—
Rise! rise! nor make the ignoble choice,
Whilst sin abounds, to rest.

VOL. IV.—Ch. Adv. C
LETTERS FROM A MOTHER TO A DAUGHTER, ON THE SUBJECT OF EARLY EDUCATION.

(Continued from vol. iii. p. 547.)

LETTER III.

August 20, 1821.

You write, my dear Mary, that your little Charles attends the village school. His time has now become valuable, and must be regulated by system. A child of common capacity should be taught his letters ere he is four years old; and should be able to read intelligently at five. This should be an invariable rule, in every family where there are children to be educated. We are deplorably mistaken, if we suppose the time of children at this age of no value. How many parents, under this impression, leave their children untaught, till the age of seven or eight years? Then, when they might be employed to good advantage in other studies, they must acquire the very elements of reading: and what is perhaps worse than all, habits of vice and of idleness are formed, which may never be laid aside.

Time is never more precious than at this early age—Experience has taught me to assert, that a child can never be taught to read as easily at any other age. The vacant soil is more easily cultivated, than that which is overgrown with thorns and thistles. The active mind will not remain vacant. Therefore, dear Mary, let not that of your Charles be now filled with what must be eradicated, or with what will interfere with the rapid growth of useful knowledge. Let his school hours be punctually observed; and let not a fragment of time be lost. Even at this early age he cannot require more time for exercise and recreation than the intermissions of his school will afford; and these hours of recreation will be far more enjoyed, if the rest of his time is busily employed, than if all were at his own disposal. Observe how dull, and dissatisfied a child becomes before night, who has devoted his whole day to amusement. Not so,

"The playful children just let loose from school."

Mark the rapture with which your boy hastens to receive your embrace; and the glee with which he pursues his pleasures. For they return anew to him; and he is not satiated with unboought delights.

Let all his recreations and amusements be under your own inspection. Let him never be in company with, you know not whom; or absent, you know not where. But no longer confine him to your own room; or exclusively to your own society; for he is no longer "Ma's babe." He resigns this place and privilege to his successor; and as an equivalent, he must have other pleasures. To prevent his becoming dull and effeminate, choose him two or three companions, with whom he may freely associate; with whom he may roll the hoop, fly the kite, or toss the ball. Let wisdom direct you in the choice of his associates; know whether they have been educated by a faithful mother—whether, in all probability, they will be suitable for friends in the years of manhood. And beware now, that he contract no intimacies which may not with advantage be continued, down to the last days of his life. Above all, be assured that they are religiously educated; and that they will probably remain forever ignorant of those way-worn paths of vice, which lead down to the chambers of death; and whither, if vicious, they might also conduct your Charles!

When you have found proper associates, let them frequently interchange visits, or walk, or play together. But never let yours, without liberty from you, go even into the streets. Beware that they mix not with the clubs of children, ever to be found in the highways of towns and villages, and generally composed of the idle and ungodly, of every condition—rich and poor, black and white. Did you never while passing these groups, hear their boisterous, vulgar and profane conversation? Oh, let not a child of yours, through your carelessness, become one of these——

You should learn to become familiar with the noise, and not to fret at the disorder, which the little ones may occasionally create around your dwelling. You can restore order there, much easier than you can correct the vitiated taste and minds of your children, when they are under the influence of bad company. Neither must you make your sprightly boy moxy by the fireside, nor seclude him from society; if you do, he will be likely to imbibe contracted notions, and habits of locality, which may render him peculiar in his mode of thinking; as well as awkward in his whole deportment. Perhaps you will ask, if all your time and attention must be engrossed by your children? I would also ask, what object is of equal importance? Form no plans, engage in no business, which may be inconsistent with the duties you owe to them. Still you may connect other objects of pursuit with these; and you must, if you would discharge your duties to all around you. Let your children be nearest to you; but extend your cares still farther; like the circles widening on the smooth lake, after the fallen sinking stone. That mind is contracted indeed, which cannot extend its benevolence, beyond its own self and children.—Every child of Adam has a claim on your benevolence, but not a claim which can interfere with the duty you owe to the immortals placed under your own immediate charge. The stranger has a claim on your hospitality.—But oh! let no unemployed votaries of fashion, be in the habit of spending their idle hours at your house, to interfere with your proper business. Your time is too precious to be squandered away thus, and your charge too important to be neglected. If such persons must be entertained, let them have recourse to those whose taste and views are similar to their own. The claims which these idlers have, are on your pity, your reproofs, and your prayers; not on your time and your countenance—rob not your husband and your children thus. Incivility towards any is doubtless unjustifiable—but candour and "godly sincerity" will save both your time and your feelings; and certainly render you more respected. Never give an insincere invitation, or an insincere welcome. This is in itself sinful, and carries with it its own punishment—How unwise is she,

"Who invites her dear five hundred friends,
"Contems them all, and hates them coming."

I have much to say on this subject: perhaps it may be the theme of another letter. In the mean time, practise much on the lesson of "simplicity, and godly sincerity," of which an apostle has spoken. And let not your own beloved friends have any just reason to suspect your sincerity towards them, because they see you lavish the same attentions, and same professions of friendship, on every one.

There is another class of intruders, which it is equally wrong to countenance. These are the idle and gossiping of the poor, who would engross a seat at your kitchen fire, if not at your dining room hearth. These often introduce themselves as objects of charity; and will sit with gazing eyes and folded hands, wasting those hours, which you can by no means afford to lose. They often will too, if you allow them, slander those who are better than themselves: and would persuade you, that none of the poor around you are really objects of charity. You ought to reprove such, and warn them of their wickedness, and their danger, as enemies to God, while they injure both their neighbours and themselves—The greatest benevolence you can exercise toward them, is to teach them to improve well all their time—to be industrious and economical in their own families. Give them work, if you please, to employ them at home, and pay them for it: but encourage not their idleness by giving them food and raiment, while they might earn these by their honest industry—In giving out work to them, or in their returning it, afford them no excuse for sitting, and wasting their hours in idleness, or in tattling.

Both the above classes will probably labour hard to ingratiate themselves by flattery; but I cannot think you need warning of the danger of being thus duped. They may not dare directly to flatter yourself; but if they understand human nature, as they often do, they know that parents are easily gained through their children; and they may tell you that yours are superior, in beauty and intellect, to any others—You indeed may not be fool enough to believe this, but your children, it cannot be expected, will have discernment to discover the artifice. And the unhappy influence which this may have on their minds, if not counteracted, may be exceedingly great, by exciting their vanity, and weakening their motives for attaining knowledge—Rather teach yours, to esteem others better than themselves. Discover to them how ignorant they are of many things which they might know, and point them to those whose attainments exceed theirs, as the mark at which they ought to aim.

Some have supposed that the evil of esteeming one's self too highly, is not so great as that of setting too low an estimate on one's abilities; for there are enough, it is said, in the world to pull down the proud, and few to raise the humble. This however is not altogether correct as to the fact; and besides, the sentiment is inconsistent with the word of God. We may make a low estimate of ourselves, and yet be confident, that by exertion and perseverance we may make great attainments.

I know that diffidence is very often the occasion of most painful sensations; but it is also attended with much good: and it always goes far, in recommending the possessor to the wise and candid, and in atoning for many casual mistakes. Are we not disposed to pay more attention to such, than to the bold and assuming? Let not your dear Charles and Ellen become those, whom their friends, for their good, will seek to humble by frequent neglect and reproof, and perhaps by severe mortification. Leave them not thus, to learn lessons of modesty and humility, which their own mother ought more kindly to have taught them. Above all, labour earnestly to teach them Christian humility; which differs widely from pusillanimity, and wider still from slovenliness in manners and appearance. It is a grace which must have its seat in the heart; and will be best cultivated, by instilling into their minds the great and fundamental truths of Christianity. Inspire them with a sense of the holy character of God; and of their own lost and sinful condition, by nature and by practice. Teach them the absolute necessity of the Holy Spirit, to renew and sanctify them—of the mediation and atonement of the Son of God—in short, of the whole plan of redemption. We are not as wise or as faithful in teaching our children these things, as we should be. We do not sufficiently bring our ideas on these subjects, down to their apprehension; nor illustrate them, as might be done, by objects familiar to their minds. We often tell them they must be good; but do not discover to them the insufficiency of their own works to merit any favour from God; nor do we always, in language which they understand, teach them repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

(To be continued.)

TRAVELS IN EUROPE FOR HEALTH IN 1820. BY AN AMERICAN CLERGYMAN, OF THE SYNOD OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Continued from vol. iii. p. 552.)

Montpelier, May 25, 1820.

My dear Friend,—My last from this place, gave you the result of my superficial observations, during the few days I acted the part of a looker on, in the great city of Marseilles. I took passage in the Diligence, the 25th of last month, for this place; the pleasantness of whose situation, unitedly with the supposed salubrity of the atmosphere, has made it, for ages, the resort of invalids, in pursuit of health. My travel here, which occupied a day and a half, including a night, produced little that is worth reciting. The country through which I passed, gives evidence of dense population, by its thickly planted houses, with large villages, at short distances. But its husbandry appeared to me to be, generally speaking, far from good. I saw much land that gave signs of great exhaustion; while the buildings and improvements, evidently indicated a poor and unimproving people.

The principal place through which I passed was Nimes: and it indeed is a great place, beautifully situated, near the foot of a range of high rocky hills, in a fine and fertile plain. Its vicinity shows some very luxuriant vegetation. The stage stopped here early in the afternoon, and remained over night, which gave me some opportunity of looking at the place. Had I possessed the curiosity of health, instead of the languor and debility of disease, I should certainly have tarried a week; as there is much at Nismes, well worth the traveller’s attention. There still exists here an amphitheatre, built by the ancient Romans, when they possessed the country, which is in surprising preservation. These kind of buildings, you know, were erected without cover, for the accommodation of the publick sports. This one at Nismes, is circular, built of massy stone, and covers a space of some acres—speaking by guess. You may form a correct idea of it, by conceiving of a huge bowl, whose bottom encloses a wide space, in which the shows and sports were exhibited; and whose sides within are lined with circular seats, rising one above the other, to the height of sixty or seventy feet. In two places, the depredations of time have made rents in its sides, from the top to the bottom. It is surrounded with an iron paling; and is no doubt a relic of antiquity of sufficient value, from the resort of strangers which it helps to attract to the city, to merit the expense of such a measure for its preservation. I viewed it with deep interest; and who could have done otherwise?—having his thoughts carried back to the remote ages, when this stupendous fabric was erected, for the pastime of the mighty masters of the world. And in what pastimes did they delight! how cruel! how savage! How immense the benefits of the gospel!—if only in this respect, that it has rescued Christendom from a taste for the murderous sports of fighting gladiators, and other demoralizing shows, such as were here exhibited.

At no great distance from the amphitheatre, stands a temple of “The great goddess Diana”—probably not less ancient, and as a relic of heathenism, not less interesting: In size it resembles a small church, one story high. It is built altogether of marble, which from age has assumed a very sombre hue. It is without windows, or any avenue that I could discover, to admit the light. Having little time on hand, and in truth, feeling then a more than ordinary depression of spirits, which is always a sufficient damper to curiosity, I contented myself with viewing its exterior, without seeking admission within.

I have learned from the Protestant minister of this place, that Nismes contains a large Protestant population. There are three or four congregations, who have five pastors, settled over them. None of them however are considered entirely evangelical in their doctrines. One of them, is counted a man of some distinction, in point of talents. He conducts a monthly magazine, devoted to moral and literary subjects, with some mixture of religion.

I left Nismes early in the morning, and arrived at Montpelier by noon of the same day. Here I have concluded to make some stay, and try the benefit of this climate. I find constant travelling in the stage is too expensive, and too fatiguing. My first sally from the hotel, where the stage stopped, was to the house of Mons. Lasignot, the Protestant minister, to whom I had a letter of introduction. I found him sick in bed, not however very ill. He received me with much kindness, and I have since found in him a friend of much value. I have taken private lodgings, and ride on horseback almost daily. I have now been here four weeks, during which I have seen much of the place, with its environs, and shall think my time not entirely lost, if, in communicating a little of what I have seen and heard, I am able to minister something to the gratification of your curiosity.

I would like, in the first place, to give you some idea of the city of Montpelier; as it appears to me a very odd place, quite different from every town I have yet seen in France, or any where else. As its name indicates, it occupies a hill of considerable height; or rather it is built on three sides of a hill, which rises in the midst of a plain, like a sugar-loaf—The very top of the hill, and one side of it, being the site of a publick square, and of a reservoir, which supplies the town with an abundance of fresh water. The ancient city is surrounded with a high and strong wall; but a considerable town has grown up on the outside of this wall. The streets, with the exception of two or three, are very narrow and very crooked; paved with round stones, without any foot-ways. There are no yards, either front or back of the houses. Every thing looks old and gloomy, and the style of building, though substantial, is very plain, and in many of the houses very ugly. The interior of the houses, of the middle class, differs in arrangement from anything I have seen. You enter a passage on the ground floor, at the extremity of which you find a spiral staircase, usually of stone, with narrow steps, and without light, except what it receives at the bottom. By this you mount up, going round and round, as on the threads of a screw, and hold a rope in your hand, which hangs down loose from the top; and which is really necessary, to enable you to preserve your balance, as you ascend and descend. At each story, you find doors opening into the chambers, on all sides. It would seem as if the inhabitants, in constructing their houses, wanted nothing so much as room. Rows of houses are crowded on one another, so as hardly to allow a street between them, of sufficient width for a comfortable passage; and chambers are packed on chambers, without space for a comfortable stair-case to pass from one to another: as if the Almighty Artificer of the great globe of the earth, had constructed it of too limited dimensions, to allow its multiplied inhabitants to dwell together in comfort.

But alas! it is man, himself, who, by his mischievous propensities, has marred his own enjoyment. His cities must be surrounded with walls, for safety from the attacks of his fellow man; and of course, the space within the protecting bulwark, must be husbanded, with an economy that puts comfort at defiance. Without the walls of this city there are considerable suburbs. A very handsome street, wide and planted with trees, passes nearly round the whole of Montpelier.

The publick walk, or square, that occupies the crown of the hill, on the three sides of which the city stands, is by far the greatest curiosity of the kind I have ever seen—the construction of which might have cost an expenditure, little short of what would be sufficient to build a small town. The top of the hill is reduced to a perfect level, making a surface of eight or ten acres, laid out in walks, and planted with trees. On the edge next the valley, farthest from the city, stands a stone temple, which covers a reservoir of water, for the supply of the city. This reservoir is replenished continually from an aqueduct of stone, which is carried high up in the air, over the valley, a distance of more than a quarter of a mile—commencing from the side of an opposite hill. Ranges of stone pillars, which, at the deepest place of the valley, cannot be less than from sixty to an hundred feet high, support this immense aqueduct.
its course to the reservoir, where it makes its discharge. Standing on the verge of the hill top, and looking down, you see another publick walk, a great depth below you, about midway between the top and bottom of the hill. The sides of the hill have been dug down perpendicular, and a stone wall built up, to support the earth; and by levelling the earth so dug down, a terrace walk, more than twenty rods wide, perfectly level and planted with trees, has been made to surround the end of the hill, next to the valley; and it reaches along its sides, until it connects with the street outside of the walls of the city. The tops of the trees in this lower walk, are all nicely trimmed to one height; and this height corresponds with the level of the hill top, so that the spectator above, suffers no interruption of his view from the forest below; but looks over the level surface of the tree tops, to the beautiful prospects, which on every hand stretch as far as his eye can carry its vision, from the elevated station which he occupies. A most beautiful prospect indeed, is here to be enjoyed. On a clear day, the spectator who stands on the Peyron, (so they call the promenade on the hill top of Montpelier,) can look over the whole breadth of France; just discerning in the blue horizon on the north, the range of the Alps which separates France from Italy; and the nearly equidistant range of the Pyrenees, which divide it from Spain, on the south. On the east, he has a full view of the Mediterranean, a few miles distant; over which he can usually discern a few scattered sails, appearing like white specks, here and there, on the blue surface of the waters. It is my uniform practice, to spend an hour before breakfast on this delightful spot, where the sublime elevation, the never cloying beauty of the prospect, united with the general serenity and balminess of the morning air in the month of May, seem to promise the happiest effects on the animal system; at least so far as the animal system can be operated upon by such causes. Being also usually alone, at so early an hour, the best opportunity is enjoyed for meditation and morning devotion—were my dull spirit only sufficiently excited, to seek its Maker and Redeemer, in this paradise of man’s making, where art and taste have done so much. Here it has occurred to me, what a powerful auxiliary the wandering invalid might derive, towards the restoration of his health, from the full exercise of that faith which is “the evidence of things not seen, and the substance of things hoped for.” The peace, the hope, the joy, thence resulting, and mingling with highly agreeable emotions—the elevation of animal spirits, produced by exhibitions, such as those referred to above—would certainly, at least double their effect, in giving health to the emaciated body. I do verily believe, if I had more faith, and could derive more refreshment from the exercises of devotion, that I should stand a much fairer chance for restoration—as I should certainly find an increased pleasure, in all those objects in which rational pleasure is found.

[The remainder of this interesting letter, we are obliged to defer till our next number.]

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

NO. IV.

TRANSLANTICK RECOLLECTIONS.

"Forsan et haec olim minime juvat."

It was in the close of autumn, when in my journeying through Scotland I arrived at its famed and interesting capital. Edinburgh has been so often described, and is so very familiar to the "mind’s eye" of most of your readers, that I shall save any minute delineation of it, and content myself with simply recording a few of my recollections of it, which are at present most vivid. Every one who has ever visited Edinburgh, will distinctly recollect the noble eminence overhanging the old city, called, "Arthur's Seat;" because from its summit, there is not only a view of the old and new towns, but of Leith, together with its picturesque harbour. Just beneath this celebrated eminence, as we descend to the palace of Holyrood House, are the ruins of a Catholic chapel, which was dilapidated by the followers of John Knox; and its consecrated Well affords to this day a refreshing draught to the weary traveller—at least it did so to me. On my way to the city, I visited the celebrated habitation of the ancient sovereigns of Scotland, rendered peculiarly romantic, by being the residence of the lovely but unfortunate Mary. After passing through a spacious court-yard, and along the gallery of paintings, we reached the council chamber; and passing through this, we were ushered into the chamber of Queen Mary, which is still kept in the identical manner in which she left it—not only her bed decorated with the same curtains and covered with the same clothes which she used, but her dressing-box, and work-box, and some of her work, lying on the tables.

Immediately beyond this chamber is the little supper-room, in which Rizzio was discovered with the queen, when her jealous and infuriated husband dragged him out, and passing with him through her chamber, slew him at the remotest part of the council hall. Many are the recollections associated with those rooms and that hall, where Scotland's kings and nobles lived in princely pomp. Yet one anecdote of John Knox, concerning a meeting which he had with Mary in this room, riveted my feelings more closely to it, and brings it more clearly to my memory this day, than all the tales of kingly pageantry which I heard. The pure, heart-searching doctrines, which were preached by the Scotch apostle, were then, as they are now, offensive to the carnal heart; and hence he was commanded by the voluptuous court of Mary to desist. Knox, who knew no master, and obeyed no mandate, that was in opposition to his God and his Bible, paid no more attention to the command of the palace, than "Arthur's Seat" did, to the unhallowed noise of their licentious revelry, which was borne to it on every midnight breeze. Hearing immediately from the enemies of the cross, who were then, as I fear they are at present, the favourites and friends of the palace, that her orders were disobeyed; the haughty Mary summoned the Scottish reformer into her presence. When Knox arrived, he was ushered into this very room; in which were also the queen and her attendant lords. On being questioned concerning his contumacy, he answered plainly, that he preached nothing but the truth, and that he dared not preach less. "But (answered one of the lords,) our commands must be obeyed, on pain of death—silence or the gallows, is the alternative." The spirit of Knox was roused by the dastardly insinuation, that any human punishment could make him desert the banner of his Saviour—and with that fearful, indescribable courage, which disdains the pomp of language or of action, he firmly replied—"My lords, you are mistaken if you think you can intimidate me to do by threats, what conscience and my God tell me I never shall do: for be it known unto you, that it is a matter of no importance to me, when I have finished my work, whether my bones shall bleach in the winds of heaven, or rot in the bosom of the earth." Knox having retired, one of the lords said to the queen, "We may let him alone, for we cannot punish that man." Well therefore might it be said by a nobleman, at the grave of John Knox, "here lies one who never feared the face of man." Alas! poor unfortunate Mary, had she been counselled by Knox, her end had not been so disastrous; but the fear of God was not before her eyes; she walked in the ways of her own heart; and they terminated just as the sacred oracle says they ever shall do, "in shame and contempt."

"—Dearly pays the soul
For lodging ill; too dearly rents her,
clay—"

Could I infuse into my writing some part of those feelings which pervaded me, as I walked through the grass-market of Edinburgh, from which so many of the Scottish martyrs ascended to their thrones in glory, I would give an interest to these lines which seldom belongs to a narration of facts. In meditating, as I past lingeringly through this market, on the blood of the saints by which it was once drenched, and the blaze of the martyrs by which it was illuminated, I felt as if in the company of those mentioned in the Revelation, who were "arrayed in white robes," who "came out of great tribulation," having "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb"—I felt somewhat, like Jacob when he said, "How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

From this let us pass to the little resting-place of the philosopher Hume; but alas! his was "philosophy falsely so called!" It is true the contrast is great, to go from the place from whence martyrs took their flight to glory, to the tomb of the infidel; but I love strong and striking contrasts, especially when looking back upon the despised and the caressed of their several days; and when, viewing them at this distance, through a medium obscured neither by prejudice or passion, we can see the distinguished pre-eminence which the men of God have gained, over the polished, and captivating, and philosophic infidel: For I do verily believe there is not a man of reflection, at present, whether he be vicious or virtuous, who would not rather say with Balaam "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his," than to enjoy all the learning and the bad pre-eminence of a Hume, and then go into eternity, unjustified and unsanctified—for "Wo unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him." The tomb of the materialist is a plain circular marble mausoleum, inscribed simply, but I think elegantly, with the words, David Hume. I was told that a little before my visit to Edinburgh, one of the students wrote upon it the following impromptu—

"Beneath this circular idea,
Vulgarily called tomb,
Impressions and ideas rest
Which constituted Hume."

On visiting the supreme courts, I was astonished to see, in the square of the old parliament-house, an equestrian statue of Charles the Second—as if he deserved a statue from the Scotch, or that it was very consistent for them to give it. Taking it all in all, it might be said with truth—"Nihil tam dispar sibi."

The lawyers make a singular appearance; all dressed in monstrous wigs, and large black gowns; and had it not been that I saw Jeffries, and Scott, and Cranston, and others like them, in similar habiliments—men whose talents and fame would give grace, to any monstrous, or deforming, or gothic vesture—I should undoubtedly have come away with the impression, that those civilized civilians, were not a little barbarous in their costume. In one of those courts, I beheld at the same time, perhaps the brightest assemblage of talents that any space of the same dimensions, in the world, could display.
On the bench, sat some of the most celebrated law lords which Scotland could produce: immediately beneath them sat Sir Walter Scott, and the venerable author of the "Man of Feeling"—reminding me of the last leaf of autumn, or rather of a leaf which had withstood the frosts and the storms of winter, and was surrounded by the foliage of another spring. Among the gentlemen of the bar, was the distinguished editor of the Edinburgh Review; together with a crowd of others, renowned for their legal research, their black-letter profundity, or their forensic eloquence.

The college, though I mention it last, was the first object of my curiosity. It is a noble building. Though unfinished, it promises to be worthy of the metropolis of such a learned and philosophick people. It was here that I first saw and heard, the celebrated successor of the celebrated Dugald Stewart. And truly Dr. Brown was every thing, and more than every thing, that even my awakened curiosity expected to find him. In appearance, a gentleman—in manner, an orator. With the profundity of the author of "Cause and Effect," and the imagination of the author of the "Paradise of Coquettes," he made an impression upon my mind, in the first lecture which I heard him deliver, far beyond any thing which my exorbitant expectations required. He has since paid the debt of nature, and I am told is succeeded by Mr. Wilson, the author of the "Isle of Palms" and the "Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life," &c.

There was another professor there, at that time, who stood very high as a philosopher, while he was strongly suspected of being an infidel. Poor man, with all his talents and acquirements, he was the object of my pity; for he was an old white-headed man, just trembling on the brink of the grave, who had once been a minister of the everlasting gospel; but who despised himself so much on account of it, and detested the vocation so much, that it was reported he could not bear, with any patience, to hear of it. Oh! if such be the purchase of metaphysical philosophy, who would wish to buy it at its price! An immortal soul in exchange for philosophy, is too much! When I looked upon this great natural philosopher, surrounded by his numerous class, into whose minds he was pouring the bright flood of learning, I thought, in the midst of my admiration, of what the poet says—

"As wise as Socrates, might justly stand The definition of a modern fool."

On the first Sabbath morning of my residence in Edinburgh, I went to hear the lecture of the author of the "Life of Knox"—as he was much more celebrated for his peculiar tact of lecturing, than for his style of preaching. It is a practice in the Presbyterian churches of Scotland, to lecture on the Sabbath morning, and to preach in the afternoon. As Dr. M'Crie had become so justly and universally celebrated, and as Edinburgh is a church going place, I was desirous to reach the church early, lest I should not find room: but in this I was greatly deceived, as his little church was but moderately filled. This was not occasioned either by his deficiency of piety or talents, or by a lack of labour; but solely, I presume, from the unpopularity of that branch of Presbyterianism to which he adhered—He belonged to the sect then known by the name Anti-burgher. Though he was not an orator, either in language or in manner, yet there was a narrow and fatness in what he said, combined with a naivete, which made him, to me at least, a most interesting instructor. I was told by a friend of his, that immediately after the publication of the Life of Knox, the University conferred on him the diploma of D. D., which he very respectfully declined, as an honour too distinguished for a man of his standing. After the degree was thus returned, the faculty had a meeting, at which they appointed a deputation of their most celebrated men, to wait upon him personally, and press his acceptance of the degree. This will appear still more remarkable, when I tell you that the University of Edinburgh, seldom, if ever before, conferred such a degree upon a Dissenter. It is a pity that he even then accepted their diploma; for his elevation was such that it could add nothing to his fame, though it might detract something from it. There are two descriptions of men to whom such a thing is of no real value—great men, and little men: for the former cannot be exalted, and to the other, exaltation would only be the gibbet of their fame.

"Pigmyes are pigmies still, though perched on Alps, And pyramids are pyramids in vales."

[On the last sentences of this paper the editor will remark, that when a literary degree has been conferred without the solicitation or previous knowledge of him who receives it, there may possibly be at least as much modesty and humility, in silently letting the thing stand for what it is worth—and none but a weak head will think it is worth much—as in obstinately refusing to accept it.]

My principal authority was the book of addresses, kept by the Assembly's agent for the distribution of the minutes; in which some member of each Presbytery had inserted the names and places of residence of his co-presbyters. The errors and defects which may be found in my register, will, I hope, induce the several Presbyteries to send up to me, (postage paid,) as Stated Clerk of the Assembly, complete statements of all their ministers; designating pastors, stated supplies, and those without charge, together with the post-office address of each. The Synod of the Western Reserve lately took order on this subject; and they respectfully request you, Sir, to publish in The Christian Advocate, which they justly consider as the depository of authentick information in regard to the Presbyterian church, the following corrected Register of the Presbytery of Huron.

In the foregoing list, as in the register, P. stands for Pastor; S. S. for Stated Supply, and W. C. for Without Charge.

With my earnest wish that the Christian Advocate may be universally patronized by the Presbyterian Church, and specially devoted to its dearest interests, I remain yours, with great esteem.

E. S. Ely, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Remarks on Robert Owen's Address.

We can no longer be silent, in regard to the project and the publications of the renowned Robert Owen, who has lately returned to this country; and who is now forming a settlement at Harmony, in the state of Indiana, with a view to exhibit in practice, the effect of his extraordinary scheme for meliorating the condition of mankind. We have not space in our present number, to combat in detail, what we consider his erroneous and pernicious principles.—This we hope to do, if spared till the coming month. In the mean time, we feel constrained to bear our unequivocal testimony against the infidel, and, as they appear to us, atheistical tenets, which he has openly avowed, in his "Address to the citizens of the United States," dated—"At sea, New York Packet, October, 1825."

Mr. Owen certainly deserves credit, for the frank and undisguised avowal of his opinions, views and purposes; as exhibited in the address to which we have referred, and also, as we are informed, in all his communications, both of a publick and private kind, which he has had occasion or opportunity to make. We are likewise willing to believe, that he really has confidence in the practicability of his plan; and in the great influence that it would have, if generally adopted, in promoting human happiness—There are hardly any bounds to which a projector, who has been dwelling for years on a favourite theory of his own devising, will set to the beneficial effects, which, as he believes, his fond device is calculated to produce. We rejoice too, that in our free and happy country, Mr. Owen will not meet with any other obstruction to the full execution of his plan, than that which shall arise from the conviction that it is delusive and pernicious. As such we certainly regard it, and as such we shall endeavour to convince all our readers, that they ought to regard it. In doing this, we hope there will be no cry of persecution; because we surely have as good a right to advocate our opinions, as he has to plead for the correctness and importance of his: And we certainly claim to have as sincere and tender a regard, as any that he can entertain, for the happiness of our fellow men.

We can do little more, at present, than make a fair exhibition of Mr. Owen's leading notions, as they affect the all important subjects of morals and religion—that our readers may have a distinct view of his principles and aims; and thus be led to reflect seriously for themselves, whether his system is one which they can approve and favour; or whether it is not one on which they will feel themselves constrained to frown, and to discountenance, in the most decisive manner.

In Mr. Owen's printed address, he says—"You cannot enjoy to their full extent the benefits to which I refer, until these errors of the old world shall have been removed. The greatest and most lamentable of these are the notions, that human nature has been so formed as to be able to believe and disbelieve, and to love and hate, at pleasure, and that there can be merit or demerit in believing or disbelieving, and in loving and hating. These false notions are the origin of evil, and the real cause of all sin and misery among mankind; yet they are received and continued, in direct opposition to every fact known to the human race." We are not going to argue with Mr. O., at present, on the justice of the positions which he here lays down, nor on the bold assertion with which he closes them.—This, as already intimated, we hope to do hereafter. We only now remark, that the ideas which he here communicates are not new. They have been broached long since by infidel and atheistical writers; and time after time, they have been triumphantly confuted. They go directly to represent mankind as not acting freely or spontaneously, in any thing they do; and thus to take away all moral responsibility from every human being, and to establish a system of absolute fatalism. Mankind, according to this system, are the mere creatures of circumstances, over which they have no control, and for the influence of which they, of course, are in no degree accountable—have neither merit nor demerit, are neither to be praised nor blamed, for any of their conduct. And that this is really the system of Mr. O., is fully apparent in the sequel of his address. As to the divine authority of the Bible, he openly and unequivocally denied it, after his publick address to the citizens of Philadelphia, when questioned on that topic by one of the audience.

Now, let our readers think for themselves, whether they are prepared to show favour to such notions as these—to a system of which they are the radical principles, and on which a whole course of education, from infancy to manhood, is to be conducted. Yes, we solemnly ask of every one who peruses our pages, to reflect seriously, whether he can regard even with indifference, a proposed experiment which involves the rejection of the divine authority of the Bible, and the denial of all moral responsibility? We also solemnly ask, whether it is to be expected, that the representatives of a Christian people, will entertain with any favour, a proposition for making such an experiment as we here contemplate?—We ask this, because Mr. O. has avowed his determination, to lay his plan before the Congress of the United States; manifestly with some hope of its receiving national patronage.

We have given Mr. O. credit for his frankness, and for the truth of his professions; and we are not disposed to recall or weaken our concession. We must, notwithstanding, express our utter astonishment, that he should expect—for he does seem to expect—that the sober and reflecting part of our countrymen, will give up principles which they hold most sacred, and conclusions which they believe are demonstrably true, and embrace a theory which, in the sixth thousand year of the world, professes to correct radical errors which have hitherto universally prevailed, relative to the whole training of the human mind, and to the whole fabric of human society; and to renovate the world by means of a recent discovery, in consequence of which man is to be treated, as man was never treated before. Were it not, in our apprehension, attended by consequences, of which we cannot for a moment think without horror, we should wish the experiment to be fully and fairly tried; confident, as we are, that it would prove completely abortive. But when we recollect that this experiment, if made at all, must be made at the expense, as we verily believe, of the eternal well being of a large number of our fellow creatures, we do and must deprecate it, as among the most appalling in import, that ever entered the mind of an overweening and deluded projector and enthusiast.—Editor.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Rev. Editor,—Will you do the favour, to admit the following questions to a place in your important publication?

1. Are there not 2,000,000 of slaves in the republick of the United States?

2. Are not almost the whole of them denied the word of God?

3. Are not ninety-nine hundreds of them incapable of reading the Scriptures?
4. Are they not immortal beings, who need the salvation of Christ?
5. Are they not within the full view of the American Church, and yet in a great measure overlooked by this Church?
6. Is their lot remembered in the prayers of the Church, or in the monthly concerts?
7. Is there any good reason why they should be disregarded, especially while Greeks are remembered, and distant heathen commiserated?

It would doubtless be a work of mercy and relief to many, who may have a conscience not justly enlightened, to furnish such fair and true answers to these questions, as would take away any groundless apprehension that "all is not right," in our own church and country. Would some one of your correspondents do this, it would be very gratefully received by several whom I know; and certainly by your humble servant.

L.

THE REV. MR. STEWART'S PRIVATE JOURNAL.

(Continued from p. 558. Vol. iii.)

Thursday, 29th. Yesterday Captains Ebbetts and Grimes and Mr. Bruce and Mr. Halsey, of New York, called and took tea with us: and this afternoon we had the pleasure of entertaining Capt. Wilds and son, Mr. Crocker the consul, and Capt. Rogers of the ship Parthian.

Saturday, 1st of May. At 2 o'clock this afternoon, I accompanied our dear friends Mr. and Mrs. Bingham and their children, to the beach, where they embarked on board the whale ship Washington, Capt. Gardner, for Tanaia.

Monday, 3d. By preaching to the English congregation yesterday morning, I commenced the discharge of the regular duties which will devolve on me during my residence here. These duties will be, the preaching of the English sermon every Sabbath morning, and the conducting of a native service in the afternoon of the same day, at Waititi, three miles from Honoruru: another service at Waititi every Wednesday afternoon; and the instruction of about thirty young men in reading and singing three times a week—on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday afternoons. There is also a native conference meeting, every Monday evening, which I attend with Mr. Ellis: and we both make it a matter of duty to spend some part of every day in visiting the chiefs, and in superintending some one of the various schools now in operation, under native teachers in the village.

The native monthly prayer meeting was well attended and interesting this afternoon—as was the conference also. This was opened by a very spirited address, to about an hundred persons present, from the powerful chief Kaahumani: he was followed in much the same manner by Kaimoku, after which the whole company entered into a free and promiscuous inquiry, on the subject of the three regular sermons, that had been preached in the Chapel since the preceding Monday. It is indeed, my dear M. encouraging and delightful, to see the deep and tender interest with which so large a company, from the very highest to the most obscure of this people, entered on the discussion, and listened to enlargements on the things that concern their everlasting peace. To be the guides of such from the darkness and death of paganism, to the light and glory of the religion of the Cross, is a privilege doubly worthy any sacrifice we have made to secure it.—Yes, worth even the sacrifice of all personal intercourse hereafter, with those precious friends whose remembrance daily steals on us with a melting power, and of whom you.
my beloved sister, are one of the very foremost. The Missionary has privations, cares and sorrows, that no one can know, but by experience, and such as often prostrate him in the very dust; but when successful he has also a consolation and a joy, and, if perseveringly humble, faithful, and devoted, will doubtless meet a reward, which might make even an angel covet his office.

To see, as I have but lately seen, an interesting, intelligent, and youthful chief, who but a year ago was a drunken and debauched idolater, but who now gives good evidence of an entire change of character and of heart, come, and with an expression of benignity and tenderness exclaim, "aroha—aroha—aroha nui roa," (love to you—great—very great love to you,) while the starting tears and faltering voice interrupted further utterance;—and to have the full conviction, that this declaration of his affection arose simply from an overpowering sense of gratitude to the man, who had made him acquainted with the words, and brought him to the light of eternal life, would oe sufficient, I do not hesitate to believe, to make the coldest Christian that ever felt an emotion of genuine piety, the supporter and advocate of missions, and the warm and zealous friend of the heathen.

(To be continued.)

Review.

DISCUSSION OF UNIVERSALISM.

(Continued from p. 563, vol. iii.)

The fifth argument of Mr. McCalla, he denominates affirmation, and he divides it into two parts. In the first part he considers the view which the scriptures present of the state of the damned; and in the second, what they teach of the duration of their punishment.

In the first branch of this argument, he investigates the meaning of those important words, Sheol, Hades, Gehenna, and Tartarus, which has been so much disputed.

We were truly sorry to observe the severe animadversions which our author has passed, on the literary conduct of Dr. George Campbell, of Aberdeen. We think we are tolerably well acquainted, both with the writings, and the character of Dr. Campbell: and although we do not agree with him in some of his opinions, nor in some of his new translations of terms and passages of sacred scripture, yet we believe that he was both an honest and a truly independent man; and as a writer, we regard him as eminently learned, sagacious, instructive and useful. No piece of controversy that we have ever perused, has appeared to us more masterly and conclusive, than that which he produced in reply to Hume, on the subject of miracles. We have carefully read over the second part of his sixth preliminary dissertation to his translation of the gospels, in which he enters on a critical inquiry into the true import of the Greek words ἀδέσποτα and γῆς γενναία. He differs from Mr. M'C. as to the first of these terms, and as to the import of the Hebrew term of which it is the translation in the version of the Seventy; but he assigns his reasons with great moderation and candour. In regard however to the meaning of the other term, (γῆς γενναία) which he says is found in the New Testament exactly twelve times, he perfectly agrees with our author; and thus gives the full sanction of his authority to the sense for which Mr. M'C. contends; and from the force of his argument, in art of his work, is mainly, and ink conclusively derived.

the particular train of Mr. Illa’s reasoning in regard to ur words mentioned above, it occupy too much room to ex. Suffice it to say, that, by induction of particular pas- in which they occur, he has assively proved, that they de- a place of future existence punishment; and from the connected with them, that the moment of the finally impi- will be eternal. The corrupt s put on these words by his onists, he exposes with great and sometimes overwhelms with keen ridicule. The ab-interpretation given by Uni-ists of the parable of the rich the author exhibits by para- ing it according to their views:

is method of exposing error is used reverence to God, and love to your for consequences, let the corrupt- Revelation be answerable. The malist paraphrase is as follows, viz. was a certain rich man [the Aaron- Priest,] which was clothed in pur- fine linen, and fared sumptuously day. And there was a certain beg- nued Lazarus, [the Gentiles,] which d at his gate, full of sores, and de- to be fed with the crumbs which fell the rich man’s table, [the High a table.] Moreover the dogs, [the earth] came and licked his sores and : to pass, that the beggar, [the Gen- lied, [became converted] and was by the angels [the personifica- non-entities, or these dogs, the es,] into Abraham’s bosom, [the I dispensation.] The rich man [the High Priest, also died, [was ex- exicated] and was buried, [alive] hell [in this life, he lifted up his to an exact level,] being in tor- [of conviction, and seeth Abraham, gospel] afar off, [very near in the place,] and Lazarus, [the Gentiles] bosom, [its dispensation.] And he and said, Father Abraham, [gosp- have mercy on me; and send Laza- e Gentiles] that he may dip the tip a finger in water, and cool my z; for I am tormented in this flame. Abraham, [the gospel] said, son, remember, that thou in thy life and thou hast never died,] received thy good things, and likewise Laz- rius [the Gentiles,] evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us, [the Gentiles,] and you [the Jews,] there is a great gulf fixed; [in the room of that middle wall of partition which is broken down,] so that they which would pass from hence to you, cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence. Then he, [the High Priest] said, I pray thee therefore, Father, [gospel] that thou wouldst send him, [the Gentiles] to my Father’s house, [the Jews,] for I have five brethren, [the five books of Moses, or the five foolish Virgins,] that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abra- ham, [the gospel,] saith unto him, [the High Priest,] they [the five books of Mo- ses, or the five foolish Virgins] have Mo- ses and the Prophets, and then he heard them. And he said, nay, Father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, [be- fore he dies,] they will repent. And he said unto him, if they [the five books or Virgins] hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead [before he dies.]*

*But if it be true that God is not to be mocked with impunity;—if it be true, that after the death and burial of the body, the soul must go with good angels to Abraham’s bosom, or with evil angels to the place of torment;—and if it be true, that that Divine Redeemer, whose blood removed the wall of partition from be- tween Jews and Gentiles, has given his word, that none shall ever pass that gulf which lies between Heaven and Hell;— then let those who reject or trifle with the word of God, repent or tremble. Pp. 243, 244.

The second branch of the fifth argument treats of the duration of punishment. In making out this point the author collects together a number of texts, both from the Old and the New Testaments, which affirm that the punishment of the wicked will be perpetual, eternal, everlasting, forever, and forever and ever. Knowing that the import of the original terms, נאץ נאץ, or ניאש as he writes it, נאש Odam, אונא אונא, אינא אינא אינא, is disputed, he enters into a laborious investiga- tion of their true scriptural signifi- cation; and proves, in a clear and able manner, that, in connexion with the punishment of impenitent sinners, they denote what is strictly called eternal duration, just as they do when used in connexion with the future happiness of saints, with the being and perfections of God, and with the glory of Christ's kingdom.

In the elucidation of these important Hebrew and Greek terms, Mr. McCalla has shown much patient research, and diligent investigation, and displayed a discriminating and judicious mind. We regret that we have not space to make extracts from this part of his work; but can do no more than recommend it, and we do earnestly recommend it, to the careful perusal of those who have doubts or difficulties in regard to the meaning of these terms, on which so much of this controversy hinges.

Mr. Kneeland, the opponent of Mr. McCalla, is an errorist of the very worst stamp. He denies the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ; he denies not only a limited punishment, but all punishment whatever, in a future state; and he carries his system of error and impiety still farther. In a publication, styled "Presbyterianism versus Presbyterianism," he says, p. 18, "No man is able, theoretically speaking;" (that is really; for this is his meaning,) "to do what he does not; because some power is wanting, and as long as any power is wanting, his power is not sufficient." From this definition of power it will follow, if a man cheat his neighbour, he has at the time, power to cheat, but not power to act honestly. If a man tell a lie, he has at the time, power to lie, but not power to tell the truth.

But this is not all; this man has the hardihood to destroy the very nature of sin, and to represent mankind as mere instruments, who are no more accountable for their actions, than the saw or the axe, when used by a human being. Quoting from an essay in which he is commenting on these words, "man is an accountable being," he observes, p. 18, "This is true, but it is true only in a popular sense. In a theoretical sense, man is only an instrument in the hand of God in doing whatever is done by him: and in this sense he is no more accountable, than the axe is accountable to the man who uses it, or the saw to the hand that shaketh it. Man, considered as an instrument in the hand of God, is altogether passive; his intellectual and moral faculties notwithstanding." Now by turning to pages 14 and 15, we shall find what he means by a popular sense, and what by a theoretical sense. There, he explains the signification which he attributes to these terms. "All this contradiction of language, and confusion of ideas, have arisen in consequence of not noticing a certain fact, which is true in all science, and will apply to theology, as well as the laws of nature; viz. the distinction there is, and ever ought to be made, between the popular and the philosophical or theoretical language. This distinction is obvious in nature, and should ever be preserved in our language; otherwise we shall confuse, rather than instruct our readers. Common people are not aware, perhaps, how much of our language is accommodated to the fallacy of our senses; which, whilst it answers all the purposes for which it is intended, conveys to the understanding only apparent rather than real facts. Thus we say, the sun rises in the east, and sets in the west; we speak in the popular language; what we mean is true, and we are understood: but after all, it is a fallacy of the senses, and only apparently true."

Here we have this heretic's scheme discovered in all its enormity. Man is an accountable being in a popular sense, but not in a theoretical sense; that is, he is not really accountable to God for his conduct, but a mere instrument in and. There is such a thing as a popular sense; but there is sin in a theocratical sense. A man apparently disobeys the will of God, he really does not disobeys for in fact he is a mere instruction, but all law, and justice and r among mankind. Acting as the influence of such abomi-
May a man perpetrate? What can tain him from lying and false and stealing, every other act of iniquity, regard to public opinion, and f o b e i n g p e n i s h e d b y h uneon, were to defraud the laws. Would it be surprising a merchant, holding such detesttruth. Should the deception is covered, and reported to his advantage, he might, to save his
The other people might regard such a prose-would tend to beguile the pub-especially as he might take to keep back the suit, lest the
It is the fashion with people conscience, in order to re-to persons the same virtuous feelings, and to take the benefit of the act, h was designed to relieve un-hat honest debtors; and wards, under pretence of their notes to their friends, who were so kind as to endorse them: and we can see no reason, except what has been referred to, why a man, adopting the system of Mr. Kneeland, should not, although he were a clergyman, take this expeditious and easy road to large profits in business.

"I was never called a murderer before!" exclaimed a legitimate disciple of Mr. K., when a gentleman of this city said, that, on his principles, it would be an act of kindness were he to destroy at once all the wretched inhabitants of our hospital and poor house, and send them without delay to heaven. "I have not called you a murderer, Mr. M.; I am only showing the tendency of your system." And should Mr. K. exclaim, I was never called a defaulter and a cheat before! we should reply, Mr. K., we have not called you a defaulter and a cheat; we are showing the pernicious tendency of your system; and we must say that we should not be surprised to hear, that any publick advocate of such impiety was conicted of these and graver offences.

In conclusion, we think Mr. M'Calla has done a real service, at least to the citizens of Philadelphia, by his public debate with Mr. K.; for, beside the beneficial results already noticed in a former part of this review, he has, we verily believe, been principally instrumental, in sending the champion of Universalism and impiety from this city. His book, we hope, will be read by multitudes. It is an able performance. His arguments are powerful; his satire keen; and his style perspicuous, lively and forcible.

---

Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, etc.

A monument is being erected in Glas-to the memory of John Knox. It is a Doric column, sixty feet in height, to be represented as preaching, leaning a little forward, his left leg advanced, and holding in his right hand a small pocket Bible. In the energy of speaking he has grasped and raised up the left side of the Geneva cloak, and is pointing with the forefinger of his left hand to the Bible in his right.

If the inhabitants of the world amount to 600,000,000, its Christian population will be 200 millions, namely, the Greek and Eastern Churches, 30 millions; the Papists, 100 millions; and the Protestants, 70 millions. The pagans are estimated at 461 millions; the Mahomedans at 130 millions; and the Jews at nine millions.

A French journal has furnished an estimate of the number of children in the several countries of Europe, who are educated at public schools, compared with the whole population. According to this table, the pupils of the public schools in the circle of Gratz, is one in nine of the whole population—in Bohemia, one in eleven—in Moravia and Silesia, one in twelve—in Austria, one in thirteen—in Prussia, one in eighteen—in Scotland, one in ten—in England, one in sixteen—in Ireland, one in eighteen—in France, one in thirty—in Poland, one in seventy-eight—in Portugal, one in eighty—and in Russia, one in nine hundred and fifty-four.

The Pope has lately pronounced the beatification of a Spanish Franciscan, named Jubelin. Among the numberless miracles attributed to this monk, is one of having resuscitated several couple of half-roasted fowls, which at his command took wing from the spit and flew away, with miraculous velocity. This ignorant and wretched country teems with pretended miracles at the present moment.

A sugar manufactory has been established at Otaheite, where sugar is made from the native cane; and a building designed for a cotton manufactory has been erected at Eimeo; the machinery for spinning and weaving has been imported from England, and is now in motion by water power. Cotton grows spontaneously in great abundance.—Christians Observer.

Expedition across the Rocky Mountains.
—Monday, Dec. 19. The following resolution offered by Mr. Sawyer, was taken up for consideration: Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to lay before this House an estimate of the expense of an expedition under the conduct of an officer of Engineers, from Pembina on the Red River of Lake Winnipeg, along the 49th degree of N. latitude; to the West, across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean; thence along the shores of the coast to the south, as far as the 48d degree of North latitude; and along the Spanish boundary to the Mississippi River, or any other more eligible route across our unexplored territory, to any place on that or the Ohio River; with a view to geological and other examinations, which might be considered useful or interesting.—Rejected.

Canal across the Isthmus of Florida.—Mr. Webster, of Massachusetts, offered the following: Resolved, That it is expedient to provide by law for the examination and survey of the Peninsula of Florida, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it be practicable to unite the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico by a Ship Canal, to run from the neighbourhood of St. Augustine, or the mouth of St. John's River, on the Atlantic coast, to the neighbourhood of the mouth of the Suwanney River, in the Gulf of Mexico.

Communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific, across the Isthmus of Panama.—On motion of Mr. Reed, of Massachusetts, it was Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a line of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, through the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. Reed observed, on introducing this resolution, that the object it had in view was important, as a means of obtaining information from those distant seas. Successive nations on the Southern Continent were now becoming free; our government had entered into treaties with them; and our commerce in that quarter of the globe was continually increasing. There were, besides, many of our whale ships constantly in those seas, on voyages of three years duration. A more direct means of communication with those seas was very desirable, not only for the satisfaction of many anxious families, but in the case of pestilence or disaster. The important end, however, which he proposed by the resolution, was to provide means of more promptly conveying orders and intelligence, between the Executive and that part of our navy which was stationed in the Pacific. No one could be ignorant of the delay and danger attending a voyage around Cape Horn, especially in the inclement season of the year. The communication he sought to have established, might be accomplished at a very small expense, and the objects which it would attain, were of the highest importance.

The religious as well as the political world will rejoice, if the plan of a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific, mentioned in the above congressional resolutions, should go into operation. We should then have an easy and expeditious method of communicating with our Missionaries in the South Sea islands.

Weather.—Three or four days during the last month, have been excessively cold, throughout the United States. In some places the thermometer has been 8° or 10° below Zero.

Dr. Siebold, physician to the Dutch establishment in Japan, has been acquiring a knowledge of the language and literature of that country, which he means to employ for the instruction and gratification of the learned world of Europe.

—He has already made some interesting communications to the British Asiatic Society. In like manner, Mr. Korous, a Hungarian traveller and philologist, has enjoyed favourable opportunities of insight into the language and literature of Tibet. He has completed a grammar and vocabulary of the language.

The erudite Dr. Carey has completed his Dictionary of the Bengalee language, consisting of 2160 closely printed quarto pages. He was employed upon it for a period of ten years.—National Gazette.

Curiosity.—Mr. Samuel F. Baker, of Andover, Massachusetts, being employed with others, in making a stone bridge, in the North Parish of Andover, they discovered, on taking up a large flat stone, (about three feet by five,) a great body of living snakes, which had probably taken shelter there for the winter. They were cold and stiff at first, from the cold, but exhibited various signs of life when exposed to the sun. On being counted, there were found to be one hundred and sixteen; and, what renders the circumstance more singular, there were various species, viz. black, striped, and green snakes, and house and brown adders—numbers of each. They were of different sizes, varying from six inches to two feet. —Salem Gazette.

Exploration of the North West Coast.—
Friday, Dec. 16. The following resolution, offered by Mr. Baylies, was adopted: Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inform this House whether the sloop of war Boston, about to be commissioned, might not be employed in exploring the Northwest coast of America, its rivers and inlets, between the parallels of latitude 42 and 49 north, without detriment to the naval service of the United States; and whether the expense incurred in such service would exceed the ordinary expenses of such vessels while cruising. And also whether it would be practicable to transmit more cannon, and more of the munitions of war in such vessel, than would be necessary for the use of the vessel.

The New Jersey Legislature have passed an act changing the name of Queen’s College, to that of Rutgers College.

Religious Intelligence.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Within a few days past, we have received a letter from the Rev. Mr. Stewart, missionary at these islands, of the date, March 24th, 1825. A continuation of his private Journal, up to the time at which he wrote, accompanied his letter. We shall continue the publication of this Journal as fast as our space will permit; and we can assure our readers that it will be found not less, but rather more interesting, than the part they have already seen—We regret that we could not publish a larger portion in our present number.

It appears that the mission to the Sandwich islands has been, from the very first to the period of the last accounts, remarkably prosperous. A number of, hopeful conversions, or of instances in which revealed truth has made a deep and practical impression on the minds of the natives, have already occurred; and these instances have been witnessed, for the most part, among the highest chiefs of the Hawaian nation. It appears in a word, that the governmental influence of the islands is now decidedly in favour of the instructions and institutions of the gospel; and that this, under the Divine blessing, is the result of full and calm inquiry, producing a decisive and settled conviction of the importance and value of Christian piety—in reference both to the temporal and eternal interests of the inhabitants of these islands. Schools are established, as extensively as teachers can be found to instruct them; many of the people of all ranks, are assiduously employed in learning to read, and in acquiring a knowledge of the arts and manufactures of civilized life; and the usages of such a life are becoming fashionable. Publick worship is well attended; the Sabbath, in many parts of the islands, is regarded; and there is every reason to hope—and by this hope the missionaries are greatly animated—that the period may not be far distant, when in these islands, there will be a renewal of those scenes, so cheering to every Christian mind, which have recently been witnessed at Otaheite, and in almost the whole group of the Society Islands.

We perceive that it is stated in a letter from Mr. Whitney, of the 24th of June, (exactly three months later than ours from Mr. Stewart,) published in the Missionary Herald of the last month, that "with the exception of Mrs. Stewart, all the members of the mission were in comfortable health three weeks ago. It was then feared, that she was in danger of a decline." This information will doubtless create anxiety in behalf of the very interesting individual to whom it relates, among her numerous and attached friends in this country. In our letter, Mr. Stewart says—"As to domestick news, we are all comfortable; though Mrs. Stewart does not regain her strength as rapidly in this, as in her former confinement. The mother and daughter, however, both promise to do well." As Mr. Whitney wrote from information, and the period to which he refers is but little more than two and a half months later than the date of Mr. Stewart’s letter, and the "danger of a decline" is spoken of, only as what was "feared," we cannot but hope that her indisposition is not such as to threaten her valuable life; and that it will be removed by the short voyage, which it appears she was about to take for that purpose.

THE STATE OF THE JEWS.

It appears from "Jowett’s researches in Syria and the Holy Land," a most interesting work recently published; from the statements contained in "The Jewish Expositor and Friend of Israel," a monthly miscellany published in London; from the communications of that wonderful Jewish missionary Wolf; from the letters and journals of the American missionaries in Palestine; and from "Israel’s Advocate," published in this country, by "The American Society for meliorating the condition of the Jews"—from the concurrent testimony of all these varied sources of information, which we mention because they are so various, it appears that there is a great and unusually excited attention of the Jews throughout the world, in regard to the subject of the Messiah’s advent; and that, in various places, there is a disposition, perhaps never witnessed before since the apostolic age, to hear the representations of Christians in behalf of our Divine Saviour, and to listen to the evidence that he is the true and only Messiah. The conversions of Jews to the Christian faith, within a few years past, although not numerous, when compared with the whole number of that extraordinary people, yet are, we believe, considerably greater in amount, than they ever were, in the same period, since the first century of the Christian era—We, of course, speak here of voluntary and we hope sincere conversions; for the compulsory measures used by the Papists, to make Jews appear to be Christians, when the whole effect was to make them hate Christianity the more, cannot be thought of without grief and regret. In addition to all, there is an increasing interest taken by Christians generally, in behalf of the Jews, and a disposition to show them kindness, which has not been witnessed before for more than seventeen successive centuries—producing missions to the Jews, societies for their relief and their conversion, inquiries into their state in all countries, and various other measures to enlighten them, and to win them to the faith of the gospel. Putting all these circumstances together, we think that among the signs of the times, which indicate the approximation of the millennial age, the state of the Jews may be reckoned one, without any just charge of extravagance or enthusiasm. And we have made this short statement, for the benefit of those who do not, and cannot, read the voluminous productions on this subject, which are now given to the publick.

RUSSIA.

Having frequently of late mentioned the unhappy change, which has taken place in this extended empire, unfavourable to the diffusion of the Sacred Scriptures, and the prosecution of evangelical missions, it has occurred, that it might be desirable to our readers to see, on this topic, something more in detail. We therefore subjoin the following extract from the London Evangelical Magazine, for November last.

Anti-biblical Revolution in Russia.

"This Institution, which for several years pursued so distinguished a career, and promised to supply with the Word of Life, not only the Russian population, but the numerous heathen and Mahometan tribes of that wide extended empire, is now completely paralyzed in its exertions, and appears to be dying a lingering death. In consequence of the powerful opposition which was raised to the Bible Society, Prince Gagarin, its Noble President, retired from that office; he, at the same time, resigned his situation of Minister of Religion, and a Russian Admiral was appointed in his place. Its no less excellent Secretary, Mr. Papoff, who visited this country about two years ago, and who was connected with the censorship of the press, was afterward put on his trial by the Criminal Court, respecting a book which had been published by Pastor Gossner, in which there were some reflections which were considered as unfavourable to the doctrine of the Greek Church relative to the Virgin Mary. Several others were also involved in the same prosecution, two of them pious men. Pastor Gossner himself, who, though a Catholic, is said to be a most eloquent, evangelical, and useful preacher, had, previous to this, been ordered away from Petersburg on a few days' notice. The powers of darkness, in short, appear to be mustering their forces in the Russian empire; the measures pursued seem to be a part of that general system for arresting the progress of light, and for involving the nations in all the darkness of the middle ages, which has of late years constituted the distinguishing characteristic of the policy of most of the continental princes.

"Among the fruits of the revolution, in regard to the Bible Society in Russia, it may be mentioned, that though it was at one time intended that the Missionaries at Astrachan should be employed in printing a new and corrected edition of Martin's Persian New Testament, and though the types had been ordered, and had arrived in Petersburg, it has been since resolved not to proceed with the printing of it. The Missionaries were likewise informed, that the Tartar-Turkish Version of the Old Testament, preparing by Mr. Dickson, would have to be submitted to the Archbishops of Astrachan, Kazan, and Casterinславe; so that the publication, in Russia, of the Old Testament in that language, even if the Version were completed, may be considered as very problematical. In the present state of affairs, it was not even deemed safe to print Tracts, without first submitting them to the censorship: for though their having been done so formerly was winked at, it was not supposed it would be tolerated now; and the punishment, for a breach of the law on this head, would be not only the suppression of the work, but a severe fine, if not even banishment."—From the Missionary Register.

"The Scottish Missionaries have at length been compelled, through the unhappy change which has recently taken place in the Russian Councils, to abandon every station in that empire, except Karakum."

Immediately in connexion with the foregoing article, we find the following. It serves to show the feelings and character of those in India, who are hostile to all attempts to Christianize the multitudinous population of that section of the globe. Nothing but the fact could easily have convinced us that any man, calling himself a Christian, would ever disgrace his paper, in the manner done by the publication of the advertisement here given—

INDIA.

ADVERTISEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

To the Editor.

Sir,—The following is a verbatim copy of an advertisement, which, I am credibly informed, is to be found in a newspaper entitled The India John Bull, published at Calcutta, for the edification of many millions of idolaters, who are subject to the Crown of Great Britain.

"I, Achin, Chinaman, native of Pekin, return his thank to de religious and most worship in Bengal, since his first begin business. He now have to acquaint de worshippers of idols, that his son, Aal, Achen, have arrived, after his study of sculpture in Italy and London. He have brought wid him many blocks of that beautiful stellated granite, from Kelkeny ; he have also brought out a Mr. Bacon's Pentograph, by which we am now able to reduce to de smallest size any favourite idol, for domestic worship and in portable compass (exactly resembling de original,) for religious travellers by sea or land. We have one blocks of dis imperishable marble weighing three tons, beautifully variegated ; dis I proposes as de basis of a durable idol, to supersede de perishable wooden figure of Juggernaut ; I with my son, have nearly completed de idol; we have left one opening behind in de body, to get de dust of the first inventor, and de bones of de carver in wood; we have, at de lower extremity of de body, leaved room to introduce (from two oval reservoirs of mercury) tubes up to de corner of each eye, close to de nose, close filled wid water; de mercury below, pressed by de warm hands of de priest, will cause de idol to shed tears at any time, or on any festival, like Peter de Great's Vargin on Good Friday. We have left a cavity in de mouth, between de teeth for phosphorus light; also, in each eye of de idol, to illuminate de enamel and glass pupils in front. We makes figures of any incarnations: bulls for Egyptian worship, of de same beautiful Irish marble; boars, tortoises, hawks, sphinx, lions. Any pious person inclined to employ me and son, will, by sending a plan or likeness of de favourite deity, be certain of having it exactly executed according to order. Should de wood, cark, or clay of any favourite family idol be rapidly in decay, we engage to restore de deity to his original form, in imperishable materials (and if required,) improved in de most graceful and natural proportion. Orders directed to Achen and Son, sculptors, Penang, will be thankfully received and promptly attended to."

BOMBAY.

The following joint letter, addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, has been received by a Salem vessel, which left Bombay on the 31st of July.

Bombay, July 19, 1825.

Dear Sir,

Since we last wrote and informed you of the death of our lamented brother Nichols, all the adult members of our mission have been spared without any severe or lasting sickness. But the list of our deceased children has received still another name. On the 3d inst. the child of Mr. Garrett, named Mary Hardy, experienced the general doom of fallen man. Her complaint was attended with some symptoms of the hydrocephalus, though the disease was not distinctly marked. Mrs. Nichol's child is now quite ill. When the Lord will cease smiting us, and replenish our desolation with spiritual sons and daughters, we know not; but we even hope and look for the time.

The young man who had proposed himself for admission into our church, is still a candidate. Without giving so satisfactory evidence of piety that we are decided to receive him, he still gives us some reason to hope.

He is now at Joomur, in the interior, where, in consequence of a special request, presented here in person by several respectable citizens and officers of the town, we have established a school. In this school are upwards of one hundred and fifty boys.

As to the schools previously established, we trust our report, which was called for by the liberal assistance, we had here received, will prove sufficiently particular to satisfy each of the benevolent societies, which assist in this department of our labours; and will also save us the time and expense of a letter to each.

Since we last wrote, we have published no new tracts; but have commenced a new edition (10,000 copies) of the scripture history, and are about commencing one of the English and Mahratta books intended for sale, with a view to the promotion of morality and Christianity. We are about to print, likewise, a new edition of the Ten Commandments, with other select passages, of the Scriptures. The printing of the New Testament in order is advanced to Philippians. The short epistles were printed previously.

We think the principles and objects of Peace Societies so important, and so Christian, that you will not disapprove of our connexion with them. In reply to our application to the London Society for assistance in the publication of tracts, we have received several copies of their publications, and a proposal of assistance on the formation of a Tract Society here. And we trust, that such an one will be formed, among the friends of Christ in this Presidency, in which society our brethren in the neighbouring missions and ourselves shall unite. We are also about to propose to them an annual missionary association, for mutual assistance and strength, in promoting the kingdom of the blessed Redeemer.

We were not long since visited by the converted Jew, Michael Sargon, employed as a teacher of a Hebrew school at Cochin, by the Madras Auxiliary Jews' Society. He came to make inquiries respecting the Jews in this region; and, not long after, we received a communication from Dr. Bannister, of Madras, inquiring as to the convenience of the Madras Society establishing Jewish schools here; and whether, in case they should, we would occasionally instruct them. We returned, in answer, our good wishes towards the object of the Society; and remarked, that probably not more than one small school for teaching Hebrew could be established in the vicinity; and that, even in this, a capacity to read and write Mahrrata, their vernacular and almost only language, should be made a prerequisite to the admission of any children; lest, perhaps, they should be drawn away, and kept from our Mahrrata schools; and thus, in reality, be kept from any adequate acquaintance with the Scriptures. If they adopted such a prerequisite, we should be happy to assist them, as far as our other occupations would permit; but we observed, that we had not fully decided, as to the most expedient way of appropriating our own Jewish funds; that we have long thought it desirable to establish a school for instructing in Hebrew and Mahrrata; and though we had no teacher well qualified, we were endeavouring to provide one by giving instruction to several Jewish boys. As the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures are the principal source of religious knowledge, it was previously, and still is, our wish to have a school, in which both languages might be particularly taught.* We have therefore commenced the instruction of one Mahrrata (a Brahmin's son) and one Catholick boy in Greek.

We would hope that several missiona ries, with those who previously proposed to come to our assistance, are on their way to join us; and also that assistance from on high may soon be vouchsafed us, and be more conspicuous for the encouragement of ourselves and our supporters, and for the salvation of infinitely precious souls.

Yours, in the hope and patience of the blessed Gospel.

G. HALL,
A. GRAVES,
E. FROST,
J. G. R. A. T. T. E.

P. S. Since commencing the above, Mr. and Mrs. Frost, have both been quite ill; Mr. F. with a fever. Through Divine goodness, Mr. F. is considerably better; but Mrs. F. continues sick.

The extremely favourable opportunity for a passage to America, with the afflictions which the mission has experienced in the loss of children, and the obvious and dangerous effects of this climate, on Mr. and Mrs. Hall's two children, so that the life, especially of the eldest, has been despaired of, and there is but slight any ground to hope they would not ere long fall a prey to the climate of this country; these considerations have induced us all to concur in the expediency of Mrs. Hall's accompanying her children to America. As we are solemnly bound to the preservation of life, and as the mission has suffered so much already, and the trial, in the present measure, rests most heavily on the parents, we think we may expect not only the sympathies and prayers, but the assistance of our fellow Christians.—Missionary Herald for December.

INTERESTING FROM LIBERIA.

We have been politely favoured with the following letters from the Rev. Lott Cary, missionary at Monrovia, to his friend in this city. Mr. Cary has, for a long time, acted in the treble capacity of Physician, Minister of Religion, and Teacher of the school, in all which his industry and zeal are very conspicuous and highly praiseworthy. It is to be hoped that the Board may soon devise means to relieve him from the practice of medicine, that he may have more time to devote to missionary purposes, for which he seems eminently qualified.

Had he leisure for this object, and a little more assistance from the African Missionary Board, he would no doubt soon be instrumental in establishing a large school at Grand Cape Mount. Such an establishment would more strongly identify the interests of the natives with those.
of the colony, and secure their co-operation in the benevolent exertions of the society.—Richmond Fam. Vis.

Monrovia, June 10th, 1825.

On the 18th of April, 1825, we established a Missionary school for native children. We began with 21; the school has increased since to 31. And as I know it to be the great object which the Society had in view, I felt that there was no risk in furnishing them with a suit of clothes each, upon the credit of the Board.
We teach from eleven in the morning, until two in the afternoon, it being as much time as I can spare at present. You will see from the list that Grand Cape Mount will soon be a field for missionary labours, as that station is most anxious for improvement. I wrote to the King some time in May to send five or six girls to school, and have since received an answer, informing me that the girls and their mothers were absent, and when they returned I should have them. According to their custom they have to remain six months. I intend to write him again, and, as soon as the African Missionary Board can support a school, to get one established up there. To furnish clothing and books for the children, and support a teacher, is what the Board would have to do. I think after one or two years, such an establishment would be no expense to the Board, but that they would very gladly support a school themselves. We are told to hope great things, expect great things, and attempt great things. You must know that it is a source of much consolation to me to hear the word of God read by those native sons of Ham, who a few months ago were howling in the Devil’s Bush.

Lott Cary.

Monrovia, Liberia, Africa,
June 15th, 1825.

Dear Sir,

Nothing very interesting has taken place since I wrote you last, except that among the last emigrants who came out, there has been considerable sickness, and some deaths; the precise account of which I cannot give at this time. I do believe that the sickness of new comers hitherto has been greatly increased in consequence of the very unfavourable season of the year in which they left America.
You know that they have long been accustomed to have their systems prepared for the summer heat. But to leave in the winter, and be suddenly introduced into a warm climate, it is natural to conclude, that they will be sooner attacked, and that the disease generally terminates more seriously. Send them out in the fall, and I think the sickness will be very light, and in some constitutions altogether avoided.

Please to use your influence to have a physician sent out, as I must of necessity quit practising, for it occasions a greater consumption of time than I can possibly afford.

We begin now to get on with our farms and buildings tolerably well. I have a promising little crop of rice and cassadas, and have planted about 180 coffee trees
this week, a part of which, I think, will produce the next season, as they are now in bloom. I think, sir, that in a very few years we shall send you coffee of a better quality than you have ever seen brought into your market. We find that the trees of two species abound in great quantities on the Capes, both of the large and small green coffee, of which I will send you a specimen by the first opportunity.

The Sunday School continues to pro-spur. We have now on the list forty, but only about thirty-three attend regularly.
Two of them, George and John, from Grand Cape Mount, can read in the New Testament quite encouragingly. In addition to that, I have under way a regular day school. We began with 21, and now have on our list 31.

Yours, with respect,

Lott Cary.

In the last report of the London
Missionary Society, the following account is given of a meeting of the inhabitants of Raiatea, one of the Society Islands, on the first of January, 1824.—Did not these interesting people enter on a New Year in such a rational and Christian like manner, as might well serve as an equivalent to religious congregations,
in lands where civilization and the institutions of the gospel have been long established? In what manner could a Christian society better observe a New Year’s day, than as a religious festival; at which there should be a simple and temperate reast, furnished by voluntary contributions from the products of the country, accompanied by short addresses, recounting past mercies
and future duties, and concluded with prayer and exhortation from their religious teachers?

On an elevated pavement, or platform,
in the sea, originally intended for the site
Religious Intelligence.

... the house for King Tamotus, tables spread, and filled with the natural actions of the island. Around these baptized, on neat sofas, of their manufacture. Awnings of native protected them from the sun. At a distance behind them, the rest of the inhabitants sat on the ground, sag to their ancient custom. When past was ended, speeches were de-

d by natives, of which the following substance:

ative named Terearue, stood up and showed—"Friends, we are here assembled in unity and love. And why? Because the sun has risen upon us, and the sun has fled away: let us now, therefore, be diligent in the light, and return to the work of darkness!"

Ete'a (a deacon) spoke as follows: brethren and sisters, we have arrived ther e new year. Shall we increase in grace? (i. e. as a church.) If we see, it will be well; but if we do not, it will be bad. Through the grace of God we are spared to another year. Let us remember, the tree that does bear fruit will be cut down. The one alone is valued by its Lord."

We said—We are not alone in the victory. Let us not attempt to break its branches, and so get out; for nothing but God is outside. Let kings, and chiefs, and people, be diligent, that our net be full of fishes!"

A fia stood up and said—"Remember the teacher said a few Sunday since: we continue in sin, that grace may do? No, by no means, for the wages of sin is death. He that hath to him shall be given, and that in abundance: let us, therefore, pray for activity in holiness, that we may cast away every evil custom which is within us. Let the Lord be our strength, and the Lord be our help, and the Lord be our God. Let us go forward, my friends, and not back; and run the race, od will give us a reward."

Sava, an old man, then rose, and as follows:—"Friends and brethren. I have only a little speech to say, says, 'Hearken unto me.' Do we do it, is good indeed; if we do not, is it? Does God forbid us? No. Does it bring harm? Does his word? No. Do his orders? No. If we receive not his why do we not? Is it because we are forbidden? No. It is our own wickedness only that forbid us."

Kauri, another deacon, thus added those who have not as yet come to the Lord:—"Friends, if you are to us, it is well. Receive the word of God; learn to read it. The food alone that perishes, but also that which never perishes. Your s are clothed and neat, because we in one land, and receive equally these blessings of the Gospel; but you are still separate from us: seek that you may not be thus separated at the last day."

Amurino then addressed the same class of persons as follows: "Friends, you are now at the edge; are you nearly in? We are all of the earth, but God can make us all to be of heaven. The word of God will grow and increase. All of us are sinful creatures; there is only one refuge for us, Jesus; there is no other home for this clay. Then return to him, your only true home."

Athurita having sat down rose again, and addressed them as follows:—"Brethren according to Adam's flesh, when will ye be brethren in Christ? Remember, the wages of sin is death. Do not wait until you are good, and think then to come for baptism; that is from the devil; but come as you are, for Christ came to save sinners, and he will make your hearts good. Whom will you choose this day? Christ, or the wages of sin? The door of his church is open; come in."

Timuriki rose a second time, and said—"I will conclude Athurina's speech, by saying, Yes, and the bride says, 'Let him that is athirst come, and all that are weary, let them come. For the wages of sin is death, and therefore come unto me.'"

Another addressed the church, and observed, "God says, 'My son, give me thine heart.' Let us, therefore, give him our hearts, and our mouths too. Do not put a lock on your mouths; take it off, and speak for God."

Papaina walked forward and said—"My heart, friends, does so rejoice, that I, who am no speaker, must speak; and this is what I say: I am most heartily glad to see the king, chiefs, and people, all eating together with our teachers. Do not let us go back against evil, but forward to good. Now, behold, I who am no speaker, have spoken, and this is all I have to say. My speech is ended."

Maiore observed—"So it is with me. Five years have we now met together, and I have not spoken. I have been ashamed to speak; but God has done away that shame; and this is what I have to say: Let us be zealous in that which is right; give the glory to Jesus Christ, for he is the author and finisher of our faith."

Tasauro, a person who was baptized on the preceding Lord's day, spoke as follows:—"Listen to me, friends; I am but just come from the wilderness of the world to the kingdom of God, in which is nothing but goodness, both for body and soul. Behold our present employment, seated on seats, eating together of food upon tables, and salvation also for the soul provided for us! It is good indeed!"

Amurino stood forward again and said...
It is a new year, let us have no more old heathen customs. Such women who in common go about without proper attire, and come hither dressed because we are all assembled, let them remember this is not right; God sees them always. It is not suitable to the word of God; it is no sign of their being born again.

Timaru.—"Friends, it is good to speak! let every man speak his speech, and if it is good we will attend to it. We are not commanded by our teachers to say so and so; but we speak what we feel, it is not from the teachers. Behold some, just admitted into the church, they rejoice and speak. Let us all encourage one another, that we may be still improving in all things, especially now we are going to our new city.

King Tamatoa arose and observed, that he was well pleased with all, both chiefs and people, on account of their diligence and activity; but let not their professions be like the bamboo, which, when lighted, blazes most furiously, but leaves no fire-brand nor charcoal behind for future use! Let not their zeal be like it, kindled in a moment, give a great light for a season, and expire, leaving nothing behind!

Messrs. Threlkeld and Williams afterwards each addressed the people. The day was spent much to the satisfaction of all. The number of tables covered with food of various descriptions was about four hundred.

MISSION COLLEGE IN CEYLON.

The public are aware that the Board, at the late annual meeting, approved of the establishment of a Mission College in Ceylon, under the care of the American Missionaries, as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made for the commencement of such an institution. It is not intended to make an appeal to the public generally, in behalf of this particular object, lest it should divert from the general treasury of the Board those contributions, which are indispensable to the support of existing objects. But there are many individuals, scattered throughout our country, who could easily spare one, two, three, or five hundred dollars each, without diminishing their other donations. Will not these individuals seriously consider the nature of this claim upon their liberality, and the example of the unknown friend, who has generously offered five thousand dollars whenever ten thousand dollars shall have been received for this purpose. If twenty persons would give five hundred dollars each, or forty persons two hundred and fifty dollars each, the sum is raised, and the founding of a seminary for the benefit of millions is secured. Whatever may be paid for this object, will be kept in a productive state, and separate from the general funds of the Board, till it shall be applied to the purpose, for which it was intended.—Missionary Herald for December.

BRISTOL.

The Thirteenth Annual Meeting of this Society* was held on September 18th, and several successive days. The following Clergymen and Ministers advocated the cause: the Rev. Messrs. Dampier, Day, Cooper, Parsons, Jay, Griffin, and Stratton. A singular coincidence was observed in the strain of several of the discourses. For soothing commendations of past exertions, were substituted expressions of lamentation and regret, that so little had been done by us as Christians, answerable to the claims of God, and the necessities of the heathen. The appeals grounded on this view of the case were solemn and successful. The collections at most of the places surpassed those of former years, and at some very considerably. The Committee had suggested the propriety of collecting from seat to seat, instead of the usual confused manner. At the past meeting, on the close of the service; and the suggestion was most readily and cordially acceded to by every congregation.

The publick meeting, at which Charles Finney, Esq. presided, was unusually interesting. Another meeting was held at the same time, in consequence of the crowd; and a holy, united, and animating influence pervaded the assemblies, which it is presumed will never, by many, be wholly forgotten. It appeared from the Report, that several new Branch Societies had been formed in the course of the past year, and that others are upon the eve of formation. Thus the energies yet untired of this vast city and neighbourhood are about to be put in requisition for the great—the benevolent design of evangelizing mankind. The collections amounted to 9111. 16s. 6d.—Evangelical Magazine for November.

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. BOGUE.

It is with feelings of deep regret that we stop the press to announce the decease of the Rev. Dr. Bogue, D. D., the venerable Tutor of the Society's Missionary Seminary at Gosport. The mournful event took place at Brighton, whither the Dr. had gone to attend the Anniversary of "the Sussex Auxiliary Missionary Society;" he was seized with spasms after having engaged in the publick worship of God, on Tuesday evening the 18th ult. and the violence, and repetition of the attacks, at length terminated his earthly course, on Tuesday morning, October 25, 1825.—Evangelical Magazine for Nov.

* Auxiliary Missionary Society.
The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of December last, viz.

Of Mr. Joseph P. Engles, the annual collection in the Eighth Presbyterian Church, for the Contingent fund $25 78
Of Rev. Stephen Saunders, of South-Salem, West-Chester, Co. N. Y.—being his subscription on Rev. Issac W. Platt’s paper for ditto 10 00

Amount received for the Contingent Fund 35 78

Of ditto collected by him in the bounds of the Synod of New York, for the Synods of New York and New Jersey Professorship 53 00
Of Eliphalet Wickes Esq., a donation from Mr. Othniel Smith, of Jamaica, Long Island, for the same Professorship 50 00
Of Alexander Henry Esq. in full of his last subscription, for the Synod of Philadelphia Professorship 600 00
Of Rev. Dr. Archibald Alexander, the subscription of Mr. James Wood, lately a Student of the Seminary, for the Theosophian Scholarship to be endowed by the Class who finished their course last September 100 00

Total $838 78

---

View of Publick Affairs.

EUROPE.

GREAT BRITAIN.—From Britain we have received no intelligence of much general interest, in the course of the last month. Measures are actively pursued by the government, to secure the advantages of trade, and to the greatest extent, with all the republics of South America; and with the dominions of Don Pedro, the emperor of Brazil. With this latter potentate, a formal treaty has been formed; and we also see it announced, that copies of a treaty, between England and the Republic of Colombia, were formally exchanged at London, on the 7th of November. An article has likewise appeared in a publick paper, stating that Britain had taken the island of Cuba under her protection—This, however, has not been confirmed. Britain has already established a friendly intercourse with Mexico, Guatimala, and Colombia, the three republics exactly, which most wish, and with the most reason, to see Cuba emancipated from the Spanish yoke; and from which an expedition was not long since stated to be in preparation, for the invasion of that island. The object of Britain—her very idol—is lucrative commerce, and she will not designely interfere with this, by any of her measures; and will therefore not offend her new friends, unless she can have for it a full equivalent. Perhaps she may find this in securing Cuba to Spain—if so, she will probably do it.

FRANCE.—All is quiet in France. It is perceived by her merchants, that their country has lost a great advantage, by suffering the British to make almost a monopoly of the commerce of the late possessions of Spain and Portugal, on the American continent. They are also fully aware that the cause of this is no other, than that France is a party to the Holy Alliance; and this alliance, we doubt not, they exerceive in their hearts. But they cannot speak freely. Chateaubriand says as much as he dares say; but the government feels too secure to regard much, either his suggestions or the wishes of the merchants.

SPAIN.—Mr. Zca, the late prime minister of Spain, is succeeded in that high station, if such a station can be in Spain, by the Duke del Infantado—This is the very man for whose elevation the Ultra Royalists have been clamorous, as knowing that his views coincided exactly with their own. Accordingly we find, that arrests and banishments are increased, and that they chiefly fall on the most zealous royalists! Such is the infatuation and ignorance prevalent in Spain, that it appears to be believed that a certain bishop in Mexico had been nominated Viceroy of that country, and was there actually holding two large provinces in the most loyal subjection to king Ferdinand—It would seem that an awful crisis, in the affairs of this degraded country, cannot be far distant.

Greece.—We have little that is new to report in regard to Greece. It is alas! not new, that the most unhappy divisions exist among the inhabitants, and especially among the leading men, of this interesting country. These divisions, and the interference of the Holy Alliance, direct or indirect, open or concealed, have long been, and still are, the sources of all our fears, in regard to the final triumph of the Grecian cause. If they were united and true to themselves, and were led on by a Grecian Washington or Bolivar, and if their enemies had no foreign aid, secret or ostensible, we have no doubt they would soon drive the Turks, not only out of their own territories, but, if they so pleased, out of Europe too. As it is, our hopes and fears are mingled—We perceive that a report is in circulation, (derived however from an Austrian vessel from Alexandria, and therefore suspicious,) that a large reinforcement is on its way, to join the Egyptian army in Greece—"consisting of 120 sail of frigates, frigates, and transports, with 30,000 troops"—and that this expedition sailed from Alexandria on the first of October. If this information is correct, we hope that the Greek naval force, which has always been well conducted, will meet this formidable flotilla of barbarians, before they reach the place of their destination.

Russia.—There is no confirmation of the report that Russia had commenced hostile operations against the Ottoman Porte. Possibly such operations have been prevented, by what we find stated in the National Gazette of the 3rd inst.—"The Sublime Porte, in compliance with the wishes of Russia, reduced on the 17th October, the number of Turkish troops in Moldavia and Wallachia, and restored the local governments to their former privileges." The recent recovery of Russia with the Porte has related to these provinces. It appears that she has obtained her object. We have little doubt that she is preparing the way, for an easy march of her troops to Constantinople.

Asia.

Nothing new has reached us from Asia, since our last statement, except some details in relation to the war with the Burmese—which go to show, that the whole of the western and northern parts of the Burman empire, are likely soon to be subject to British domination. This war, we perceive is not popular in Britain; at least with the religious part of the community. The Christian Observer has always appeared to dislike it; and in a late number of that work we find a remark, the purport of which is, that there are no perceptible advantages to be derived from the conquest of the Burmese, that can compensate for the expense of the war, if no regard were had to the more serious consideration of the dreadful waste of human life that it has occasioned.

Africa.

By a late arrival from Gibraltar, we learn that a famine now prevails on a part of the Barbary coast, to such a degree that some of the wretched inhabitants drop down dead in the streets—This is particularly stated to be the case at Tangier. A subscription had been opened at Gibraltar for their relief.

America.

Within the last month we have received intelligence of much importance from our sister republics in the southern part of our continent.

Peru.—It appears, by an arrival at Baltimore from Lima, that on the 1st of October last, the fortress of Callao was still in the hands of the royalists; and although closely blockaded by the Peruvian squadron, it was believed it might still hold out for six months longer. Bolivar is positively stated to be in Upper Peru; and yet an arrival from Pernambuco, at Hartford, Connecticut, has, it is said, brought letters which represent him as having entered the Brazilian territory, probably with a view of exterminating royalty there.—We have even a copy of the proclamation which he is said to have issued. These accounts cannot both be true—which is false, time must decide.

Central America.—The Federal Congress of Guatemala, on the 29th of August last, ratified the Constitution which had been formed by a convention of the preceding year. A British Consul has been received here by the President of the Congress, and treated with the greatest respect. It is evident that the British—and who will blame them?—are endeavouring to be beforehand, not only with all the other European powers, but also with the United States, in establishing a friendly intercourse, and commercial arrangements, with the new American republics.
1826.

View of Publick Affairs.

MEXICO.—The Castle of San Juan de Ulloa has at length capitulated to the Mexican arms; and now not a vestige of the authority of Old Spain remains in that extended republic. The governor, or commander of the garrison, held out till nearly all his men had died by disease and famine—only 75 remained out of 500. Sentinels dropped down and died at their post. The inhabitants of the town on which they had fired, were so affected by their wretched state, as to send them some supplies. The governor, it appears, deliberated, at the last, whether he should not blow up the garrison, rather than surrender. He did not, however, adopt this insane alternative. He obtained an honourable capitulation; and he and the small remains of the famished garrison, were sent to the Havana—and there, after all he had done and suffered, he was received with coldness. Such is the reward of even desperate fidelity, under the reign of the beloved Ferdinand.—Great rejoicings have taken place throughout this republic.—Mr. Poinsett, the American Minister, is treated with great distinction.

COLOMBIA.—This republic took the lead of all her neighbouring sisters, and she still seems to preserve it, in the establishment of free institutions.—She appears, at present, to be in a career of prosperity, to the full as rapid as could reasonably be expected, when we look to the goal from which she started.

BRAZIL.—We have already mentioned the treaty lately made and ratified, between the Emperor of Brazil and his Britannick Majesty. We do not think it necessary to give the details of this treaty—which, in our opinion, is not likely to be of great duration. We hardly believe that Britain will go to war to sustain Don Pedro in his empire. As it is, believe it or not, we have herefore thought and said, his reign and his empire will not long endure. If he commences hostilities with the neighbouring republics, as he probably will, we think that it will terminate, in turning his empire itself into republics. He has never had the shadow of an equitable claim to the Banda Oriental. It was never a Portuguese, but always a Spanish territory, before the late revolution; and he seized it, in a time of its necessity, in 1817. In contending for it, the probability is, that a conflict will commence which will end in his defeat, and the revolutionizing of his whole dominions. The northern part of them, have lately been in a state of insurrection—and there, at present, a scarcity prevails, which approaches to a famine. This scarcity is represented as, in a great measure, the effect of drought; but it is doubtless increased by the want of commerce, and probably also, by the severe measures adopted to suppress the insurrection. Empires and republics—we repeat a remark that we made nearly two years ago—are not calculated, especially when in a forming state, to be good neighbours. It would be wonderful indeed, if Brazil should remain long under an absolute sovereign, when all its territories join on free and independent republics.

BUENOS AIRES AND BANDA ORIENTAL.—From these republics, (for we think we may now reckon Banda Oriental as a republic) information of a very interesting nature has lately received, to the 8th of November, by an arrival at New York. It appears, by an official statement of Juan Antonio Lavalleja, the brave partisan officer who commenced the late revolution in the Banda Oriental, that on the 12th of October last, he gained a decisive victory over Colonel Dantas Manuel, commanding 2000 soldiers, selected from the Brazilian cavalry, and composing the only force in that whole region, out of garrison, of which the patriots had any fear. The action, it appears, was desperate contested on both sides, and was decided chiefly with the sabre. The whole of this extended province, or nearly the whole, except the capital, Monte Video, is now in the hands of the Patriots; and we think there is little doubt that they will hold it. But as the emperor of Brazil has a fleet with which the Patriots cannot contend, he may continue for a time to reinforce his garrison in the capital.—War between the emperor and the whole of the confederated states of the Rio de la Plata, seems to be inevitable; unless he shall renounce, which we suppose he is not likely to do, his unfounded claims to the Banda Oriental.—It has given us great pleasure to observe that the House of Representatives of Buenos Ayres has decreed, that “The right of every man to worship his Creator according to his conscience, shall be inviolable.”

UNITED STATES.—The message of the President of the United States, at the opening of the present session of Congress, was everything that we could wish it—extensive in its views, distinct in its details, perspicuous in its statements, dignified in its manner, and chaste and correct in its language. We cannot pretend to give an analysis of this copious and excellent state paper—nor is it necessary; as it has probably been perused by almost all our readers. But there are two features of the message, at which we must glance for a moment. The first is, that there is a due recognition of the dependence of our country for its prosperity, on the protection and benediction of Almighty God; and that this recognition is properly and happily interwoven with the piece, and does not appear like a patch, sewed on to cover an unseemly defect. The second feature of the message which gives it a charm with us, is, that it recommends, with suitable earnestness, measures for the intellectual improvement of our country. We are reproached by foreigners as being a mere money making, and money keeping people. And after every allowance which ought to be made for the peculiar circumstances of our country, a portion of justice will still remain in the reproach. Intellectual improvement is not sought or patronized as it ought to be, either by individuals, or by the legislative authorities of the United States. We hope that President Adams, who is known to be himself a ripe and various scholar, may have an influence in promoting in others, and in our country generally, a due sense of the value of every species of scientific excellence—It is a shame to our country, which we have long deplored, and frequently mentioned in conversation, that there is not within our whole territory, any thing that deserves the name of an Astronomical Observatory. We do hope that the present Congress will co-operate with the President, in removing this reproach; and in promoting, generally, the measures which he has recommended, that our country may, as he has well described it, fill her implied "contract, to contribute her share of mind, of labour and expense, to the improvement of those parts of knowledge which lie beyond the reach of individual acquisition; and particularly to geographical and astronomical science."

The various subjects of the President's message have been distributed to committees, appointed in both houses, to consider and report upon them. The usual standing committees have also been appointed, and likewise special committees for a variety of purposes; but no measure of importance has yet been decided on.

The Secretary of the Treasury has made a long and elaborate report; on the subjects which fall within his province. The finances of the country appear to be in the most prosperous state; the national debt has rapidly decreased, and now amounts to no more than $283,710,572 60. A large part of the report consists of an argument in favour of promoting the manufactures of our country, by protecting them. A correspondence has also been published between the Secretary of State, and Mr. Addington, the British Charge des Affaires, relative to the treaty which was formed under Mr. Munroe's administration, for the suppression of the slave trade; and which was rejected by the Senate of the United States, because it contained an article permitting the vessels of the contracting parties severally, on the coast of Africa, to be searched by ships of war of either party. The present correspondence is merely explanatory; and the result is, that the treaty is finally rejected by us, and that this, although regretted by the British, will occasion no hostile feelings. We have heretofore expressed our regret at the rejection of this treaty, in which our own executive government saw nothing that was objectionable. We cannot now resume the subject, but will take this opportunity to remark, that on political topicks, on which the minds of our fellow citizens are divided, the Christian Advocate has hitherto been, and will continue to be, silent. Nor do these subjects concern us as citizens of our country, or relate to the all important concerns of religion and morals. Then the Advocate, without regard to patronage, or the wishes of friends or foes, will speak plainly, but we hope not intemperately or uncandidly.

The following article appeared in the National Intelligencer of December 28th: "It is understood that the President has nominated to the Senate as Commissioners on the part of this Government to the Assembly of American Nations at Panama, Richard C. Anderson, of Kentucky, (at present Minister to the Republic of Colombia,) and John Sergeant, of Philadelphia. William B. Rochester, of New York, is nominated as Secretary to the Commission." We have not heard what order has been taken by the Senate on this communication from the President. We presume, however, that the appointments contemplated will be made; and it is our earnest prayer that the deliberations of this Congress of American Nations at Panama, as well as those of our own Congress, may be enlightened by wisdom from above, and issue in such measures as, under the Divine blessing, shall promote freedom, happiness, peace and piety, throughout our extended continent.

ERRATA IN OUR LAST NUMBER.

Page 534, line 28 from bot. for "Many of them at first," read Many of them are not at first.

536, line 22, for "disputations" read dissertations.

565, line 3d from bot., for "in Palestine" read North of Palestine.

Several communications, omitted for want of room in our present number, will appear in our next.
all actual transgressions which proceed from it."

Original sin has been usually distinguished, or divided, by divines, into original sin imputed, and original sin inherent. Original sin imputed, is the guilt of Adam’s first sin, considered as belonging to each individual of his posterity, and subjecting such individual to punishment or suffering, on that account. This point, with the objections to it, were treated at some length in the last lecture; and it is not my purpose to resume the subject at present.

Original sin inherent, is what is called, in the answer before us,— "the want of original righteousness, and the corruption of our whole nature." "The want of original righteousness" says Fisher, "is the want of that rectitude and purity of nature which Adam had in his first creation; consisting in a perfect conformity of all the powers and faculties of his soul to the holy nature of God, and to the law that was written on his heart. And that all mankind are destitute of this original righteousness, appears from the express testimony of God, that among all Adam’s race “there is none righteous, no not one;” and that “by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight.” It follows, upon this want of original righteousness, that all mankind are as it were, naked before God; and that their fig-leaf coverings will stand them in no stead, before his omniscient eye, nor answer the demands of his holy law.”

But original sin consists not in mere privation, or in a want of original righteousness. It consists, also, in “the corruption of our whole nature;” in the universal depravation both of soul and body—in all the faculties of the one, and in all the members of the other. Let us trace for a moment the current of this corruption, through the faculties of the soul; not entering into much reasoning on the subject, but confirming what shall be said by plain declarations from the word of God.

Observe then, that the understanding of man, in his natural depraved state, is darkened and blinded; so that while this moral obscurity continues, he cannot know and receive the things of the Spirit of God.—“The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned—Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart.”

The will of the natural man is depraved by sin. It is averse to the chief good; it is biased toward evil; it acts with hostility and rebellion against God. “Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life,” said our Saviour—“The carnal mind,” says St. Paul, “is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God.”

The affections of man, in his natural state are disordered, perverted and misplaced. They are set on trifling vanities and sinful pleasures; they attach themselves to ten thousand improper and forbidden objects; while they utterly refuse to be placed on God, as the supreme good. Their language constantly is—“Who shall show us any good?” that is, any earthly good. And they constantly lead every unsanctified child of Adam to “worship and serve the creature more than the Creator, who is God over all, blessed forever.”

The memory of man partakes of the effects of his depravity. It is prone to retain what is vain and unprofitable, and to drop its hold on what is spiritual and truly advantageous. Hence the complaint of Moses; “Of the Rock that begat thee, thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee.” This, indeed, was the frequent charge brought against the Israelites, notwithstanding the series of miracles that they almost constantly witnessed.—“They forgot the God of their salvation.” But the charge is not confined to them. We find it mentioned as a general characteristick of the wicked—that they “forget God;”—that “God is not in all their thoughts;” and experience abundantly confirms this truth.

The conscience of man is affected by his depravity. Sometimes it is violated, till it becomes seared “as with a hot iron.” But when this is not the case, it too often performs its office imperfectly; not reproving and condemning when it ought, especially for secret sins. Sometimes it is so perverted that, in the language of Scripture, it “calls evil good, and good evil; puts light for darkness, and darkness for light.”

In regard to the body, it was, you may remember, shown in the last lecture, that it is the body which is the instrument of corrupting the soul;—that in Scripture “the flesh” is represented as the seat and source of sin. It is in consequence of sin, that our bodies have become mortal—they are polluted and defiled in all their members.
Hence the apostolick caution—
"Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin."

Thus you perceive that the corruption of our whole nature is most apparent; that it is impotent, and even hostile, to whatever is holy or spiritually good; and strongly inclined, or biased, to what is evil. Of unregenerated man, it has been as true in every age of the world as it was before the flood, "that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart is only evil continually." But in opposition to the statement you have now heard—to the doctrine of our catechism, and to what I think has been clearly shown to be the doctrine of Scripture—there are those who contend that the tendency of our nature is to good, rather than to evil. In a conversation I once had with an individual of some shrewdness, who cherished this sentiment—the sentiment that children, from the first, incline to good rather than to evil—I requested him to state, on what ground he supposed that he could support his opinion. He affirmed that this opinion was, with him, the result of personal observation on his own children; who he did not suppose had a better nature than others. He said, that by instructing them carefully in their duty, by warning them constantly of the dangers to which they were exposed, and by admonishing them faithfully and tenderly, as soon as he perceived them going wrong, and by restraining them, while they were unable to judge for themselves; he had not failed to render them all, examples of correct behaviour and amiable deportment. He said nothing about genuine piety in his children; and I fear knew nothing about it in his own experience. I replied to him thus—By your own showing, it required your vigorous and uninter rupted efforts, to preserve, or to recal, your children from wrong courses; but on the supposition that the tendencies of their nature were to virtue, rather than to vice, they should have gone right without any of these efforts; nay, they should have gone right, of themselves speedily returned to what was right, even in opposition to endeavours to mislead them. The man concerned, professed to be convinced of his error at once; and said he would not argue in opposition to the convictions of his own mind.

But alas! how often is it seen, that all the good instructions, all the seasonable advice and admonition, and all the influence of the best example, are wholly ineffectual, to form children even to an external regard to the laws of virtue, order and sobriety?—In opposition to all, how frequently do they become examples of flagitious vice? And even in those instances in which, by the Divine blessing on a good education and example, operating on a happy natural temperament, the young are formed to a fair and amiable exterior, how often is it evident, that they have still no inward relish for, but an utter dis tase and dislike of, all serious piety, of all holy exercises? It is then as evident from experience and observation as it is from Scripture, that the tendencies of our nature are not to good, but uniformly and prevalently to evil. Indeed, I am of the opinion, that in this, as in almost every other instance, an accurate observation on the state of the world, will be found one of the best commentaries on the word of God.

Whence, but from the natural and invariable corruption of the human mind, has proceeded that awful preponderance of moral evil, with which the world has, at all times, been filled? The tendencies of nature, however obstructed by incidental causes, will at last prevail. If these tendencies, in the human mind, had been naturally and preponderantly in favour of virtue, there would have been, at least some period, in which mankind would have been generally or prevalently virtuous, pious and holy. We do, indeed, look for such a period; but we look for it from the effusion of the Holy Spirit, to transform the minds of men, and not from their amelioration by any other cause. But such a period has never yet been witnessed. On the contrary, what is the history of the human kind? It is little else than the history of crime and guilt—of war, of fraud, of tyranny, of violence, of treachery, of oppression, of the means which one man, or set of men, have used, to exalt themselves, by depressing, overreaching, or destroying their competitors. Nay, what are almost all the laws of society? Are they anything but guards against the vices of men, which, but for these guards, would destroy society itself? Yes: every gaol, and every gibbet, and every law, is a monument, or a record, of the prevalent wickedness of man. Those codes of laws by which legislators and sages have immortalized themselves, serve to show how difficult it has been, in every age, to guard effectually against the overwhelming torrent of human depravity.

I shall dismiss this topic, with a few remarks on the proper import of the phrase total depravity; because it is one that you often hear in religious discourse, and because it seems to be frequently misunderstood. It may be useful, I think, to state the import of this phrase, both positively and negatively. You will observe then, that by total depravity, we mean that all the human powers are depraved by sin, and that every individual of the human race, in his natural state, is destitute of all holiness:

but we do not mean that all men are sinful in the same degree; much less, that every man is as bad as he can be. There are many degrees of active malignity, and some un Sanctified men are infinitely worse than others; if not naturally, yet as soon almost as comparisons can be formed. When, therefore, you hear the expression total depravity, used in the preaching of the gospel, or meet with it in the writings of the divines of our church, you are to understand by it—1. That all the powers of man, without exception, have been reached by this depravity; and in regard to moral subjects, are affected by it. 2. That this depravity has totally deprives man of that inward holy disposition, which is essentially necessary to the acceptable service of God; so that this holy disposition will not be possessed till it be restored by the renewing influence of Divine grace. But 3. That it is by no means to be understood that every unrenewed man is, in temper, heart and disposition, as bad as he might be, or as some actually are. On the contrary, there is in many unrenewed men, not only a great sensitivity of natural conscience, but a governing regard to those principles of equity, justice, humanity and benevolence, which render them amiable in domestick life, and highly useful and honourable, as members of political society. The young man who came to our Saviour, to inquire his duty, had such qualities as a man, that the Redeemer looked on him and loved him; yet he had no real and supreme love to God, but on the contrary, was supremely attached to the world. And hundreds and thousands of the same character, are now found under the light of the gospel.

(To be continued.)
LETTERS FROM AN AGED MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL TO HIS SON, ON THE DUTIES OF THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

LETTER XVI.

My dear Timothy—Agreeably to an intimation contained in my last letter, I now send you my second Catalogue of Books—for the enlargement of a Clerical Library.

BIBLICAL LITERATURE.

Hebrew Bibles.

Kemnigott’s Hebrew Bible, with the various readings.

De Rossi’s additions to do.

J. H. Michaelis’ Hebrew Bible.

(1) J. Jahn’s do.

Doderlein’s and J. H. Meiner’s do.

(1) Walton’s Polyglott Bible, with Castell’s Lexicon.

Lexicons.

(1) Simon’s Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon, with additions by Eichhorn.

J. D. Michaelis’ Supplement.

Stockius’ Key to the Hebrew Language.

Robertson’s Thesaurus.

Gussefius’s Commentary on the Hebrew Language.

(2) Schulten’s Institutions.

Schoedler’s do.

Buxtorf’s Thesaurus.

(1) Leusden’s Cempend of Buxtorf.

Storr’s Observations on the Analogy and Syntax of the Hebrew Tongue.

Willard’s Hebrew Grammar.

Syriac Scriptures.

Syriac Pentateuch, taken from the English Polyglott, by G. W. Kirch.

(2) Syriac Psalter, with a Latin Version, by T. Erpenius, and notes by J. A. Dathe.

(1) ————by Leusden and Schaaf—London edition, the best.

Lexicons.

(2) C. Schaaf’s do.

(1) Castell’s Syriac Lexicon, edited by J. D. Michaelis.

Grammars.

(1) Michaelis’ Syriac Grammar.

(1) Introduction to the Syriac language, by Nolan.

Chaldee.

Beside the parts of the Old Testament written in Chaldee—The Jewish Targums. Walton’s Polyglott contains the best of them; as well as the Syriac and Arabic Scriptures generally.

Lexicons.

(1) Buxtorf’s.

H. Opitius’.

(2) J. Jahn’s.

Grammars.

(1) Michaelis’.

(2) Masclef’s.

Parkhurst’s—Without points.

Arabic Scriptures.

(1) Erpenius’ Arabic Pentateuch.

Arabic and Latin Bible, by the Congregation at Rome de propaganda fide.

Lexicons.

J. Golius’ Arabic Lexicon.

Richardson’s do. Dictionary.

Wilmet’s Lexicon of the Koran.

Grammars.

(1) Rosenmüller’s Arabic Institutes.

De Sacy’s Arabic Grammar—French.

Greek of the Old Testament.

(2) The Septuagint Version, edited by L. Bos.

(3) do. do. J. E. Grabe and J. J. Breitinger.

(1) do. do. Holmes and Bos, from the Valpye press.

Trommuus’ Concordance of the Septuagint.

Greek of the New Testament.

Erasmus’, fifth edition—fol. printed 1535.

R. Stephens’ do. do. 1550.

Theodore Beza’s do. do. 1598.

(2) Jno. Mills’ with various readings, do. do. 1707.

(2) J. Jac. Griesbach do. several editions.

(2) G. Ch. Knapp do. 8vo. 1813.

(1) J. A. H. Tittman, 18mo. 1830.

Greek Lexicons.

(1) Schleusner’s Thesaurus of the Septuagint, or LXX.

Passer’s Lexicon.

What’s do.

(2) Ewing’s do.

(2) Davidson’s do.
Greek grammar, and works illustrative of the style of the New Testament.

Ewing’s Grammar, connected with his Lexicon.

Glassius’ Sacred Philology.

(2) Blackwall’s Sacred Classics.

Criticism.

Critici Sacri—The work of a number of authors.

(2) Capellius’ Critica Sacra.

Carpzovius’ do.

(1) Leigh’s do.

Glossius’ Philologia Sacra, by Bauer.

(2) Walton’s Prolegomena, by Dathius.

(2) Wetstein’s Prolegomena, by Semler.

(2) Bengel’s Apparatus Criticus.

(2) Griesbach’s Symbola Critica.

(2) ——Commentarius Criticus.

(1) Marsh’s Lectures.

Horae Biblicae, by Charles Butler.

Institutes of Biblical Criticism, by A. Gerard.

(2) Kennicott’s Dissertatio Generalis—This accompanies his Bible with various readings.

(2) Father Simon’s Critical History of the Old Testament.

(2) do. do. of the New Testament.

(3) do. do. of the Versions of the New Testament.

(2) Schulten’s vetus et regia via Hebrae,

(2) ——Philological and critical animations, on various places of the Old Testament.

(1) Bowyer’s New Testament, with conjectural emendations and additions, by Markland, Michaelis, &c.

(2) Bowyer’s critical remarks on the Old and New Testament.

(1) Beza’s translation of the N. T. with remarks critical and theological.

Some of the works of Pococke, Lightfoot, Selden, Pearson, Bochart, Plaff, Pearce, Limborch, Elsner, Bos, Wolfius, Raphelius, and Vigerus, are of authority in Biblical learning and criticism; and an opportunity to procure any of them, at a low price, ought to be embraced. Warburton’s Divine Legation of Moses, and Faber’s late reply to that singular work, may both be read with great advantage.

Introductions to the Study of the Sacred Scriptures.

(1) Beausobre’s and L’Enfant’s Introduction to the reading of the New Testament.

Calmet’s Dissertations preparatory to the reading of the Sacred Scriptures. French.

Carpzovius’ Introduction to all the Canonical books of the Old Testament.

Harwood’s Introduction to the study and knowledge of the New Testament.

(1) Jahn’s compendious Introduction to the Sacred books of the Old Testament.

Pere Lamys’ Apparatus Bibliicus—From the French.

Leusden’s Philologus Ebrazus.

——Ebracus mixtus.

——Ebraco-Grabus.

Semler’s apparatus for a liberal interpretation of the Old Testament.

Do. do. do. of the New Testament.

(1) Michaelis’ Introduction to the N. T., translated from the German by Herbert Marsh.

(1) Michaelis’ Commentaries on the laws of Moses, translated from the German by A. Smith.

(2) Eichhorn’s Introductions to the Old Testament.

(2) Berthold’s Historical and Critical Introduction to all the Sacred Books.

The German writers here mentioned, are replete with erudition; but the two last mentioned, especially, treat the sacred writings with almost as little reverence as if they were mere human compositions.

Sacred Geography.

Bochart’s Geographia Sacra.

Reland’s Palestine illustrated.

Bollerman’s Biblical Geography.

(1) Well’s Sacred Geography.

(1) The Scripture Atlas; or a series of maps to illustrate the Old and New Testament—with an index, alphabetically arranged, showing the latitude and longitude of every place mentioned in the Sacred Scriptures.

Jewish Antiquities, Oriental Customs, &c.

Carpzovius’ Apparatus, historical and critical of the Sacred Volume, and of the Hebrew Nation.

K. Iken’s Hebrew Antiquities.

Reland’s Antiquities of the Ancient Hebrews.

(2) Pares’s Hebrew Antiquities, shortly described.

Letters from an Aged Minister of the Gospel to his Son

J. B. Koppe's Greek New Testament, illustrated with continual annotations.—This work was commenced by Koppe and continued by different authors.

The writers, whose names and works are here included in brackets, are the best philological commentators, whose works are more or less tinctured with the licentious principles of modern criticism.

Ecclesiastical and Miscellaneous Tracts.

C. Kellius' Opuscula Academica.

(1) J. D. Michaelis Syntagmata Commentariaurum. J. F. Morus' Theological and Philosophical Dissertations.

(1) G. C. Storr's Opuscula Academica. Commentationes Theologicae, editae velthuas, Kuinoel, and Ruperti.

(1) Tittman's Opuscula Theologica.

(1) Schmucker's translation of an Elementary Course of Biblical Theology, by Professors Storr and Flatt, with additions—Highly valuable.

Biblical students may also read with great advantage the following works.

Bryant's Observations and Inquiries relative to various parts of Ancient History.

Analysis of Ancient Mythology—Highly instructive.

Vindication of Josephus' testimony to Christ.

Observations on the Plagues inflicted on the Egyptians.

Dissertations on the Prophecy of Balsam, &c.

Sir William Jones' annual lectures, before the Society in India of which he was president.

CONTROVERSY ON LIBERTY AND NECESSITY.

The amicable controversy on this subject, between Leibnitz and Clarke, published in 1717.

Hartley's Observations on Man, &c.

President Edwards on the Freedom of the Will.
ATHÉISTICAL AND SCEPTICAL CONTROVERSY—AND ON MATER-IALISM.

Hobbes' Leviathan.
Spinoza's Ethics, more geometrico
demonstrata.
Cudworth's True Intellectual System
of the Universe.
Dodwell and Collins: and Clarke's masterly replies to both, and his "Answer to Toland's Amyntor."

DEISTICAL CONTROVERSY.

(1) West on the Resurrection.
(1) Lyttleton on the Conversion of St.
Paul.
(1) Sherlock's Trial of the Witnesses.
(1) Horne's Letters on Infidelity.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Basil's History of the Jews.
Lampe's Compend of Ecclesiastical History.
Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent.
(1) L'Enfant's History of the Council of Constance.
Perrin's History of the Waldenses.
Jones' do.
Morland's do.
Bingham's Origins Ecclesiastical.
Beausobre's History of the Reformation.
La Vall's History of the Reformation
in France.
Cave's Historia Literaria.
Warner's Ecclesiastical History of England.
Limborch's History of the Inquisi-
tion.
Baker's do.
Fox's Book of Martyrs.
Woodrow's History of the Church of Scotland.
Crookshank's do.
Cook's do.
(1) Palmer's Nonconformist's Memorial.
Crosby's History of the Baptists.
Sewell's History of the Quakers.
Gough's do.

CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

Vitrina de Synagoga veter.
Owen on the Nature of a Christian Church.
Rutherford's Aaron's Rod.
Slater's Original Draught of the Primitive Church.
Skinner's Primitive Truth and Order vindicated.
Brown's Letters to Innes.

FATHERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

A complete catalogue of these may be seen in the 3d column of the Chronological Table, at the end of Mosheim's Church History.— The ecclesiastical writers of the first six centuries of the Christian era, are those only which are usually called Fathers. Archbishop Wake is the author of a good transliteration of the Apostolical Fathers, accompanied with valuable observations.—This is a common book.

PROTESTANT REFORMERS.

The works of the Protestant Reformers are all of some value, as manifesting the opinions of the authors—Some of them are of the highest value. A list of the names of those who were the most distinguished, and any of whose works
are worth possessing, is here given.
I consider the reformation as extending into the 17th century, till the death of Queen Elizabeth of England.

On the Continent of Europe.

John Huss,
Jerom of Prague,
Martin Luther,
Phil. Melancthon,
Zuingle,
Ecolampadius, Carolstadt,
Capito,
Leo Judae,
Spalatinus,
Melchior Adam,
Myconius,
Cruciger,
Fagius,
Urbanus Regius, Bucer, Hedio,
Brulius,
Justus Jonas,
Pelican, Bogunhagius,
John a Lasco, Marlorat,
Peter Martyr,
Musculus,
Hyperius,
John Calvin,
Farel,
Viret,
Peter Ramus,
Bullinger, Tremellius,
Osiander,
Lewis Lavater,
Brontius,
Olevian,
Andreas,
Zanchius,
Agricola,
Francis Janius,
Theodore Beza,
Joseph Scaliger,
Polanus,
Drusius,
J. J. Grunius,
Pareus,
Erpenius,
Piscator,
Wallzus,
Altingius,
Fred. Spanheim,
Ralph Hospinion.

In England and Ireland.

John Wickliff,
John Lambert,
John Frith,
Miles Coverdale,
Thomas Bilney,
Wm. Tindal,
John Rogers,
John Bale,
Lawrence Saunders,
John Hooper,
Thomas Cooper,
Rowland Taylor,
John Bradford,
Nicholas Ridley,
Hugh Latimer,
John Philpot.
was himself the soul of the
tion in Scotland.—He had,
re, able coadjutors, both
the clergy and the laity.
Crie’s Life of Knox.
Reformed Church, as contrasted from the Lutheran,
urnfully divided and cor-
by the innovations of Armi-Those who adhered to his es at and after the Synod of ere called Remonstrants;
ong them, the celebrated and Episcopius were the
They were opposed by a able writers in the Dutch who remained steadfast in istick doctrines. Mark, re, and Witsius, are amon-
t able of this class. Stapper, ch in Switzerland, and the
and Turretines of Ge-Calvinistick writers of just celebrity. Armiif not introduced, was first ed in England, by Laud, afs Archbishop, countenanced
I. in the latter part of his Till that time, the estab-Church of England was as alinistick as the Puritans
ho left it on account of ce-
and human exactions.
LANEOUS: or authors and works
acter not mentioned under the fore-heads.

Scotch.

Brown, John Fox,
vel, Wm. Whitaker, Parker, John Whitgift, Saudys, Alexander Nowel,
Deering, Wm. Perkins,
Fulké, George Abbot.

In Scotland.
Hamilton, the first Scotch re-
and martyr,
x, John Craig, Wishart, John Welch,
ollock, Geo. Bucannan.

English Puritans and Dissenters.

Bolton’s works,
Bishop’s do. Hildersham,
Sibbs’ do. John Bunyan, Ward’s do. Philip Henry,
Hales, of Eton, do. Gill, Goodwin’s do. Wesley,
Dr. T. Jackson’s do. Evans,
Manton’s do. Wright,
Twisse’s do. Grove,
Burgess’ do. Earl,
Calamy’s do. Bradbury, Gatker’s do. Boyse, Charnock’s do. Bennet,
Taylor (Nathaniel) Harris,
Perkins, Jennings,
Preston, Grosvenor.

English Episcopallians.

Usher, Fleetwood, Wilkins, Atterbury, Burridge, Blair,
Scott, Leighton,
South, Bishop Reynolds,
Norris, Bishop Hall,
Lucas, Taylor (Jeremy)
Sherlock, Horsley,
Spratt, Louth,
Hornbeck, Jortin,
Hopkins, Harvey,
Boyle, Toplady,
Scougall, Whitefield,
Law, Romain.

SERMONS.

Bordaloue’s, South’s, Saurin’s, Clarke’s,
Berry-street Sermons.

POLITE LITERATURE.

Bell’s edition of the English Poets,
Adventurer, Beattie’s Works,
Connoisseur, Edinburgh Review,
World, Quarterly do.
Lounger, Eclectic do.
Looker on, British Critick.

If you are ready to indulge surprise, that I should give you such an extended catalogue of books,
when I know you are not able to purchase a fourth part of them,
nor ever likely, perhaps, to be so,
I remark, that I had several reasons for doing what I have done. You may hereafter find both the means and the inclination for enlarging your library, far beyond your present expectations—Something of this kind I have myself experienced.
But many of the works I have named, have been mentioned, solely because you may be able to find

H.
one or two of a class, without ever having an opportunity to purchase any of the rest. In several instances, if you obtain one of the best authors of a particular class, it would be nearly, or quite superfluous, to purchase any other. There is, however, some use in knowing the principal writers of reputation, in the several departments of theological knowledge, although but a small proportion of them, should ever make a part of your own library; and this has had some influence in leading me to extend this second catalogue. In addition to other considerations, it occurred, that you might be concerned, as I have been, not only in naming books for a private library, but for one of a public institution; which ought to be large and various, on the subject of theology, as well as on other subjects.

There are two descriptions of books, however, which I particularly wish you not to suppose that I have put down, merely with a view to enlarge a catalogue. The first, embraces those which relate to the Syriac, Chaldee, and Arabic languages. I do hope that the time has arrived, when our young clergymen, especially, will think that these languages are worth their serious attention. Some of those who expect to be missionaries, may find them of primary importance to their usefulness; and there is no one, to whom they would not be sensibly advantageous. Neither is the acquisition of them, nearly as difficult as is commonly supposed. It is now getting to be common for our candidates for the ministry, to be pretty well grounded in the Hebrew; and of this the Syriac and Chaldee are only dialects, soon acquired, when the parent tongue is well understood. Schultens, certainly a very competent judge, affirms that the Hebrew itself, can never be well understood, without a knowledge of the Arabic, as well as the Chaldee and Syriac; and accordingly his method of teaching was, to combine the whole into one system. Scott, you know, acquired and taught Arabic, after he was sixty years of age; and he had far more engagements beside, than clergymen commonly have. The secret of learning any language is, to set apart a short space for studying it diligently, every day; and not to be impatient because it cannot be mastered at once—The progress, at the end of a year, will be surprising. The other description of books, to which I wish to direct your special attention for a moment, is, the Greek and Latin fathers. I am as little disposed as any one, to consider the fathers as of any absolute authority in the church. But there is certainly a considerable advantage in being acquainted with them. Begin, my son, and read them gradually and deliberately. They are, indeed, not easily obtained in this country. But begin with such as you can first get—the order in which they are read, is not of great importance.

The titles of Latin and French authors, I have generally given in English, and sometimes with abbreviations; because most booksellers will be more likely to know what book you want, when you inquire for it under an English and short title, than if you mention what a Latin or French author, has put in his title-page.

A number of English reviews are mentioned, but you will of course take but one; and I think that the Eclecticick, which is avowedly Calvinistic, will best suit your taste and answer your purpose; especially if you also read the North American Review, published in our own country. This latter work has always been conducted under Unitarian or Socinian influence, and some very exceptionable articles have appeared in it occasionally. Of late, however, it has been less objectionable, and in general, the articles are ably written. It is of importance to every literary man, and to clergymen not less than others, to keep what may be called an account current with the state of literature and improvement, in the world at large. Reviews are useful for this purpose, as well as for the good writing which they often contain; and for the summary account they furnish of valuable publications. It is to be regretted, that they are often so deeply tinctured with the prejudices and peculiar notions of those who conduct them.

I cannot conclude what I have said, in regard to books and reading, without distinctly reminding you, that all your attainments should be made with a view to ministerial usefulness. On a dying bed, or in the near view of eternity, it will afford us no comfort that we have read and learned much, if we have not applied it all to some useful purpose. It is a dreadful character, when nothing better can be said of a minister of the gospel, than that he was an accomplished scholar; and of such characters, the number, alas! has not been small. See to it, my son, that all your acquirements be consecrated to your Master's service. Make them with this view, and nothing will so much quicken your diligence; direct them to this end, and nothing will render them so satisfactory.

Affectionately yours,

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A CHRISTMAS HYMN.

"Hark from on high! those blissful strains;
Whence can such sweetness be?
Have angels waked their golden harps,
With Heaven's own minstrelsy?
Or do we hear the cherub voice
Of infant bands, who raise,
Soaring from earth, celestial notes
In their Creator's praise?"

Thus spake the shepherds,—yet with dread;
So strange the sounds they heard,
While o'er their slumbering flocks, they kept
Their wonted nightly guard.

And soon they saw a dazzling light,
Beam through the starry way;
And shining seraphs, clustering where
The infant Jesus lay.

They came a Saviour's birth to tell,
And tunes of rapture sing:
Hence the glad notes that filled the air—
Each swept his loudest string.

But now, in accents soft and kind,
The chieftain angel said,
"Heaven's tidings of great joy we bear, Shepherds, be not afraid."

Then suddenly th' angelic choir
Renewed the rapturous song;
While heaven's wide portals caught the sound,
And echoed it along.

"To all the kindreds of the earth,
Good news to-day we bring—"
In David's city, lo! is born
A Saviour, Christ the king.
The Sovereign Lord of heaven and earth,
In swaddling bands is bound!
The Prince of Peace—transcendent grace!
Is in a manger found!
All glory be to God on high,
On earth good will, and peace:
From all above, and all below,
Let praises never cease."

Yes, and whence'er this day returns,
Till time itself shall close,
We'll hail the morn when Bethle'm's star
O'er Bethle'm's babe arose.

Miscellaneous.

ON PSALMODY.

(Continued from p. 543. vol. iii.)

Winnabro', July 7, 1825.

My esteemed Friend,—To day you may think me departing from my straight line of duty. But remember, I am not preaching sermons, but writing letters: and for my letter I may take what motto I please. I choose to-day to take one from a book which is not the word of God.—M'Master's Apology, 3d edition, page 20.

"Why, in a matter of doubtful disputation, to say the least of it, rend the church of Christ? Consider, ye friends of godliness, the great importance of union in the household of faith. Seriously reflect on the fearful consequences of disunion among those who love the Lord, and who ought with cordiality to love one another."

This, and what immediately follows, I call eloquent; and it ought to be seriously considered by every lover of the Lord Jesus Christ. Wo to the man, that will cherish discord among the true disciples of his Lord! Wo to those who will tear asunder the bond of Christian unity, or keep it asunder when there is no sufficient cause! In proposing a plan for union among the members of Christ's spiritual body, the author from whom I took my motto is very defective: for the Episcopalians (whose form of worship and church government, the body to which he belongs have solemnly sworn to destroy, as far as lies in their power,) also sing a versification of David's Psalms. Other sections of the church, which sing the same version, are so bitterly opposed to one another, that they cannot sit down together at the same Lord's table. Can we not devise some scriptural plan for uniting every Christian in the world in the same external worship, as well as in the same sentiments? I propose the following for your consideration.

1. In all our publick worship, let the exercises of the day be commenced with the words of the Apostles, at the beginning of their epistles: "Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. i. 7; 1 Cor. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 2; Gal. i. 3; Eph. i. 2; Phil. i. 2; Col. i. 2; 1 Thes. i. 2; 2 Thes. i. 2; 1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2; Titus i. 4; Phil. i. 3; 1 Pet. i. 2; 2 Pet. i. 2; 2 John i. 3; Jude i. 2. Almost every epistle has the same introductory sentiment, and very nearly the same words repeated. This is sufficient to show the divine for using it. No person, one d think, could reasonably ob-
ously admit the opening of religious excesses every Sabbath in the same Singing. Let a literal trans-a of the Psalms be sung. We not so much authority for this,
evry few would refuse to open lips in songs of praise dictated
e Holy Spirit.
Praying. In this our Saviour nently commands us to use his words. 'When ye pray say,' &c.
xi. 2. In the scriptures there very great number of prayers:
consisting only of a verse or others of a whole chapter: upsto Forty of the Psalms are
ers. These scriptural prayers
ess every desire which the
of God authorizes. Accord-the circumstances and the
of the congregation, the mi-
ny may connect some of the dif-
short prayers, and express petitions to the Most High.
said indeed, that the Lord's alone, expresses every thing
we are authorized to desire;
it is a collection of the rays of eight into a focus, and of its-sufficient for prayer according e command, "Let thy words
" (Eccl. 5. 2.) "When ye use not vain repetitions." I think there are not many ious persons, who would not in other pure scriptural peti-evry word of which was dic-
by the Holy Spirit.
Preaching. Our Saviour told tdisciples, that the Holy Spirit
"teach them all things, and all things to their rememwhich he had said to them." xiv. 26. He commanded them preach the gospel to every ure." What is the scriptural ing of the word "preach?" It proclaim" the revealed truths world proclaim the truths of
and nothing but the truths of and every Christian can with a clear conscience attend his preaching. He can do this by reading;
or, which is better, by repeating
from memory, "verbatim," a considerable portion of the scripture, every day that the congregation meets.
"Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." Acts xv. 21. In the Bible there surely is enough of vary to suit every case, &c. &c.
Every Christian ought to sit and listen with pleasure to the pure and undefiled truths of God.
5. Let one of the apostolick bendictions close the exercises.
Now, if all Christians could meet together, could they not unite in sweetest harmony, in every sentiment uttered, "when every word and every sentence was taken directly from the scriptures?"
Say, my brother, what think you
of my plan? Would it not, if universally adopted, bring together the discordant parties, heal the wounds
of the church, prevent future divisions, and preserve that harmony which the Psalmist extols so highly.
"Behold how good and how pleasant it is, for brethren to dwell together in unity." Ps. cxxxiii. 1.
But methinks I hear you object,
not so much to the intrinsic excel-ence of the plan itself, as to the impossibility of introducing it. You especially object to my proposing
it, because it is not my practice.
But you will observe, that I have not given it as my opinion that we ought thus to confine ourselves to the word of God; notwithstanding some of our friends charge us with idolatry, for bringing human composures into the solemn exercises of the sanctuary; and in most dreadful denunciations quote against us the text—"Cursed be the deceiver which hath in his flock
a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing."— My plan is given for the benefit of those who think that this text applies to the subject. Let them inroduce it. Let them reason and declaim on it. If they convince me that hymns of human composure
are sinful, I shall as firmly believe that prayers of human composure,
and especially extemporaneous effusions, are sinful—I shall believe also that sermons of human composure are sinful. And if in psalmody, a pure offering means the very words of sacred scripture, then certainly in prayer, a pure offering will mean the very words of sacred scripture; and in preaching too, a pure offering will mean the very words of sacred scripture. You cannot convince me of one, without convincing me of all. And shall I present a mixed offering, part pure and part corrupt? It would be absurd. Let all the exercises of the sanctuary be of a piece. Let them all be the very words of sacred scripture; or let them all be the sentiments of sacred scripture, so arranged and expressed, as we may think most conducive to our growth
in grace.

Supposing then that some man of active aspiring genius should undertake to reform the church, and make it perfectly pure and perfectly united: Could he, I ask, adopt a better plan than the one proposed?
And if he should adopt this plan,
he certainly ought in his arguments,
to be specially pointed on the subject of scriptural preaching. He ought to insist that “More depends on this part, than on all the other parts taken together. It was the introduction of human discourses,
instead of reading or reciting sacred scripture, that first corrupted
the church. By human preaching, mere enthusiasts and fanatics scattered the firebrands of spiritual death, and hurrying multitudes
through the wild vagaries of their corrupt imaginations, plunged them
into inextricable labyrinths of error.
By preaching human compositions,
heresies have been spread and maintained, in every age and in every country. A glance at history with half an eye, will discover the fact.
Some want to blame human psalmody for introducing or spreading error in New England. Nonsense!
It was human preaching!—It was metaphysical discussions on inexplicable subjects, produced by the pride of human intellect, which devastated that flourishing garden of piety, and sowed and cherished the vile weeds of Unitarianism. Suppose now we could, for one Sabbath day, have presented before us, all the preachers of the different denominations in our country, and hear what they utter: What a dreadful scene! Some, instead of reading the pure truths of the gospel, are venturing their anathemas against other denominations—Some are imposing the ravings of an uncult-vated, but excited imagination, on the people—Some are diving in the waters of metaphysical mysticism,
and collecting the oppositions of science, to astonish their admiring audiences—Some are entertaining
the polished wits of the age with the pure essence of malice against Jesus, which they had carefully distilled and refined the preceding week, in the alamb of their brain
—Some are eulogizing the Pope,
the saints, the relics of the dead,
and all the trumpery of superstition. But O how little compartively, of the pure word of God! Ye Christians who love the truth, why do you not banish, as a deadly pestilence, that system of human decamentation, so fraught with moral desolation and spiritual death?”

Thus he might speak, and much more. He might take up the book written in favour of Rouse’s version of the Psalms, and use every argument which they contain, by changing sometimes the words “psalms,” hymns,” “songs,” into “pracking,” “prayers,” &c. He could use the same awful denunciations
against those who differ from him.
He could give his reasons, why the commands to pray, meant only to use the literal petitions of the word
God is still the same strange fire, and the intrusions of an unhallowed hand upon his ark are as offensive now as formerly they were. ‘His glory he will not give to another.’ Whether are those who use the sacred scripture psalms (sermons and prayers) or those who employ our multiplied hymn books (extemporaneous effusions), most in danger, in case of psalmody (social worship), of unwarrantable innovation?”

Thus might our reformer reason in the words of another. And he might turn round to that other, and say to him, “Thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art, that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest dost the same things. And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?” Rom. ii. 1, 3.

I have given the above as a sample of the reasoning which might be used with those who oppose gospel psalmody. With their principles, I cannot see how they could resist it. Pardon me, my brother, if I compare their system, according to their own reasonings, to a house built with one corner on a rock, and the other corners on the sand—it will certainly fall. If human productions in the worship of God be blasphemy and idolatry, rest assured that the corner psalmody, of their building, will not, when the storm comes, support the other corners, prayer, preaching, and the benediction, which are merely human productions.

But I am troubling you too long on this subject, to which our hearts do not, as yet, give consent. But let our friends, who make the Psalms an article of unity, and denounced the vengeance of God upon us, as if we were rending the body of Christ by not joining them—by throwing away our human hymns and swearing to their human testimony—let them, I say, receive consistent plan, and show me how it will operate in practice: then I shall have the means of judging whether I ought to join them. I cannot think of it, before the proper specimen is given.

In my next, I shall give you my sentiments on Christian unity. In the mean time, let us "follow peace with all men, and holiness." And may the God of peace be with us!

Yours, in the Lord Jesus,

JOHN McKINNEY.

(To be continued.)

LETTERS FROM A MOTHER TO A DAUGHTER, ON THE SUBJECT OF EARLY EDUCATION.

(Continued from p. 21.)

LETTER IV.

Sept. 3, 1821.

Your Charles, my dear Mary, is now able to attend church with you; and this must be reduced to a habit. He may, even at present, become fond of attending the house of God, and may understand something of the instruction there given—particularly if your good minister "lets fall, in each sermon, a handful for the children."

When you return from the publick service, require an account of what he has heard, and a recital of his Sabbath lesson. Let nothing tempt you to neglect teaching him the "Assembly's Shorter Catechism." Instructed in this, he will be furnished with a complete compendium of Christian doctrines: and one so concise and perfect, I am persuaded, is no where else to be found. Let his future destiny be what it may—should he even be shipwrecked on a heathen shore without a Bible—he will have a knowledge of what, with the teaching of the Holy Spirit, may make him wise unto salvation. And when his own mind, in whatever way or at whatever period, shall become awakened to more serious and deep reflection on religious subjects, he will not be likely to run into error, nor be carried about by every wind of doctrine. If moreover others should apply to him for instruction, he will always be ready to afford it; and for himself, he will ever more and more appreciate the value, and feel the force, of the doctrines contained in this excellent summary of revealed truth.

Experience has taught me, that an hour before sunset, on the Sabbath evening, may usually be most profitably and pleasantly spent, in giving religious instruction to children and servants. But whatever be the period appointed for the purpose, let the Shorter Catechism be the ground work, or text book, of your labours. Much instruction may arise out of every question. For example—"What is the chief end of man?" "Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever." From this you may proceed to show the right which God has over mankind—that it is but reasonable that they should serve him. You may point out the perfect law by which God does require his intelligent creatures to glorify him; and may show how far short we fall of this in all our conduct. It may be profitable to particularize the instances, in which your little charge have greatly erred the last week, or the last day: and strive especially to convince them, that the glory of God cannot be the ruling motive of any action, while they remain in their natural state; and that therefore they never can, without renewing grace, enjoy God in heaven. In this way a fund of instruction may be derived from each question—instruction which will be interesting and useful, not only to your children, but also to yourself.

The catechism, dryly asked, without any comment, is tedious, and will be little understood by the younger part of your family. I have found a third part of the catechism sufficient for one lesson. The mind must not become fatigued, nor be view this hour's exercise as a

And by what authority dare they

And by what authority dare they care any part of that, which was ew from the law of God? They might, with equal propriety, dispense with any one of the six working days mentioned in the decalogue—But selfishness

furds this.

Keep your eye on the Sabbath
during the week; and if you meet with an interesting tract or essay,
let it be read to your little family circle on this day. Read to them also from the periodical religious publications, with which our age is so much blessed. In the history of missions, point out to them the fulfilment of the prophecies; and endeavour in this way to excite in them a missionary spirit, that they may be early induced to bring their offerings into the treasury of the

You must by no means selfishly retire to your chamber with your book, that the noise of your children may not disturb you; nor leave them to spend an hour alone. This indeed may seem very desirable; but if faithful, you will deny yourself
this indulgence—remembering you are responsible for every breach of the Sabbath which your neglect may occasion under your roof; and that a curse may rest on your house, if you suffer your family to forget the Sabbath day. The introduction to the fourth command, more than intimates how prone we are to forget it. Leave those under your care a few moments, and see if they "remember to keep it holy." I have never found so pleasant or so effectual a method of enforcing Sabbath duties, as by keeping my children constantly collected around me,
while out of church; and by reading and giving instruction, to render the time as agreeable and profitable as possible. How greatly aggravated is the sin of those pro-

Consistently strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;

conscientiously strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;

conscientiously strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;

conscientiously strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;

conscientiously strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;

conscientiously strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;

conscientiously strict in pre-
y preparing a cold collation
Sabbath; that there may be
necessary bustle or hurry;
Many, in thus seeking pleasures, have found an untimely grave. And where will such be found at the last day!

One privilege I trust you will by no means deny yourself—that of calling your female servants and children together, for the morning and evening sacrifice. Your husband is not a professor of religion; and therefore does not consider this to be his duty. And must your house remain altogether without the domestick altar? Are we not to fear that “God will pour out his fury,” not only “on the heathen,” but especially “on the families that call not on his name”? And must yours be a family on which he will pour out his fury? By establishing a family altar, and with humble sincerity calling on his name, you may avert the most awful judgments—And will you neglect it? Have you given birth to those on whom, for your unfaithfulness, God may pour out his fury! If you have hitherto neglected this duty, neglect it no longer. Your husband, I am persuaded, will not object: Or if he should think you are acting out of your sphere, surely there are many opportunities during the day, in which you may retire to your chamber, or your closet, and there, kneeling with them, implore on your household the blessing of the God of Israel. Obey your husband the more cheerfully in temporal concerns, and redouble your attentions to him, that he may feel, when you do differ from him in matters of conscience, that it is only and altogether from a deep sense of your greater obligations to obey your God. I have known a case where the performance of this duty, became the means of the hopeful conversion of a husband.

You may easily take up this cross while your children are young; but think how hard it will become, if not attended to till they are older. If you engage in this as you ought, you will soon esteem it one of your dearest privileges: And your children, if at all concerned for their eternal welfare, will cheerfully attend this duty, as one means of their salvation. You teach them that the prayers of the righteous avail much; and will they not gladly hear you pleading with fervour for yourselves? I think there are few so hardened as not to desire an interest in the prayers of the saints. As the faithful performance of Sabbath duties has an influence on the life, the whole succeeding week, so the faithful performance of this duty, will have an influence on the conduct through each successive day. Let your children hear you pray, that you may be faithful to them; and that they may be submissive and obedient to you; and certainly it must greatly affect the conduct of both yourself and them. Surely you dare not neglect this duty—this high privilege!

Your heavenly Father has given you a good store of the things of this world: and thus are your obligations increased, to devote much of your time to your children. But were you obliged to labour daily with your own hands for support, your responsibility would still remain. The great Jehovah condescended often to point out this duty. His blessing was promised, as a consequence of Abraham’s faithfulness, “in commanding his children and his household after him.” The children of Israel were strictly required to teach their posterity the ordinances and statutes of the Lord—by the way, when they rose up, and when they lay down. In short, wherever we are, whatever we do, this great work must be first in our thoughts. In the downhill of life, when the comforts of this world are losing their charms and fast fleeing away, the bread which you may have many days since “cast upon the waters,” shall then be found again.

My parents, these many years, have slept under the cloths of the Letters from a Mother to a Daughter.

... but a waking hour of my passions not, when some admonition some pious maxim, of theirs, not return, and cast a light to set me in some intricate path, to confirm and support me in the dangerous and untried way. We all, their example encourage me to sow the seed in the morning, and in the evening not to hold the hand, as I know not which shall prosper, or whether may not be alike good. It is sufficient that we point out the way, to our children and disciples—we must follow and see they pursue it. We must give line upon line, line upon precept upon precept, precept upon precept, here a little and a little.”

I need not urge upon you, the necessity of imploring frequent fervent prayer, in your closet, dependent on the assistance and support, in this your work. You must ask for the grace to begin, for patience to endure, for wisdom to direct, and for strength to perform, all that is before you. You must ask for submission in your children; and you go from your closet, leaning on the Almighty arm, relying on God, and on his promises, for aid. Acting thus, in obedience to commands, we need not fear to go in the direction, or the disapproval of any one—howsoever talkative, or however trying the circumstances, “correct thy son and there is hope.”

Again and again, I would entreat you, if you value your own happiness, or if you value the happiness of your children, both in this life and in eternity, to establish your influence and your authority over your sons; or be assured, it never will be established. Gently form their habits of industry, application, self-denial, and economy; or such habits they will never possess, expect by the special grace of God; which you are to expect, if you neglect the appointed means. At a later age, your power can never reach their case. Your influence, depending upon it, can never be established, but in their early affections. Therefore, allow your dear little Charles, with his arms around your neck, to whisper in your ear all his sorrows, and to tell you all his joys. Be they ever so simple, listen to them with the deepest interest: and you will listen with such an interest, if you consider these as the first sentiments and thoughts of a mind, just beginning to expand for eternity.

If the hurry of business prevents you, at the moment, from attending to his story, call him, as soon as you have leisure; know what he would say; converse freely with him, on every subject he may wish to introduce. Think of the advantage this will give you, in teaching him the difference between right and wrong; in forming a proper bias in his understanding, to whatever is virtuous; and on the great importance of his having for his confidant, one so much superior to himself in years and in judgment. There is a language in which you may converse with children, that can but lisp, and only begin to comprehend the import of words. Study this language; for be assured: it may conduce in a very high degree to fix you in their affections and esteem; and consequently to promote your own and their future peace and comfort.

Infringe not on the innocent enjoyments of your children—but see that they be innocent. Endeavour even to improve the pleasures of your children, by every proper method. And when they are restrained from improper company, or pleasures, let them be assured that you seek their happiness, and not the gratification of your own caprice. When you can do it with propriety, give them their reasons for your denials; and thus teach them to confide in your judgment, and to submit without repining.
When you ride or walk, let your Charles be one of the party. He will then become more willing to remain at home; and even now, may form a lasting attachment for his own fire-side. You will find many good opportunities while out, to give him some interesting lessons on a variety of objects, which will arrest his attention. A good mother cannot but feel her own enjoyments enhanced, when they are participated in by her children, and are rendered profitable to them. You know, my dear Mary, I never prosecuted a journey without some, or all of you, as my companions. These family tours were very delightful; and when your improvement was added to other considerations, we ever felt the time and the expense well applied.

I would not by any means recommend to you a line of conduct, which my own practice has not sanctioned, and my own experience proved to be useful. And I am thus authorized to charge you, never to leave your children at home, when you prosecute a journey. Say not, they will destroy all your pleasures; for a mother has no right to pleasures, which can be thus destroyed. If the circumstances of the case are such that at least a part of them cannot go, then remain at home with them. Do you say that they may be troublesome to your friends? Then visit these friends the more seldom.

The lives, no less than the morals of children, are endangered, in the absence of their parents. I have known more than one instance, within the circle of my acquaintance, where a mother, having reached her home after a long absence, found that her darling child flew not to meet her glad return, and to receive the kiss of parental affection—His lips were sealed in death, and the clods of the valley had covered him forever from her view. Some cases I have also known, when disease had taken deep root, and the mother returned but to perform the last sad offices to an expiring child. The bounds of life, it is true, are set, "that they cannot be passed." Still, as God has appointed means for preserving life, it is our indispensable duty to make use of these means. And a mother’s affectionate, unremitting care, may go far in preventing disease, and in restoring health.

Such sad catastrophes as I have just alluded to, I know are rare; but it is not rare to see children, in the absence of their parents, rushing headlong into vice and immorality—often with the connivance of unfaithful servants. O, leave them not to themselves, even for a night, unless in some great and imperious exigencies. Then, at the call of duty, leave them—not alone—not with confidence in servants only—but leave them with your God. Go in the confidence of faith—leaving them as helpless orphans in his hands: And if then you see them no more, submit to his righteous providence.

(To be continued.)

TRAVELS IN EUROPE FOR HEALTH IN 1820. BY AN AMERICAN CLERGYMAN, OF THE SYNOD OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Continued from p. 24.)

The environs of Montpelier contain some very fine garden grounds, which supply the city with vegetables. Being generally without enclosures, I have derived no small pleasure from sauntering through them, without ever being challenged for intrusion. My attention has been particularly attracted to a simple contrivance, for giving to these gardens the necessary supply of water. Every garden of moderate size has a well in it; into which a large wheel, furnished with an abundance of earthen pots, attached to circumference as buckets, dips, which in its revolutions, lifts water and empties it into a h, whence it passes to the beds y adjusted to receive it, for the use of irrigation. This wheel, means of a very simple gearing, led by a mule; and it is real-tonishing to see the quantity of r it will throw up. It makes a point that I am satisfied may be ated at thirty or forty gallons minute. This climate must be dry, since in the month of May watering of gardens is so uni- l. Yet I have found, since I been here, a great prevalence cloudy weather, and of threaten-ppearances of rain, which ne-less have passed off, without

It is very common, especial- the after part of the day, to lark clouds rising in the west, e appearance, to one accustom- the American climate, seems greaten torrents of rain, and yet produce only a hurricane of and the sweeping of the dust the dry surface of the earth, in tities most annoying to the un-y wight who is caught out in dry storm, as I have sometimes

The drought, the wind, and combined, must certainly be ded as a serious calamity in climate; if they prevail through summer season, as I have expe- them since I have been the country, in every direction and Montpelier, whenever you beyond the application of the are which the city furnishes, is really poor. On the side next the Mediterranean, it is very s, and a great deal of land is waste, overgrown with bush- and too, quite as capable of cul- as much that is under it. the other side of the city from sea, the country soon becomes hilly, and the hills are very p and barren. The vine is the principal article of cultivation; and I have been astonished, to see it growing out of a soil, that showed on the surface scarcely anything but pebbles and gravel. This pebbly soil produces the best wine, though deficient in quantity. I am informed, that no vegetable is so much affected in its juices, from the nature of the soil on which it grows, as the vine. Almost every vineyard produces its own variety of wine; and this, as much from the nature of its soil, as the kinds of vine with which it is planted. In this region of country, they reckon upwards of sixty different varieties of wine. In making it, a very great deal depends on the process of fermentation; and the proper method of conducting it, is quite an art and mystery, of difficult acquirement. This belongs to the wine dealers, who purchase the wines from the press, and manage the fermentation themselves. I am inclined to think that in Pennsylvania, a leading obstacle to success in the cultivation of grapes, will be found in the wetness of the climate. In this country, the grape is said to be a very uncertain article of cultivation—so much so, that a full crop does not generally occur oftener than once in four years: and nothing more certainly de-stroys it than a wet season: and I think it highly probable, that what is esteemed a wet season here, would be accounted with you one of great drought. The vine seems to be the gift of Providence to dry and poor countries. Besides the wine, it is the source of considera-ble profit, in this region, from the manufacture of verdigris, of which it is the principal ingredient. The process by which the verdigris is obtained is very simple. The husks of the grape that remain after the wine is expressed, are thrown into open vessels, and thin plates of cop-per are inserted into them. In the course of some time, the action of the acid on the refuse of the grapes, generates the verdigris on the out-side of the copper, which being scraped off, the plates are put back, to undergo the same process.

As a production of agriculture, the vine appears to be little favourable towards increasing the fertility of the soil. The land of a vineyard must be frequently tilled, so as to keep down every other vegetation. The vine itself is an exhauster, though perhaps not a severe one; and it furnishes almost nothing in the way of manure; so that a wine country never can be a very fertile country; and the great mass of its population must, of course, be poor. Abundant evidence is furnished, that this is really the situation of a great part of the inhabitants of this region, both in town and country. The habitations of the country people, are generally very mean; and a number of villages, which I have visited, at the distance of from two to six miles from the city, are really wretched. No doubt, the long wars which have succeeded the revolution, have had a most unhappy effect on agriculture, as well as every thing else, which constitutes the real prosperity of the country. One effect of these depopulating wars, which is most deplorable while it is most evident, is the deficiency of male population. I was not long in the place, before I was struck with the excess of women, every where manifest. In the streets, at the market, in the fields, at the labours of husbandry, in the churches, it appears to me, two-thirds of all that are to be seen are women. My observation is corroborated by that of others, with whom I have conversed on the subject.

How dreadful are the calamities of war, even the most successful, to a country? In addition to the miseries of the camp, and the horrors of the field of battle, what floods of anguish must inundate the whole country, entering into almost every house, and producing the wailings of bereavement, for a lost husband, a lost son, a lost brother, a lost friend or neighbour: and certainly, not the least evil, is the afflicting and demoralizing state of things produced, when a material disparity is created in the number of the sexes: and when we reflect, that the only effectual remedy for war, with all the other evils which spread misery through our world, is the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is emphatically the gospel of peace—how ought it to stimulate the efforts of every individual, who has any effort within his reach, to spread this gospel to the ends of the earth?

What a criminal thing, moreover, is it, to indulge apathy and indolence, in a matter of such infinite moment to the welfare of man? We cry aloud against Bonaparte, and the whole race of despots, who make war their pastime and their glory; and surely their guilt exceeds calculation—Yet they are legitimate subjects of the supplication, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." And is there not reason to apprehend, that their guilt is not greater in the eyes of Him, "with whom actions are weighed," than that of the lukewarm professor and possessor of the gospel, who knows its blessed doctrines, and neglects to teach them to those who know them not—who withholds his mite towards imparting its high and holy privileges to those who are perishing, not temporally only, but eternally, for want of them? I think at this moment, if I had an opportunity of addressing my countrywomen, the mothers and sisters of America, to the utmost of my feeble ability would I press upon them, how much they owe to the gospel, for that elevation in society, which they certainly enjoy, above the daughters of France: and the obligations thence resulting, to throw all the weight of their influence, their efforts, and their liberality, into the gospel scale; that their daughters and granddaughters, and their sex generally throughout the world, may in due time inherit, not merely A Hint to Publishers of Books.

In the present communications, there is no design to forward, to every clergyman whose address they can ascertain, a printed prospectus of every work they contemplate publishing; accompanied by a circular letter, recommending the proposed work, and soliciting patronage for it. These proposals and circular letters, they invariably forward by mail; and as invariably, neglect to pay the postage. It is of this latter circumstance, that I feel it my duty, as well on my own behalf as on behalf of many of my brethren, to complain. If, indeed, communications of the description I have mentioned were received but seldom, I readily grant, that the complaint might justly be regarded as of a trifling character; for, notwithstanding the complaining attitude in which I now appear before you, I assure you, Sir, there are few articles of expense, which, in general, afford me more pleasure, than the postage I have to pay for letters, received from friends and acquaintances. But really, Mr. Editor, letters, papers and pamphlets, of the description to which I now refer, come so very often, that it actually amounts to a serious grievance. I have heard my brethren complain of it again and again; and for myself, I can say with truth, that it is a grievance to which I have been subjected for the last seven or eight years, to an extent far beyond what ought to be expected from my limited circumstances. Lest I should be tedious, I will add but one remark more. If the gentlemen who send us the communications of which I have spoken, knew how inadequate that provision is, which southern congregations, with a very few honourable exceptions, make, for the temporal support of their ministers, they would exercise a little more forbearance towards us. If you can spare sufficient space, in the Christian Advocate, for this communication, it may, perhaps, relieve, from an unpleasant burden, many of our brethren; and, among others,

Yours, truly,

A Poor Clergyman of the South.

P. S. A respectable printer in Boston, has recently, in the manner above stated, circulated a prospectus, for the publication of a new and improved edition of the Psalms and Hymns of Dr. Watts. Would it not be well for the ministers of the Presbyterian Church, to pause, before they patronize this publication; and recollect, that a committee of the General Assembly is preparing a system of Psalmody, for the use of the churches under the care of that body? P. C. S.

—

Editorial Remarks.

We have given a ready insertion to the foregoing article, because we have too much reason to know, that the grievance of which the writer complains is real, and that it has become both serious and extensive. A partial remedy is in the power of the aggrieved, by refusing to receive from the Post Office certain communications, which they may know should not have been made to them. But this is always an unpleasant proceeding, to a person of delicate feelings. On the whole, it is certainly incumbent on authors, editors, and printers, to recollect, that although it is natural enough for them to suppose, that the communications in which they have an interest, are of sufficient value to indemnify those to whom they may be sent for the postage of a single copy, yet that those who are to receive these communications, may be of a very different opinion; and that we have no right to take property from any man without his consent. Every thing of this kind is morally wrong; and we feel it in no respect beside the propriety of our character as Christian Advocates, to endeavour to correct it—Those who make communications by the mail, without paying the postage, ought to have far better reason than general presumption, to believe that they will be gratifying to the parties to whom they are directed. Otherwise, the communication, if made at all, ought to be post-paid, or forwarded by a private conveyance.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Agreeably to an intimation in our last number, we now proceed to make some remarks on "Mr. Owen's Address to the Citizens of the United States." Mr. O., in the course of this address, mentions "a model, explanatory of the proposed new arrangements, under the influence of which the character and condition of each individual, and of society, cannot fail to be entirely changed and incalculably improved." On this model we shall, at present, make no remarks. The radical principles of the whole he has professedly given, in the following connected paragraphs—

"It is true you have derived many advantages from your European ancestors, but it is equally true that you have transplanted a very large portion of their errors and prejudices; you cannot therefore, enjoy to their full extent, the benefits to which I refer, until these errors of the old world shall have been removed."

"The greatest and most lamentable of these are the notions, that human nature has been so formed as to be able to believe and disbelieve, and to love and hate, at pleasure, and that there can be merit or demerit in believing or disbelieving, and in loving or hating.

"These false notions are the origin of evil, and the real cause of all sin and misery among mankind; yet they are received and continued in direct opposition to every fact known to the human race." Every one may easily ascertain for himself that they are errors of the imagination.

"Let any one endeavour, by his own will alone, to compel himself to believe what he disbelieves, or has been taught to think he disbelieves. For instance, let any one who is a sincere Christian endeav—
with all his power, to compel him to believe that Mahomet was a true prophet; or a devout Jew that Jesus was the Messiah and only Son of God; or a scientific Musselman, that Mahomet was a cheat and an impostor. Or again, may one endeavour to dislike that by his nature or education he has made to like.

his experiment, if fairly and honestly, will be sufficient to convince one, that belief and disbelief, love and hatred, are not under the control of it. It is therefore irrational in the one to maintain, that man can be capable for either, and most unjust and unreasonable to force any such absurdity into his mind.

yet all religions and laws have been to found on this error. Hence want of success; hence the present mental state of the human mind in every part of the world; and hence nearly the same; except those of climate, which are more apt to affect the inhabitants of the United States.

is manifest from this extract, indeed from the whole tenor of Mr. O. would admit it explicitly; that according to this system, every human being, in the circumstances in which he has existed, has been able to have been other than he actually has been, or now could not have had an opinion, or feeling, different from what he has actually had; nor done a single action other than he has done it; nor have been a single action which he has performed. Of course, there is such thing as merit or demerit, virtue or vice, good desert or discredit, in the sense in which the terms and phrases have been generally understood. Mr. O. must have used the word "sin," merely for accommodation to what he conceived the misusage of it by others.

If this system be the basis; namely, the utter void of the notion, that human nature is so formed as to believe or disbelieve, and to love and hate at pleasure, and that there is any merit or demerit, in believing or disbelieving, or in loving or hating. In his reasoning on this point, we remark that Mr. O. gives such a construction to the language which he had used in the statement, as to represent it as the doctrine of his opponents, that a man may believe a thing at the very moment when he disbelieves it, or love a thing, at the very moment when he hates it—In other words, that the mind may believe and disbelieve, love and hate, at the same time. But where is the mortal in his right mind, and capable of understanding language, that ever held such notions as these? It is, therefore, a man of straw, that Mr. O. has set himself to demolish. That we do not misrepresented him, let the reader carefully examine the paragraph above quoted, beginning with the words, "Let any one endeavour," &c. We admit that a sincere Christian, while he remained such, would in vain, in the effort to compel himself to believe that Mahomet was a true prophet; or a devout Jew, while he remained such, to believe that Jesus was the true Messiah and only Son of God. In the same manner, we admit that while a man disliking an object, he cannot possibly like it, nor dislike an object while he likes it. We certainly have never heard of a sane person, who held these palpable absurdities. But we have heard of many men of the soundest and strongest intellects, who would have steadfastly maintained, that if Mahomet had really been a true prophet, evidence might have been produced to any man of a candid mind, and who had taken Mahomet for a false prophet, which certainly would have made him change his belief, and sincerely admit that Mahomet was a true prophet; evidence likewise which would have made any devout Jew, of a candid mind, who had disbelieved that Jesus was the true Messiah, change his belief, and cordially admit that Jesus was the true Messiah, and only Son of God. That considerations.
and arguments, in like manner, might be adduced, sufficient to convince any man of a candid mind, that, in regard to some moral object, he disliked what he ought to like, liked what he ought to dislike, loved what he ought to hate, and hated what he ought to love; and that the probable result of this conviction, would ultimately be, a real and thorough change of the moral taste, feelings, and affections, of the party so convinced. The Proton pseudos, the radical falsehood, of this dreadful system of Mr. O. is this—that men have no power to admit or resist evidence, to attend to it or refuse attention, to consider it or disregard it, but are operated upon exactly like machines: so that circumstances will compel them to go one way, or the other; that is, to believe or disbelieve, act or forbear to act, love or hate, exactly as the weights and pendulum of a clock, will cause it to go when the clock is wound up, and to stop, when the weights have run down. That this is really the doctrine of Mr. O., is manifest throughout his address. Hence he says—‘You possess nothing which I desire to obtain except your good will and kind feelings; and these you cannot avoid giving, if circumstances shall be created to produce them; and if not, you cannot bestow them.’ Again—‘If you do not make the change, I cannot in the slightest degree blame any of you, but I shall attribute the want of success of my views, to the deficiency of power in myself to explain them in such a manner, as to make it appear to be your interest to adopt them.”

Here it is apparent, that Mr. O. does not suppose that there is, or can be, any such invincible prejudice, as shall keep the mind from justly estimating truth and evidence, or turn it altogether away from the consideration of evidence. Now we, on the contrary, believe that such prejudice may exist, and in cases innumerable, does exist; and that this is the real and only cause that truth, in many instances, does not prevail over error, and cause those who have embraced error to change their minds, and become converts to the truth. We maintain, moreover, that this prejudice, or obstinacy, is perfectly voluntary, and therefore blameworthy; and that while it is voluntary and criminal, it is, as we have said, invincible—so strong, that no motives, no circumstances whatever, can be presented to the mind in which it exists, so as to produce a change.—Men “hate the light and will not come to the light—they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.” The prejudice of which we speak has, in some cases, been known to resist even mathematical demonstration.

Necessarians are of two classes—One denominated moral, the other natural Necessarians. To the former class, have belonged many of the best friends of revealed truth and of sound philosophy—They have held, as fully as any others, that men act voluntarily, and that so acting, they are justly accountable for all that they do, or refuse to do. The latter class, the natural Necessarians, hold that all the actions of men result from the force of mere physical causes, necessarily producing certain effects, which it is impossible to avoid—Of course, they deny all freedom to man, and every moral quality to any of his actions. In a word, as we have already shown, they make man a mere machine. This class of Necessarians are always materialists.—They admit no difference, except that which arises from modification, between matter and spirit. To this class Mr. O. manifestly belongs: and notwithstanding the boldness of his assertions, that the opinions he opposes are “in direct opposition to every fact known to the human race,” we as boldly assert, that the whole of his system has been repeatedly and
Remarks on Robert Owen's Address.

...clearly demonstrated to be... the world has ever seen. This controversy we pretend to enter at length— to do this require a volume. We have— what it was easy to show— Mr. O.'s reasoning about it, is not shallow in the extreme. We believe that freedom of moral action is a principle—a matter of common sense, which must be taken for granted, and that those who deny it to be so well reasoned with or otherwise, as in that in which we reason with those who are evidence of their senses, the existence of a material; that is, by showing the absurdity to which the deeds—that we all do and must do—contradict this groundless denial; and the common business of life, the various affairs of men: be carried on for a single law in direct violation of this system. And it is remarkable that the system of the mate...s the system of Mr. O. is by consequences very similar to those of the materialists. Something is more evident, than not only banishes all religions from the world, but is in disuse with all the principles on which human laws are based, and on which the whole and arrangements of society are made, and all its institutions depend. The known and common sense of the advocates of atheism and infidelity, when their arguments and allegations have been totally confuted, to lie by for a... and let the opinions of the laws of religion and good morals their course; and then, when the reasoning by which they had been silenced, are effaced from the popular mind, to come out again, assail all the best established principles of morality and religion as prejudices—assail them with the very weapons that had before been wrested from their hands. Thus this whole subject of materialism, atheism, and the irresistible necessity of all human action, was thoroughly reasoned out, in Europe, something more than a century ago; and the truth was so established, that for a long time it met with no open opposition. But of late the old arguments, a little new vamp, have been brought forward again, and urged with as much confidence as if they had never been confused. After having made some preparation for writing these remarks, we received the Christian Observer for the month of November last; and on opening it, the very first thing that met our eyes was the following:

"MAN kind responsible for their religious opinions."

"A few years since it would have been thought quite a superfluous proposition to have enunciated, that men are responsible for their religious opinions. The certainty of human accountability was till recently a settled part of the creed of all who professed to believe in the existence of the soul, or the doctrine of a future state; and indeed must ever be the firm belief of all who seriously credit those fundamental articles of religion. It is notorious however, that of late years, an hypothesis has widely gone abroad, that men are not responsible for their opinions. The anti-Christian physiologists on the continent, followed by some of their disciples among ourselves, have been among the warmest patrons of this dangerous sentiment. Mankind, it is alleged, merely obey their destiny; they follow certain unalterable laws of organization, affecting the mind as much as the body, and are no more answerable for their opinions, than for their physical conformation. The brain, these professed philosophers teach us, secretes thought just as the liver secretes bile; and it would therefore be as absurd to suppose that a man is blameable for being an Atheist, as for being afflicted with an attack of jaundice. They in fact broadly lay down the principle, that it is utterly impossible that any human being, exposed to the particular influences which it has been his chance to encounter, could be otherwise than he is, either in body or mind. He grows like a vegetable, or accretes like a crystal, or is attracted and repulsed like a particle of iron exposed to magnetic affections; and, taking the aggregate of all the circumstances that assail him, combined with the primordial tendencies of his organization, he comes out what he is, good or bad, virtuous or vicious, religious or irreligious, a blessing or a curse to himself and others, according to circumstances over which he himself has no control. The reader has but to open Mr. Lawrence's Lectures on Physiology, or Sir Charles Morgan's Treatise on the "Philosophy of Morals," or any other book of this class, to see that the above statement is not in the least exaggerated.

"The theory has descended from these physiologists to certain of our professed philanthropists, of whom Mr. Owen, late of New Lanark, may stand as the most prominent example. The disciples of this school maintain not only, what is very clear, that education most powerfully moulds and modifies the human character; but that, combined with other extrinsic accidents, it so necessarily and irresistibly directs it, that the individual is not in fact a responsible agent; that he cannot be judged by the Almighty for his opinions, be they what they may, having no power either to originate or to bend them otherwise than the destinies of his location have decreed."

We are sorry our limits will not permit us, at present, to make farther extracts from this able paper. The writer goes on to state, that the dangerous opinions of which he had spoken, were gaining some advocates in more influential circles than the "schools of physiology and philosophy so called." It appears that the celebrated lawyer and parliamentary orator, Brougham, has adopted them. He was, not long since, chosen Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow; and in his inaugural address, it appears he said—"The great truth has finally gone forth to all the ends of the earth, that man shall no more render account to man, for his belief, over which he himself has no control. Henceforward nothing shall prevail upon us to praise or to blame any one, for that which he can no more change than he can the hue of his skin, or the height of his stature." But, as often happens, good is likely to be brought out of evil. Dr. Wardlaw, it appears, has attacked this new array of old infidelity, in two very able discourses; from which extracts, at some length, are given in the essay we have mentioned. Mr. Brougham may be a better orator, for aught we know, than Dr. Wardlaw; but in reasoning, he will find in the Doctor more than his match. A series of essays on this subject is promised in the Christian Observer. If we find it expedient, we shall hereafter lay some of them before our readers. In the mean time we cannot forbear to remark that Mr. O., in what we have quoted, has given us, if not the very words of Mr. Brougham, something very like them, and his ideas exactly. Mr. O. thinks we are still greatly injured by some of the "errors of the old world." We really think so too, and that, along with himself, we have imported some of the very worst that ever reached our happy shores. We do not, however, entertain an apprehension that these errors will have an extensive circulation among us. We believe that the abortion of Mr. O.'s scheme itself, will eventually put an end to them; and that in the mean time they will have affected but few, except those who were already nearly as corrupt in principle as could be. Yet it is doubtless our duty to expose and counteract; for, as Christians, we must be, that they are absolutely dangerous to the eternal welfare of every individual who embraces them.

As to regard to early education, we only admit, but would most early inculcate, its influence and moral efficacy. This is abundantly clear from the doctrine of the Bible; and all enlightened Christians have ever been its advocates. The Bible does not teach that education is omnipotent; and facts amenable show that it is not. Non-speaking under the guise of Divine inspiration, says—"Train up a child in the way he shall go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Those Christians who view this as an absolute promise, made by God to his children, if they are faithful to their education, do not, any more than others, attribute success to the mere influence of second causes, but wholly to the condescending grace of God in giving an encouraging assurance, his special blessing shall attend their endeavors, in their endeavors shall help up their children for him; this lets Christians rest; and as they pity and pray for the dead mortals who exclude the who made them from any city in the world he has created, them look to him by constant earnest prayer, for his blessing be careful and diligent use of the means of his own appointment, to render their offspring a portion to his praise, when they themselves be gathered to their fathers.

EDITOR.

REV. MR. STEWART'S PRIVATE JOURNAL.

(Continued from p. 32.)

Thursday, 6th. Yesterday a Russian brig, under the command of an officer of the Imperial navy, arrived from the North West Coast—also the vessel ship Equator, Capt. Barney, and to-day the Pacific, Capt. Clark, having both spent some days at Lahaina. The two last put to sea again this afternoon, in company with the Reaper and Dauphin. I keep this partial marine list for you, that you may know to what extent the islands are resorted to by the shipping in the Pacific.

Saturday, 8th. In calling on Capt. Thomas Meek, who arrived in the Russian brig from the N. W. Coast, having sold his own vessel, the Arab, (the same by which we sent our first communications home, via Canton,) I met with the Russian commander, Capt. Harmanskyoff—he is the younger son of a nobleman, and appears to be an intelligent and well bred young man.

Monday, May 10th. Being all in good health and spirits, this morning we succeeded, soon after breakfast, in forming a party to visit one of the natural curiosities of this island, a lake or pond, in which large quantities of salt are continually forming. The distance to it in a direct line from Honorevu, is probably about four miles; but the path we took made our walk about six, before we reached the bank of the lake. The whole number consisted of nine—Harriet, Charles and Betsey—Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Harwood, Robert Haid (Whyhee, incorrectly) two natives to carry our provisions for the day, and myself.

We had scarcely passed a hundred rods from the village, before we found something new to admire, in the vineyard of Mr. Marin. After crossing a small stream which bounds it on one side, our path led us the whole length of another. It is well planted and cultivated, and yields grapes sufficient to make considerable quantities of wine. Along the fences, in some parts, were bushes of the damask rose. In full bloom, which appeared to fine advantage, in contrast with the pale yellow blossom of the cotton tree, with which they were interspersed. The vineyard was also skirted with pine apples, in different stages of maturity, from the blossom to the ripe fruit. Shortly afterwards, we crossed what is called the river:—the congregated body of fresh water, which makes its way after passing through the various plantations of the valley to the sea. A short distance before it enters the harbour, it is several rods wide, and a number of feet deep; but where we passed, it was divided into two streams, and as we stepped from stone to stone entirely over it, deserves there, at most, only the name of brook. Such are most of the rivers on the Sandwich Islands. It has just occurred to me, that it may not be amiss to spend a moment, in explaining what is here meant by the term plantation, which I have occasion often to mention. You are not to understand by it, what its acceptance in America would convey—an estate of 500 or 5000 cultivated acres—but an extent of land, in general much more contracted than the pleasure grounds about your own residence, consisting mostly of a collection of taro patches only, interspersed here and there with a few rows or hills of potatoes, and some half dozen irregularly planted banana or plantain trees. On leaving the river, our path led to the west, and for the first mile lay through an uninterrupted succession of taro patches.

Taro is a grand article of subsistence here, and occupies all the cultivated ground, on which sufficient water can be secured to overflow it. The planting and care of this vegetable, is the most laborious and expensive part of the native farming. The beds in which it stands are usually square or oblong, of various sizes, from a few feet square to half an acre. These are formed with great care, by excavating the earth to a depth of two or three feet, and by converting the whole, or a part of the dirt thrown out, into strong embankments on every side. The sides and bottom are then beaten, till they become impervious to water; after which, the tops of the roots fit for use (by which the taro is propagated) and which are for the purpose cut off just below the formation of the leaves, are set out in a thin layer of soil, and the water let on them. The roots are kept covered with water till they become ripe, a period of from nine to fifteen months; though on the ground of the chiefs, they are often permitted to grow two years or more.

I have never seen any botanic notice of the taro; and till I came to the islands, was ignorant of its appearance and qualities. Though no botanist, I believe it is a species of the arum (wake robin,) (not the arum esculentum, however, which is also used as a vegetable in warm climates, and known here by the name of dry or mountain taro, because it may be cultivated in dry places, or on the mountain). Its leaves are large and heart shaped, of a light green colour, and the root of a regular oval form, from two to six inches in length. In its natural state, both the leaves and root, in taste possess all the acrimony of the genus of plants to which I have supposed it belongs; but when thoroughly cooked, by boiling or baking, it is perfectly mild, and so far as it has any taste (for it is very insipid) is pleasant. Its colour after cooking is white, with a slight tinge of purple on the outside:—when poor or unripe, the whole is of a dull lead colour. Taro, beat up and mixed with water till it forms a paste, called poi, is the common food of all classes; and at all their meals answers the double purpose of bread and vegetables. But I forget that I have the day’s walk yet before me.

After leaving the taro ground,
entered on a barren and dreary plain, with scarce a sign of vegetation. This, at the end of two miles, terminated abruptly by an almost perpendicular descent, of near an hundred feet, into a small but beautifully verdant valley, filled with several large groves of cocoanuts, and refreshed by two or three and babbling streams. On the oth sward, with which the grove through which we pursued course, was cool and pleasant; the noisy brook that swept over its precipitous banks, and arted luxuriance to the vegetation, with which it was covered. Eormous and misshapen cliffs of rock appeared everywhere around us, and on our left, for the outer part of the distance, an uneven ledge, more than an hundred high, overhung our heads. The path from this ravine was very steep, and on reaching the top, we sat ourselves at a sufficient elevation to command a view of the outer part of the leeward side of the island, including the port and town of Honoaulu, and immediately before us the object of search—the Salt Lake. It is seen two or three miles in circumference—having a few feet of water only, in its greatest depth; from the entire incrustation of bottom and shores with salt, at distance at which we first saw it seemed precisely like a frozen pond in the spring, with the water standing on the snow and ice, but it has become completely frozen up. After descending from the hill, we followed the southern shore for some distance, and collected many beautiful specimens of the, as it had formed on twigs, and nuts, and pebbles, over which the water had flowed. The impregnation of the water is exceedingly strong, and the crystallization so rapid, that from this natural work alone, immense quantities of salt might be exported. It has no outlet and is supplied with water by a very small stream, from the rocks on the western side.

On our return, we met the prime minister and his retinue, in the valley of Cocoanuts. He had just landed from his barge, having come by water, and expects to remain some days in the vicinity of the lake, to superintend the preparation of 400 barrels of salt, for the Russian brig now in port. (He receives three dollars for each barrel.) He seemed much pleased, though surprised to meet us, especially Mrs. S. on so long a walk, and very politely offered us refreshments of wine, &c. We accepted a water-melon and a few cocoanuts, the milk of which is a favourite beverage with us, when warm and fatigued.

Before we reached the taro ground in the valley of Honoaulu—the wind had risen, and showers of rain occasionally reached us from the mountains, which were buried in clouds, so that we were glad to take the shortest path to the village. In doing this, however, we came near to increasing our fatigue and exposure, for the path led to the deepest and widest part of the river; on reaching which, no one could be prevailed on, though the opposite bank was covered with natives, and their canoes were stowed all along the shore, to ferry us over, without a payment in dollars. It was vain we told them "of silver and gold have we none," and after waiting some minutes to see if our evident fatigue and anxiety to cross would not touch the sympathy of some one, we were about taking the only alternative of walking a mile round, when the wife of a young chief, who was one of Harriet's pupils in English at Lahaina, happened to come to the bank, and immediately ordered her own canoe to bring us over.

Our fatigue was considerable, but not equal to the gratification we derived from the excursion. A walk of near twelve miles, through water and mire—over hill and dale and precipice, in a tropical climate, with an infant thirteen months old, speaks pretty well for the health of our dear H.

During our absence a brig from South America, bound to Calcutta, has arrived, and may possibly offer an opportunity of sending letters to America, with the prospect of reaching our friends earlier than by a future vessel, bound round Cape Horn.

Wednesday, 12th. Our friend Mr. Elwell, the agent of a large commercial house in Boston, arrived in the schooner Gen. Washington from Tanai, bringing the unwelcome intelligence of the total wreck of the "Haaleo O Hawaii" "The Pride of Hawaii," the king's favourite brig, and the once celebrated Cleopatra's Barge, of Salem, Mass. She went ashore in a gale at Tanai on the 7th of April, and is entirely lost. She was at anchor in an exposed situation, when the gale came on; part of the crew were away from the vessel, and the rest were too much intoxicated to take their anchor, in time to keep off the lee shore. She retained much of her former splendour and beauty, and having been a great expense to the nation, her loss will be deeply regretted, especially since it has occurred during the king's absence.

Friday, Capt. Wilds, Mr. Wilds, and Mr. Elwell take tea with us.

Tuesday, 16th. I yesterday dined on board the ship Enterprise, with Capt. Ebett, and am only now returned from seeing Mrs. Ellis, and Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, and their children, safely out of the harbour, in the same vessel, for a short voyage to the windward islands. Capt. Ebett was intending to visit Maui and Hawaii on business, kindly proposed that Mrs. Ellis should try the effect of the voyage on her health; and as Mr. Ellis cannot conveniently leave home at present, Mr. and Mrs. Loomis have accompanied her, to render such services as may be necessary to one in her very feeble state, and at the same time to pay a visit to their friends at Lahaina and Kaira. Harriet has taken charge of Ann, Mrs. E.'s youngest daughter, who, with Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Harwood, and our own little family, are now the only occupants of the old mansion—Old, I say, for it looks as gloomy and weatherbeaten as if it had stood half a century.

Monday, 24th. Yesterday the whale ship, William and Eliza, of New Bedford, arrived.

Wednesday, May 26th. I have just returned from witnessing a solemn scene, in the dying moments of the kind and amiable chief—the warm friend and patron of our mission—King Taumurua! He expired this morning at 9 o'clock, after an illness of a fortnight. He was not thought in a dangerous state, however, till within the last day or two. On Monday morning he made his will, and yesterday at 12 o'clock became insensible. I visited him almost daily during his sickness, and only on Saturday evening, made one of a sad group of friends who followed him, as he was borne on a sofa through a loudly wailing multitude, from a small frame house in which he was taken ill, to a larger and new one, which has just been completed for Kaahumanu; but even then, I had little thought that he would so soon be in the world of spirits. Mr. Ellis and myself were sent for early this morning, to see him die. Mr. E. remained about an hour; and as Taumurua seemed to have revived a little, after making a prayer, he returned to the mission-house, not having taken breakfast. A few moments only after he left the room, old king breathed his last breath out a struggle—and I had the melancholy satisfaction of smoothing his features, after the rough death that had passed across the moment it was evident he in the very last agony, Kaahuna ordered the door fastened and window curtains dropt—when began preparing the corpse for motion to the people, who had assembled in multitudes about the site. A Chinese lounge, or settee, was laid with a mantel of green silk velvet, with pink satin—on this the face was laid, the lower extremity being wrapped in loose folds of yellow satin, while the arms and head were without cover except a wreath of feathers on the head, so as to pass and conceal the eyes. The rich war-cloak of the king, composed of red, yellow, and black colors, was spread over the arm of the settee at his head, and a frieze of the same material and colors, occupied a corresponding space at his feet. The crowd withdrew, in the mean time, received intimation of the event; and sobbing their lamentations, were seen from all directions towards the windows and the doors, so that it was difficult to keep them closed; then, therefore, as the body was laid out, the curtains of the windows in the room were again let up, and a scene of wailing that is indescribable. I needed a rough sketch of the group in the room, consisting of Kaahuna, his wife—Keariahonui, his Hoapia, Wahine, and Opia, sisters of Kaahumanu and Laothe husband of Opia, besides or two attendants. If I ever leisure to copy it, you may at some future period. The death of scarce any other could affect us so deeply and sincerely. My first interview with the day we arrived at Oahu, 14.—Oh. Adv.

inspired me with a feeling of respect that I never have known for any other native, except our patroness at Lahaina, the good queen Keopuolani. He always appeared more civilized—more dignified—more like a Christian, than any of his fellows; and I can, with the strictest veracity, say of him that which I can hardly do of any other in the nation—that I have never heard from him a word, nor witnessed in him a look or action, unbecoming a prince, or what is far more important, inconsistent with the character of a professedly pious man. His high features and slightly stooping shoulders, gave him a patrician and venerable look. His manners were easy and gentleman-like, and as a "royal captive," to those acquainted with his public and private history, he was truly an interesting object. A shade of melancholy was always traceable in his countenance, and when visiting him, I have often been reminded by his case, of the early history of the amiable Prince James the First, of Scotland.

You are acquainted with the kind and generous part he acted on the arrival of the mission family in 1820, and of the fatherly care he exercised over those of them who were established in his own island, till the period of his removal to the windward, in conformity to the wish of the general government. The introduction of the religion of salvation in this perishing land, has not been, as we trust, without everlasting benefit to him. He professed to have the hope of eternal life through the redemption of Christ, and his last days were marked with a peace which we believe to have been that of the righteous man. Mr. Ellis was greatly gratified with his conversation during his illness, till he became insensible. His body is to be carried to Lahaina, to be deposited, at his special request, in the same sepulchre with Keopuolani.
Thursday, 27th. Spent this morning with Kaahumanu and the nearest relatives of the deceased, and at their request took another sketch of him, as he lay in a full dress of British uniform. Mr. Ellis succeeded at the same time, in getting an excellent profile likeness from the corpse.

Friday, 28th. At 9 o'clock this morning all the members of the mission family now at Honoruru, went to the royal residence, to attend religious services before the embarkation of the funeral party. There was a very large collection of chiefs, foreigners, and common people. At 10 o'clock the coffin, covered with black silk velvet, and enveloped in a rich pall of the same material, was carried into the open air in front of the house, in the middle of the circling crowd. The chiefs, dressed in full mourning, surrounded the coffin—Kaahumanu and Keariahonui, taking their seats near the head. Harriet, Mr. Chamberlain, and the foreign residents occupied the verandah, into which the doors and windows of the second story open, while Mr. Ellis and myself occupied the front door of the ground floor. After a hymn and prayer, Mr. E. preached from the words, "Be ye also ready." The services were closed by singing a native version of Pope's "Dying Christian." The corpse was immediately carried on board a pilot boat, and followed by the nearest friends and Mr. Ellis, who accompanies them to Maui. They chose the pilot boat as the best sailor. Several schooners and brigs filled with people, followed during the morning. Every thing was conducted with the propriety and order of a Christian burial, and testified to the benefits derived from moral and religious instruction.

Saturday, 29th. Surely gross darkness covers this people, and, though the Sun of Righteousness has risen on the gloom, the spectres of superstition are daily seen fitting across the beams of a brighter day. Since I have been at this place, I have often made a retired walk, on the side of Punch Bowl Hill, a place of study in the cool of the morning and evening. As I was walking backward and forward there this afternoon, with a paper in my hand, a small party of the natives approached, and charged me with being a wicked man, for praying their chiefs to death—that Taumurii was dead by my prayers—that I was killing Karaimoku, and soon there would not be a chief left on Oahu. I explained to them their mistake, as to the object of my frequenting that spot, and the inability of any one, by prayer or incantation, to take away the life of another; but they said my words were "falsehood only" and an old woman hurried off to a quarry, where a number of men were digging stone for a large house Karaimoku is building, and bade them go and kill me at once, or Karaimoku would be a dead man. They only laughed at her, however, and Karaimoku himself who was near, on his way to see me, joined heartily with them. It seems the place I had thus occupied, was the site of an old idolatrous temple, and of course intimately associated, in the minds of the less enlightened of the people, with the superstitions of the tabu system—of which there is no remaining one more general or deep rooted, than that of a belief that certain persons have the power of cutting short the lives of others, by sorcery and prayer. Near the close of our last quarterly publick journal, you will find some remarks on this subject.

Sabbath evening, 30th, 9 o'clock. While I take my pen to write, my dear M. the first temple ever erected for the worship of the only true God on these islands, is smoking in ruins! About an hour since, while the family were singing a few hymns after tea, with Mr. Hunnewell and Mr. Harwood, we were
Rev. Mr. Stewart's Private Journal.

and by the ringing of the chal-
lin, and on reaching the door,
ered the south end of the ing in a full blaze. Being en-of grass, in five minutes the
was on fire, but not till, by empt exertions of a few sars and natives, every article
value, such as the Bible,
 pulpit, (which was moveable)
row and door frames and seats, oved. The loss is trifling real value; the house was old and shabby, and to be at all much longer, would required to be rebuilt—and chiefs had determined to build the chapel, as soon as Ka-
's house is finished—but to house of the kind destroyed incendiary is painful. Sus-
, as to the perpetrator of the
has fallen on a drunken man,
as reproved for improper beer during the service this af-
, and who was heard to
 to burn the "hale pule," of prayer. Others say it has destroyed by way of retalor the death of Taunuaiti—
hey think was the victim of yers. Whichever may have the cause, it originated only The father of evil. We could se it sink into ruins without ion of sadness, especially
all by the hands of baseness.
e, have reason to think of it recollections of tenderness achment. More than one ance has caused it to be ated, in my mind, with inci-
that stand recorded among
most interesting in my life.
 too, may, throughout
y, remember it as "the house and gate of heaven," to their
But it will be such to no forever. Many of the natives along—I doubt not with most ged sorrow—and the air was with the exclamations—Aro-
ha ino! aroha ka hale pule—ka hale O ke Akua! a we! a we! (great is my sorrow—great my love for the house of prayer—for the house of God! alas! alas!) uttered in most piteous tones. The class of native teachers who are at present under my personal instruction, were most of them quickly on the ground, and carried all the articles rescued from the fire, within the walls of the mi-son yard; they manifested much indignation at the wickedness of the "kaunaka mauapo," (dark hearted fellow) who had done the deed.

Monday, 31st. Opia, her husband Laanui, and several of the chiefs, were at the mission-house before sunrise this morning, to sympathise with us for the loss of the chapel. The chiefs design punishing the culprit, if he can be discovered, and have already given orders for the erection of a new and larger house of worship, without any suggestion from any one, of the propriety or necessity of it.

Having an opportunity of sending to America by the way of China,
I shall close these sheets with the present date. On running over what I have written, I am almost ashamed to send so large a book, filled with matter of such little interest and importance. I hope, as I become better acquainted with the language and the islands, that what duty permits me thus hastily to write, will be more worthy the perusal of my friends. I say friends, for as I have before told you, I am perfectly willing that these rough
"sketches of home," should meet
the eye of all who in the perusal
of them, will forget the official character and situation of the writer, in affectionate recollection of the exiled relative and confidential friend.

Yours, as ever,

CHARLES SAMUEL STEWART.

M. M. G. BOWERS.
Milton's Treatise of Christian Doctrine.

Review.

Milton's Treatise of Christian Doctrine.

Under the head of Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, in our number for October last, we gave from the London Literary Gazette, a full and correct exhibition of the general contents of this long lost work of the greatest of modern poets—in regard to which there has been, ever since its discovery was announced, a deeply excited curiosity throughout the learned world. It has recently been reprinted in our country, at Boston; and we were preparing ourselves, by a very careful perusal, for its review, when we received our number of the Evangelical Magazine for December last; which contains a review, much like that which we had contemplated. Our first intention, indeed, had been, to make our review extensive and particular: but this design we abandoned, on considering, not only the scantiness of our pages, but the probability that those who wish for an intimate knowledge of these singular volumes—such they truly are—will read the whole for themselves. We think that the contents of the work in our October number, the short review which we shall extract from the Evangelical Magazine, and some additional remarks of our own, will satisfy those of our readers who will not be disposed to peruse the book at large. If however, we shall hereafter find, that the essays announced in the review we publish, or that any other remarks or strictures that we may meet with, or be disposed to make ourselves, will probably be useful or gratifying to our readers, they shall certainly not be withheld. The American edition of the work, which is very handsomely executed, is printed in two octavo volumes. It appears by the following title, which stands at the head of the article in the Evangelical Magazine, that the British publication was in the quarto form; and it strikes us that the price was unusually high.

"A Treatise on Christian Doctrine; compiled from the Holy Scriptures alone. By John Milton. Translated from the Original by Charles R. Sumner, M.A., Librarian and Historiographer to His Majesty, and Prebendary of Canterbury. 4to. 2l. 10s. common paper; 5l. 5s. best. Knight, Pall-Mall.

The genius and learning of the Commonwealth have raised it to a pre-eminent distinction in the annals of our country's glory. In every department of human knowledge it boasted of men who shed a lustre on their own times, and who lived for the good of posterity. After the detraction of ages, it is pleasing to find, that the memory of those unrivalled individuals who flourished in this illustrious period, is emerging gloriously from that cloud with which political prejudice has attempted to obscure it, and is promising, once more, to impart a character of thought and energy to the busy age in which we live. There was a time, when to mention the name of Cromwell, or any of the leading men who adhered to his administration, was to awaken the clamour of fanaticism, hypocrisy, and treason; but this virulent slang is every day becoming less welcome to all ranks and classes in the community, and a more dispassionate judgment is beginning to be exercised, in reference to men and measures which have been too long viewed through a jaundiced medium.
e cannot but view Mr. Sum-preface to the work before us,
most honourable specimen of species of candour to which ve alluded. Although a cler-of the National Church, and in ecclesiastical and royal fa-
he has ventured to speak of protectorate in terms of considerate respect. At least, he has allowed himself to employ the age of ungenerous invective,
as dealt with exemplary fair-
in speaking of talents and char, which nothing but a puny dice would ever have dared to
gn. We are, indeed, highly hted with Mr. Sumner's pre-not more by the liberal spirit
it breathes, than by the peros account which it gives of great poet's theology. Upon discovery, the identification, peculiarities of this posthu-volume, the learned transla-
as dwelt at large, and by the critique which he has thereby shed, has rendered, in a mea-
the labours of all future re-ers unnecessary. His task, in pects, is most ably perform-and whatever may be the opietertained respecting the itself, there can be but one of stinguished translator.
is not without a pang of regret we profess our belief, that this lost system of theology is in the actual production of the im-al Milton. That it fell from his and that too at a period of life
his judgment must have reach-
s utmost maturity, cannot for a ent be doubted. Whatever,
s, might have been his ear-views of divine truth, it is but amently evident, from this
, that towards the close of thly pilgrimage they were, in essential particulars, wretch-
erroneous and unscriptural.
, indeed, harrowing to the feel-
to learn, from Milton's own ing, that he believed the Son od to be nothing more than an exalted creature;—that he held the materiality and death of the human soul;—that he denied the doctrine of justification by faith alone, without works;—that he maintained, in unqualified terms, the total abrogation of the Decalogue;—that he resolved the institution of the Christian Sabbath into a mere matter of expediency;—that he pleaded for the lawfulness of polygamy;—and that he professed his belief that the Deity is possessed of some palpable
form, and is agitated by passions similar to those which are common to the human bosom. With these cardinal errors are mixed up a variety of minor ones, equally characteristic of that spirit of unhallowed speculation, which, in the case of the great poet, was found to associate itself with an avowed contempt for human authority, and a profound deference for the word of God. To some of our Baptist brethren, it will not be a little gratifying to find that Milton was on their side. The triumph is, however, in some degree moderated by the circumstance, that his extreme hetodoxy in other particulars, must forever annihilate him as a theological authority. If, however, they will boast of him, let them not forget that he was an Arian, a Polygamist, a Materialist, a Humanizarian, and, in fact, an abettor of almost every error which has infested the church of God.

How little, alas! can mere genius effect in protecting the human mind from the influence of pernicious error, and in conducting it to a cheerful acquiescence in the revealed truth of Heaven! How affecting is it to see the most stupendous intellects, falling victims to the sorcery of an ingenious though deceitful theory, while the unlettered peasant holds on in the even tenor of his way, believing what God has said, and obeying what he has commanded!

When first we perused the objectionable parts of Milton's theology, we were ready to say, what a pity it is that the work at large ever escaped from its ancient hiding-place! Upon reflection, however, we are now disposed to think somewhat differently; for it is surely not a small advantage, to know what can be said in support of dangerous opinions by men of gigantick powers. If such men as Milton can be confuted, nothing, or but little, is to be apprehended from inferior quarters. With these feelings we have resolved, in a series of Essays, to answer the most unscriptural parts of this elaborate work, and to furnish our numerous readers with the means of arriving at a conclusion satisfactory to their own minds, and agreeable to the word of God. We have been led to form this resolution, partly because of the publicity which Milton's opinions have obtained in intelligent circles; and partly, because, in a short review, we could not have entered into an effective discussion.

We conclude our present remarks by informing our readers, that although there is a host of errors in the volume before us, it has, nevertheless, some decided claims on the lovers of biblical knowledge. It is marked throughout, and even where the reasoning is perverse, by a very decided appeal to the sacred oracles. If the proofs selected from the Holy Scriptures are not always pertinent, they are at least, exceedingly numerous, and show that the distinguished author had not relinquished, in the progress of his speculations, a profound deference for the word of God. In some parts of the work, too, we have discovered passages of transcendent energy and pathos, which would bear comparison with the very richest of his other compositions. In closing the volume, however, our prevailing impressions are those of bitter sorrow and regret.—Would that Milton had felt more humbly, and then, doubtless, would he have thought and written more correctly!

Of the volumes before us, about two-thirds of the contents consist of the very words of scripture; and in every instance, there is a distinct reference to the book, chapter and verse, where the quoted passage may be found. Milton professes the most profound reverence for Divine revelation—to have been guided wholly by its dictates, and to be willing to submit unreservedly and cheerfully to its authority. But if he had really felt and acted as he professes to have done, we are confident he could never have written much that we find in this treatise. Accordingly, it is curious to observe how he frequently appears to forget his declared adherence to the plain language and obvious import of scripture, and to resort to all the resources of the critic, the logician, and we had almost said the sophist.

Although we can by no means pretend so much as to hint at what we consider the minor errors of this treatise, and although the more important ones are indicated in the review we have borrowed, yet we think it right to let our readers know what are the author's tenets, in regard to the Son of God, the Holy Spirit, and the doctrine of the Atonement; because among Arians and Socinians, with whom Milton must be classed, there is the greatest diversity of opinions, on these all important points. We can give but a small part of what is said on these topics, but it shall be given in the words of the author, and so as to afford a fair exhibition of his sentiments. Of the Son of God he says—

"This point appears certain, notwithstanding the arguments of some of the moderns to the contrary, that the Son existed in the beginning, under the name of the logos or word, and was the first of the whole creation, by whom afterwards ther things were made both in heaven and earth."—p. 106, vol. i.

hen, after the quotation of a number of texts and passages of scripture, to show that the Son of God existed before any other creature, and yet not by an eternity of generation, he adds—

it is evident however upon a careful parison and examination of all these passages, and particularly from the whole second Psalm, that however the creation of the Son may have taken place from no natural necessity, generally contended, but was no less to the decree and will of the Father his priesthood or kingly power, resurrection from the dead. Nor this form any objection to his bearing the title of begotten, in whatever that expression is to be understood, God's own Son, Rom. viii. 32. For called the own Son of God merely because he had no other Father besides himself he himself said, that God his Father, John v. 18. For to Adam, as in the relation of Father of Creator, having only formed him the dust of the earth; whereas he himself the Father the Son made his own substance. Yet it does not arise from hence that the Son is co-eternal with the Father, for then the Son would be least of all applications, since he who is properly the not coeval with the Father, much the same numerical essence, other than Father and the Son would be one n; nor did the Father beget him in any natural necessity, but of his own will, a mode more perfect and agreeable to the paternal dignity; and since the Father is God, all the works, as has been already proved from scripture, are executed freely according to his own good pleasure, and distinctly the work of generation. Nor questionless, it was in God's nature consistently with the perfection of his essence not to have begotten the Son inasmuch as generation does not appertain to the nature of the Deity, who in need of propagation; but whatever does not pertain to his own existence, nature, he does not affect a natural agent from any physical necessity. If the generation of the Son proceeded from a physical necessity, the Son impaired himself by physically being a co-equal; which God could not do than he could deny himself. Hence the generation of the Son cannot proceed otherwise than from a decree, and of the Father's own free will.

"Thus the Son was begotten of the Father in consequence of his decree, and therefore within the limits of time, for the decree itself must have been anterior to the execution of the decree, as is sufficiently clear from the insertion of the word 'to-day.'"—p. 109, 110, vol. i.

The following connected passage, which closes the chapter "Of the Holy Spirit," will sufficiently show the opinion of the author relative to that Divine agent—

"Lest however we should be altogether ignorant who or what the Holy Spirit is, although scripture nowhere teaches us in express terms, it may be collected from the passages quoted above, that the Holy Spirit, inasmuch as he is a minister of God, and therefore a creature, was created or produced of the substance of God, not by a natural necessity, but by the free will of the agent, probably, before the foundations of the world were laid, but later than the Son, and far inferior to him. It will be objected, that thus the Holy Spirit is not sufficiently distinguished from the Son. I reply, that the Scriptural expressions themselves, 'to come forth,' 'to go out from the Father,' 'to proceed from the Father,' which mean the same in the Greek, do not distinguish the Son from the Holy Spirit, inasmuch as these terms are used indiscriminately with reference to both persons, and signify their mission, not their nature. There is however sufficient reason for placing the name as well as the nature of the Son above that of the Holy Spirit in the discussion of topics relative to the Deity; inasmuch as the brightness of the glory of God, and the express image of his person, are said to have been impressed on the one, and not on the other."—pp. 225, 226, vol. i.

We are not now to combat the errors here stated. Both before and since the time of Milton, they have been repeatedly and triumphantly confuted. In regard to the atonement, our author's sentiments may be learned from his definition of Redemption.

"Redemption is that act whereby Christ, being sent in the fullness of time, redeemed all believers at the price of his own blood, by his own voluntary act, conformably to the eternal counsel and grace of God the Father."—p. 283.
In his subsequent explanations, he insists that the atonement of Christ was properly and strictly vicarious; so that in this particular he differs from the whole modern school of Unitarians. Both in relation to the Son of God, and the nature of the atonement, the sentiments of Milton appear to us to have been very similar to those of the celebrated Dr. Samuel Clarke.

Mr. Sumner, in the "Preliminary Observations," which are prefixed to his translation, shows that Milton's opinions, relative to the doctrine of the Trinity, were once orthodox; that in some of his previous publications he had even denounced Arians and Socinians, as unworthy of the name of Christians; and he has inserted, from his tract entitled "Of Reformation in England," the following sublime address to the Trinity in unity—

"Thou, therefore, that sittest in light and glory unapproachable, Parent of angels and men! next thee I implore, omnipotent King, Redeemer of that lost remnant whose nature thou didst assume, ineffable and everlasting Love! And thou, the third subsistence of divine infinitude, illumining Spirit, the joy and solace of created things! one tripersonal Godhead! look upon this thy poor and almost spent and expiring church."—p. xxxiii.

Milton, however, had probably adopted the notions relative to the Deity, which appear in this treatise, before he composed "Paradise Lost," and "Paradise Regained." Yet those works had, till the late discovery, been generally considered as entirely orthodox. Mr. Sumner, notwithstanding, shows that in Paradise Lost, there "are real and important contradictions in the language of Milton on this subject"—the subject of the Trinity. It has been the known practice of Unitarians, in every age, to use such language as is capable of an application to orthodox opinions, long after those opinions have in reality been abandoned by themselves; and with this Milton appears to be justly chargeable. Nothing is more certain than that, till the appearance of this treatise, he had been generally considered as holding every important doctrine of religion correctly. Johnson, whose rigorous attachment to the creed of the established church of England is well known, who had no friendship for Milton's peculiar notions; and who had carefully read all that was then known to have come from his pen, says in his Life of Milton—"Milton appears ... to have been untainted by any heretical peculiarity of opinion." What would he have said, in what language would Milton have been denounced, if this treatise of Christian doctrine had been then discovered!

But this treatise will explain what appeared to Johnson and to others to be a strange peculiarity in Milton's practice; namely, that with all his avowed and apparent reverence for religion, he belonged to no church, and maintained no visible worship. We say without hesitation, that there was no church then on earth, and we firmly believe there never was and never will be one, with which Milton could be supposed able cordially to unite, while holding the opinions contained in this book. Nor was there any church, while he lived, that held any portion of orthodoxy, that, with a knowledge of his sentiments, would have received him. The representation of his unhappy errors, as given in the review we have taken from the Evangelical Magazine, is not only true, but extremely lenient.—He was all that the writer of that article represents him, and much worse. There is scarcely a subject that he touches, on which, before he leaves it, he does not become an advocate for some strange, and in many instances, very objectionable peculiarity—He is least exceptionable in showing what are the duties which men owe to themselves and to others.
Joseph Conde, a member of several societies, the librarian of the Royal Society, and of the Academy of History, has rendered an eminent service to the learned world, by publishing a history of the Dominations of the Arabs in Europe, extracted from various Arabic maps and memoirs. This work, which was published at Madrid in 1830, may be considered as the most complete that has appeared on the subject.

Many doubts are cleared up by it; errors rectified; it enables the reader to trace, without difficulty, the long line of Princes, who, under the Emirs, Caliphs, or Kings, ruled conquered Spain; and it describes the internal divisions which tended, more than the Spanish arms, to enslave the Arab power, and finally to destroy it.

Scientific Invention.—We understand that Mr. Kay, of Preston, has invented a machine for spinning flax by machinery, and bids fair to work a complete revolution in linen manufacture, and to give country advantages in that manufacture which it has not hitherto possessed. We are not acquainted with the particulars of Mr. Kay’s invention; but we are inclined, on very good authority, that, from the description of flax, and with little heckling, he is enabled to spin yarn without difficulty. Some idea of the value of this discovery may be formed from the value of this discovery.

Piercing of Iron by Sulphur.—Col. Evans, Director of the Arsenal at Metz, in a letter to M. Gay Lussac, stated the following experiments:

"If placed a bar of wrought iron, about six-tenths of an inch in thickness, into a forge, fed by fossil coal, and when it was very, when it is known that the price of linen yarn of this degree of fineness, in the neighbourhood of Valenciennes, where it is used for the manufacture of the finest thread lace, is about 1300 francs (or nearly £50 sterling) per pound weight. We understand that instead of heckling his flax, Mr. Kay steeps it in a liquid that dissolves the glutinous matter by which the fibres are connected together, and thus, without injuring the strength of the flax, he gives it a degree of fineness which is not attainable by any other process. He has, we believe, secured his invention by a patent; and several cotton spinners at Preston have paid considerable sums for the privilege of exercising it." —Manchester Guardian.

In the year 1824 it appears that 239 men and 152 women committed suicide in France, being a diminution of 19 in number. The greatness of the number is openly attributed to the gambling-tables, the lottery, and the houses of debauch kept up by the government for the sake of the profit derived from them, with the distress that inevitably follows those who become their dupes."
welding hot, I drew it out, and applied to the surface a stick of sulphur six-tenths of an inch in diameter. In fourteen seconds the sulphur had pierced a hole through the iron perfectly circular. Another bar of iron, two inches thick, was pierced in fifteen seconds. The holes had the exact form of the stick of sulphur employed, whether cylindrical or prismatic. They were, however, more regular on the side at which the sulphur came out than on that to which it was applied.

Employment of Caustic to destroy the Varicella Eruption.—M. Vulpaeus read a memoir to the Royal Academy of Medicine, tending to prove that if the pustules of the small pox are cauterized within the two first days of their appearance, they die away entirely; and if this be done even later, their duration is abridged, and no traces of them are left. The caustic
he employs is a solution of nitrate of silver, in which he dips a probe, with which he pierces the centre of each pustule. M.
Dumerel says that he has been long fami-
lar with this practice, but instead of the solution, he employed the solid caustic itself.—Archives Générales.

Productiveness of the Potato.—A correspondent of the Leeds (Eng.) Mercury, states, that on the 15th May last, he planted a potato of the Irish breed, (without either extra manure or labour,) weighing one pound, and on the 7th of November took up the produce, which weighed forty-six pounds. Suppose this was planted and replanted for the term of seven years, and continue to be equally productive, it would yield 1,815,906,903 loads of potatoes, and would require 13,139,069 acres of land to grow upon, at the ratio of 100 loads per acre.

There were, in England, at the beginning of last month, eighty-five or ninety Mechanics' Institutes, or similar establishments connected with libraries. The celebrated geometrician and astronomer, La Place, had written a letter to the President of the London Mechanics' Institute,
in which he commended them highly.

At Bengal, about ten thousand boys and fifteen hundred girls, are in a course of education under the auspices of the British.

In the first Constitution Assembly of Guatemala, in 1823, three Indian deputies took their seats, of whom two were ecclesiastics. An Indian was also elected senator. The tribes of Indians in that republic form more than half the population.
By the constitution, they are placed on an equality with the descendants of the Spaniards.

On the subject of longevity, the editor of the New Hampshire Historical Collection says:—"In the course of my reading for several years, I have noted the names residence, and age, of old persons who have died in the United States. My lisas to the number is incomplete, and for want of information will always remain so.
It includes only those who were ninety years of age and upwards; the whole number is 2080, one of whom lived to the advanced age of 150 years. Of this number, 1023 were men, and 1057 women.
The smallest number died in the month of May, June, and August; but the greatest number in January, February, and March;—in January nearly four times a many as in June."

The first European settlement in North Carolina was made at Roanoke Island, in the summer of 1585, two hundred and forty years since. In 1730, one hundred and forty-five years subsequent, and ninety-six years ago, Dr. Brickell, who published a natural history of the then colony,
made an excursion towards the mountains and says "he travelled fifteen days with out meeting with a human being." Th population of the state may now be computed at 650,000.

Potato Paint.—Take a pound of potato, skinned and well baked; bruise them
in three or four times that weight of boising water, and then pass them through hair sieve. Add two pounds of fine chalk in powder, previously mixed in double the weight of water, and stir the whole well together. This mixture will form a glue to which any colouring powder may be added, even charcoal, brick, or soot, for painting gate posts, &c. exposed to the action of the air.

A proposition is before the Legislature of Massachusetts, to supply every town in the State, with a set of the volumes of its history, from the first settlement.

The Vermont Journal states that eig hundred tons of copperas have been maufactured at the mines in Stafford the past year; yielding a net profit of 25,000 dollars.

Secrets of Health.—The four ordinarscrets of health are: early rising, exercise, personal cleanliness, and the ris-
ion from table with a stomach unoppres-There may be sorrows in spite of these
but they will be less with them, and no body can be truly comfortable without them.—Phil. Jour.
Religious Intelligence.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN INDIA.

In our number for March we announced the formation of The Calcutta Ladies' Society for Native-female Education. In December last an examination of the children took place, in the presence of numerous ladies of the presidency. The girls, divided into four classes, had been previously assembled in an adjoining room, about 100 in number; one class of which, beginning at the lowest, was conducted into the room as soon as Lady Amberst and her suite had arrived. The children were examined by the Rev. Mr. Wilson, Mrs. Wilson, and the Rev. Dr. Carey. The whole of the examination was in Bengali; and the classes were successively questioned on the Gospel of St. Matthew, Watts's Catechism, Pearce's Geography, and a very useful work defending and stating the benefits of female education, written by a learned native. Specimens of writing and needle-work were also exhibited. The children have given general satisfaction to those friends who are most actively engaged in promoting their welfare.

It appears that in less than three years, thirty native-female schools have been formed, and between 500 and 600 girls are under instruction in the different schools supported by the Ladies' Society for Native-female Education. Several of these have made rapid progress in reading the Bible: the first classes can all write; and many of them can perform interesting specimens of needle-work. An Association has been formed in Calcutta, in aid of the Ladies' Society. The Ladies who form the Committee of this Association have undertaken to superintend Native-female schools in their own neighbourhood, and to collect funds for the enlargement of their plans.

In reference to this Association, and to the general progress of female education, Mrs. Wilson thus writes:—"I hope that we may get at least six schools formed in the European town, which will be supported and superintended entirely by ladies of the Association. Several young ladies are learning to read the Bengalee: many already understand it. Thus, in a month or two, they will be perfectly qualified to take charge of a school or two each. Mr. Reichart has taken charge of ten of my first schools, and is very happy in her work. The Ladies' Society has now thirty small schools; and we have opened two this morning, for the Association."—Christian Observer for Nov, 1825.

TABULAR VIEW OF PROTESTANT MISSIONS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, IN THEIR GEOGRAPHICAL ORDER.

Compiled from the London Missionary Register for January and February 1825, and from the preceding Survey.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Stations</th>
<th>Missionaries</th>
<th>Native Assistants</th>
<th>Pupils in Schools</th>
<th>Members of the Church</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Western Africa,</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>3,450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>South Africa,</td>
<td>27</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>683</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Islands,</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>245</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mediterranean,</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>16</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black and Caspian Seas,</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>14</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siberia,</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>8</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>China,</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>India beyond the Ganges,</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>22,240</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>India within the Ganges,</td>
<td>56</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>240</td>
<td>12,154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceylon,</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>28</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>7,586</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Indian Archipelago,</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>21</td>
<td></td>
<td>2,322</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austral Asia and Polynesia,</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>63</td>
<td>93</td>
<td>900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>South American States,</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
<td></td>
<td>193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guiana and the West Indies,</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>104</td>
<td></td>
<td>900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N. American Indians,</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>88</td>
<td></td>
<td>193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Labrador,</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>14</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greeland,</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>16</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Total                        | 289          | 584              | 394               | 50,000                | 37,919                |

* Mr. Ellis estimates the number of communicants in the Society Islands at 2,000.
† Upwards of 25,000 of these are coloured people in connexion with the Methodist denomination. About 4,000 are members of the Baptist Church.
The preceding tabular view is as perfect as can well be expected. Still it is very defective in some of its parts; especially in reference to the number of Native Assistants employed, the number of Pupils in the Schools, and the number of Communicants in the Churches. In several instances, in the principal Survey from which the table was compiled, the Native Assistants connected with missionary stations are said to be "many," and in other instances it is only stated in general that there are native assistants. The whole number may be 500.—In estimating the number of Pupils, we have adhered to the documents embodied in the above named surveys. But it falls far short of the truth; as may be seen from the following fact. In a general view of the Wesleyan missions in Ceylon, it is said, on the authority of one of the missionaries in that island, that the whole number of pupils connected with those missions, is between 9,000 and 10,000: but, in the surveys of the several stations, owing to the want of documents, we find the mention of only about 2,000. Other similar instances of deficiency might be pointed out. Nearly a hundred schools were also mentioned, without any notice of the number of scholars, which they contain. Probably the whole number of pupils in the schools established by the missionaries, falls not much short of 100,000. But the deficiency in the statement respecting the number of Communicants in the mission Churches, is believed to be far greater, than in respect either to the native Assistants or the Pupils. From but few stations do any returns appear. Had we time to make, ourselves, an extensive examination of documents, we might doubtless approximate much nearer to the real number of those, who, from unevangelized nations, have publicly professed the Christian faith. The Moravians estimate the converts connected with their missions at 30,000—It should also be added, that in the above table all the male labourers at the missionary stations are reckoned: but the ordained missionaries amount to but little more than 400.—Missionary Herald for January, 1826.

DEATH AND CHARACTER OF DR. BOGUE.

A friend, who was personally acquainted with Dr. Bogue, has obligingly furnished us with the following notice of him.

From the important station, which he filled, and the extensive influence, which he exerted among Protestant Dissenters in England, his death will be most sensibly felt, and deeply lamented.

He might justly be ranked at the head of the denomination of Christians, to which he belonged.

He was one of the first promoters and founders of the London Missionary Society; a Society, the extent of whose influence can be known only in eternity.

The first address to Christians, with a view to the formation of this Society, was from his pen; and the interest, which he felt in all its concerns, continued, with unabating and increasing vigour, to the hour of his death.

He was early appointed by that Society, in conjunction with their lately esteemed Treasurer, Mr. Hardcastle, and Dr. Waugh, who is now living, on a mission of inquiry to a neighbouring kingdom, which had been the prey of an atheistical philosophy; and the Essay, which he prepared for circulation in that country, from the inspiration of the New Testament, exceeds all praise.

In addition to this effort of his mind, he is known to the publick as the author of Discourses on the Millennium, a work which well deserves an edition from the American press; and of the History of Dissenters, which was prepared by him, in conjunction with Dr. Bennet of Rotherham. Several occasional sermons have also met the warm approbation of the religious publick.

As a Preacher, Dr. Bogue was peculiarly impressive. His manner was uncommonly dignified, and his Discourses full of thought and weighty matter.

Plain, simple and unaffected, he never failed to command the attention of his audience; and it must have been their own fault, if his congregations were not instructed and edified by his ministrations.

As a Speaker on publick occasions, he was always listened to with the deepest interest: and, while the coruscations of a more youthful and lively fancy attracted the applause of the less discerning part of the audience, the strong sense and manly eloquence of Dr. Bogue were received with marked and decided approbation by the serious and judicious portion of the assembly.

As a Man, and a Christian, Dr. Bogue was courteous and friendly, modest and unassuming. The kindly smile with which he greeted his friends, and the almost apostolick benediction which he bestowed upon them at parting, will never be forgotten by those who enjoyed the privilege of his acquaintance.

In his political feelings, Dr. Bogue was ardently attached to the cause of rational liberty; though no one knew better than self to distinguish between liberty, licentiousness, and more highly to eschew the advantages of a mild, but restrict government.
Religious Intelligence.

the civil, literary and religious institutions of our rising country, he took the best interest; and delighted to concern our bright and brightening prospects.

merit as a Scholar and Divine was associated in this, as well as in his own study. In the year 1809, he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Yale College in Connecticut.

his person, Dr. Bogues was above the average size—commanding and dignified in appearance—with features strongly marked, but tempered with the most benevolent expression.

have been favoured with his friendship, and to have him within a few hours of his translation to his Master's home, the writer of this brief obituary essay esteem among the happiest circumstances of his life. J. C. — Missionary Herald, Jan. 1826.

from a private source we learn, that of the undergraduate, in Middlebury College, 49 are professors of religion, 30 are fully converted who have not yet a publick profession, and most of the remaining 27 are now serious—some of deeply impressed.—Rec. and Tel.

Williams College, in the early part of the month, there were said to be very promising indications. Unusual seriousness pervaded the institution.

Lubeck and Machias, places in the extreme of Maine, revivals of religion commenced about the close of last year. In the former place, from 20 to 30 became hopefully pious. In the latter, attention was very extensively paid to the subject of religion, and 100 give considerable evidence of being prepared, by Divine grace, to receive the visible church of Christ. At Brewer and Calais, towns in the same region, revivals have also commenced with reasonable auspices.

n the New of New York;—The churches in the city of New York have many of them very considerable additions within the year. Among these we mention the First church, the Brick church, the church in Rutger's street, the Bowery church, the church in Canal street, and church in Laight street. In the eighth street, and active zeal has recently manifested itself, which promises very happy results. The church of Brooklyn has also largely participated in these special mercies from on high.

The Synod notice with pleasure the external prosperity and growth of the churches within our bounds. Several new churches, particularly in the city of New York, have been lately erected, and one or two infant congregations have lately been organized.

We know of no time when the external prosperity of our churches was more pleasing. For what there is encouraging; the Synod desire to be grateful, bless God and take courage—trusting the promise that the set time to favour Zion shall come, when the knowledge of God shall cover the earth, as the waters do the channels of the mighty deep.—Rep. of Syn.

Synod of Albany,—The Synod of Albany held their annual meeting at Troy on the 6th inst. The report of the state of religion within their bounds, states, that there have been few revivals of religion within their bounds during the past year. Two or three congregations, however, in the Presbytery of London, have been favoured in this respect, and in the Albany Presbytery, some special blessings, were for a season manifested, and particularly in the county of Saratoga. The Oswego Presbytery, it is said, has experienced revivals in two or three of its congregations. Oneida Presbytery was visited in one of its congregations, as well as in the College located within its bounds. St. Lawrence Presbytery reports two of its congregations as blessed in this manner, and mention is also made of revivals in two or three places of the Presbytery of Ogdensburg.—Missionary Herald for Jan. 1826.

ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY OF MARYLAND.

In an address to the publick, this Society says, "There are now in the United States more than one hundred societies, formed on the basis of ours, who are pledged to aid and assist in the glorious work of emancipation. They are located as follows:—In Rhode-Island, 1; New York, 1; Pennsylvania, 4; Delaware, 1; Maryland, 4; Virginia, 2; North Carolina, 41; Tennessee, 23; Kentucky, 6; Ohio, 6; Illinois, 13.—Total, 101. More than forty of these associations have been organized within the space of two years in our southern country.

Among the measures adopted by the Maryland Society for the furtherance of its objects, is the project of opening a trade with Africa from the city of Baltimore; for which purpose books have been opened in that city for stock to be invested in the proposed trade. The object of the enterprise “is to afford facilities to the free coloured people of Maryland, and of the United States, to procure their own passage to the land of their fathers, by opening a trade with 40,000,000 of inhabitants in Africa; by supplying them with necessaries of life, and receiving the produce of their soil, instead of slaves in return. The exports from this country will be manufactured articles of small bulk; those received from them will be much more bulky, and consequently three-fourths of the vessels in this trade would be under the necessity of going out in ballast, and afford a favourable opportunity to colonists to procure a passage. They would reduce the price to Africa so low as to be within the reach of every coloured person in America.—Chr. Spec.

—

WESTERN AFRICA.

Death of Missionaries at Sierra Leone.

It is with deep concern we state the severe losses which the Church Missionary Society has recently sustained by the death of several valuable labourers.

The Rev. Charles Knight died on Sunday, the 20th of March, 1825. He was taken ill on the 11th, and though hopes were entertained of his recovery, he was removed from his labours at the above time. He was interred at Gloucester, on the evening of the same day, amidst the lamentations of his bereaved people.

On the 1st of May, another mournful event took place. Mrs. Coney, who, with Mr. Coney, her husband, had removed to Regent, in consequence of the death of Mr. Knight, had been there only three weeks, when both Mr. and Mrs. C. were taken ill of a fever. Mr. Coney recovered, but Mrs. C. was removed to the world of spirits.

The Rev. Henry Brooks, who sent the intelligence of this event to the Rev. Mr. Raban, on the 2d of May, was himself, the very next day, attacked by the fever, which baffled all medical skill. He continued speechless, and apparently insensible, till half-past two in the afternoon of the next day, and then expired. It was thought that he had not been sufficiently on his guard against exposure to the sun, and that he had experienced a slight “coup de soleil,” about a fortnight before his death. Apoplexy, it is supposed, followed the stroke.

The mission sustained a further loss by the death of that valuable labourer, the Rev. G. B. Nylander, on the 23d of May. He had a very severe illness in 1824, from which he never fully recovered, and nature at length gave way. His mortal remains were next day interned in the church-yard of Kissay, in a spot chosen by himself.

Mrs. Gerber also died on the 22d of the same month, about 24 hours before Mr. Nylander’s departure.

“And now,” says Mr. Raban, in his letter to the Society, “I need not say, that we are in an afflicted condition.” Since the day we landed, we have lost six of our number by death, and four are now about to return. “The ways of God are in the deep, and his footsteps are not known.” Yet we know that he changeth not; and we firmly believe, though sometimes tempted to doubt and dismay, that “all the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth toward every one of his servants. We feel most deeply these numerous and painful losses, and have no resource whatever, but in his wisdom, power, and faithfulness.”—Evangelical Magazine for December, 1825.

MISSION TO BUENOS AIRES.

On the 6th of Jan. ult. Mr. Theophilus Parvin was ordained by the Presbytery of Philadelphia as an Evangelist, with a view to his going as a missionary to Buenos Ayres. The solemnities of the ordination, took place in the Third Presbyterian Church, in the presence of a large and attentive audience. The Rev. Dr. Green presided, and made the ordination prayer; Rev. Mr. M’Calla preached; and the Rev. Dr. Ely gave the charge to the missionary.—Great interest was manifestly taken in the exercises, by those who witnessed them. The same evening Mr. Parvin was married to the eldest daughter of the late Hon. Caesar A. Rodney, the American minister who died at Buenos Ayres.

Mr. P. has heretofore been employed as a missionary by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. But his connexion with that Board has been dissolved by mutual consent; and he now goes at his own expense, and is to determine on his own measures. He has engaged a young lady of Philadelphia, Miss Sarah M’Mullin, to go out with him, as the superintendent of a female school, in which the higher branches of education are to be taught. His own employment is expected to consist both of preaching and the superintendence of an academy. The family, we understand, took their departure for the place of their destination on the 28th ult., in a vessel from New York. We take a deep interest in this mission, and follow it with our earnest prayers that it may be attended with signal success.

The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of January last, viz.

Of Rev. John W. Scott, a quarter's rent, for the Contingent Fund £87 50
Of Rev. Samuel Lawrence, per Alexander Henry, Esq. for the Scholarship to be endowed by the Senior Class of 1823
- 5 00

Total
£92 50

---

View of Publick Affairs.

Since our editorial office commenced, we recollect no month so barren of news, from every quarter, foreign and domestic, as the month which has just terminated. For this reason, and for no other, this department of our work, which we never mean to slight, will, on the present occasion, contain but little.

EUROPE.

BRITAIN AND FRANCE.—The only occurrence of much importance which has been announced in the publick papers, during the last month, from either of these great powers, is the great pecuniary embarrassment which exists in both, but most in Britain, among all descriptions of people concerned in monied transactions, or in commercial pursuits. Not only many individuals, but some banking companies, have failed, or stopped payment, for debts to a most enormous amount. The consequence of this, as usual, has been a scarcity of cash, and the experience of great distress among a large portion of the population. Not long since, there was such a superabundance of monied capital in Great Britain, that the only inquiry was, how it might be profitably employed. This appears to have led to the formation of joint stock companies, for prosecuting schemes for the accumulation of wealth, both at home and abroad; and also to every species of adventurous and even romantick enterprise, in which money might be employed, and by which it was hoped it might return with large increase. Hence all the floating capital was taken up, and credit was carried to its utmost limit, and was granted beyond all proper bounds. The consequence has been what is now experienced; and a harsh and severe remedy for the evil it certainly is; and yet, not improbably, a very salutary one, in the issue: for an inordinate thirst of gain, indulgence in unwarranted expense, and embarking in rash enterprise, are infinitely mischievous to any people. The evil, we believe, originated chiefly in Britain, where it is now felt most severely, and extended itself to France, principally in consequence of the connexion which the monied concerns of the two countries, in time of peace, almost always have with each other. Our own country has not escaped without feeling something of the shock; and it will be happy for us, if it shall teach caution and moderation to our commercial community.

One of the ablest state papers we have ever read, has lately been published in England; although it relates to events which took place some time since—It is Mr. Canning's reply to the complaints and remonstrance of the late Spanish minister, M. Zola, relative to the recognition by Britain of the independence of some of the late Spanish provinces in the southern part of our continent. The British minister shows, in the most incontrovertible manner, that his court acted on the plainest and best established principles of international law—principles on which Spain herself, very recently, as well as in former times, has repeatedly and notoriously acted.
SPAIN.—The celebrated palace of the Escorial was on fire, when a courier left it, on the 21st of November last; and great fears were entertained that the whole of the wooden part of the structure would be consumed. This palace was built by Philip II. in the form of a gridiron; that being the instrument, it is said, on which St. Lawrence suffered martyrdom.—To him the palace was dedicated, because on the anniversary of his martyrdom the Spaniards gained the decisive battle of St. Quentin. The convent here is 740 feet by 580; and the palace forms the handle of the imaginary gridiron. There are many excellent paintings in the palace, and it also contains the tombs of the kings of Spain.—We know of no melioration which has taken place lately in the political state of this self-destroying country.

PORTUGAL.—A formal ratification has been exchanged of the treaty between Portugal and her late dependencies in South America; and it is said that a treaty of commerce between Portugal and the Brazils is also likely soon to be mutually agreed on.

ROME.—The Pope, it is reported, has recovered from his late dangerous illness; and new persecutions of the poor Jews have lately been organized at Rome. They are confined to a particular part of the city, and both men and women are compelled to wear a discriminating badge.

GREECE.—We have no news from Greece.

ASIA.

We have nothing to report from this quarter of the globe, the substance of which we have not heretofore stated.

AFRICA.

The British are prosecuting their expeditions into the interior of this great continent, and are making some important discoveries. It is affirmed that the slave trade is still carried on, perhaps as extensively as ever; and that none of the powers except the Netherlands, with whom Britain has made treaties for its suppression, act with good faith in regard to this nefarious business—this opprobrium of the civilized and Christianized world. We regret to observe that a considerable number of deaths have lately occurred among the missionaries of Sierra Leone. There has been some sickness, likewise, in the American colony at Liberia. Yet, on the whole, the colony is prosperous—Missionary and Sabbath schools are established.—It is also stated that a large tract of healthful country, extending far into the interior, has lately been obtained from the natives, in a manner entirely satisfactory to them.

AMERICA.

Another new republic, it appears, has been organized in Upper Peru. Its independence was formally declared in August last.

War we believe is likely to be formally declared, if it has not already been declared, by Don Pedro I. emperor of the Brazil, against the Republic of Buenos Ayres. The emperor has reinforced his garrison at Monte Video with two thousand troops, and has the command of the river La Plata, by a squadron under the command of a captain Taylor.

UNITED STATES.—Various measures of national importance are before Congress; but none of them seem as yet to have reached maturity. The session hitherto appears to have been a quiet one. The Creek treaty business is not yet settled. The parties, it appears, are irreconcilably opposed to each other. A communication on the subject, from the President, is expected shortly. Neither have the commissioners, heretofore nominated, to meet the Congress of American nations at Panama, received a confirmation of their appointment from the Senate—A decision, however, on that subject, is expected to take place in a few days.

The influenza is, at present, prevalent in various parts of our country, and will probably become general. In a number of instances, it is a severe disease; rarely however is it mortal; and in the great majority of cases it is scarcely more afflicting than a common cold. Of all the nations of the earth, the American people have probably the fewest causes of just complaint—O that our gratitude to God were more correspondent to the favours with which he is pleased to distinguish us!

ERRATA IN OUR LAST NUMBER.

Page 29, 1st col. 12th line from bot., dele to. 30, 2d col. 13th line, from top, between the words in the, insert nearly.
THE
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MAY, 1826.

Religious Communications.

Lecture XIX.

(Continued from p. 147.)

The now proceed to consider—

"That a covenant of grace was

"by God the Father, with his

"Son, as the head and Re-

"ver of the elect world. This,

"affirmed in a passage already

"ed, was before the birth of time;

"man or angels were formed

"en from everlasting. Then, in

"ght that man when created

d fall, in the counsel of peace

"the Father and the Son, a

"er of our race, considered as

"n sinners, were chosen in Christ,

"ere given to the Son, to be re-

"ed by him—he voluntarily

"ing to undertake the whole

"of redemption in their behalf.

"his topic is so well explained

"o accurately expressed, by Wit-

"n his justly celebrated work,

"and The Economy of the Coven-

"that I will give you a general

"f it in some extracts from the

"ish translation of that masterly

"ise.

"any thing ought to be account-

"r of our most attentive con-

"certain it is the cove-

"of grace, of which we now at-

"t to treat. Here the way is

"ed out to a paradise far prefer-

"to the earthly, and to a more

".

"certain and stable felicity than that

"from which Adam fell. Here a new

"hope shines upon ruined mortals,

"which ought to be the more accep-

"ble, the more unexpected it comes.

"Here conditions are offered, to which

"ternal salvation is annexed: condi-

"ions, not to be performed again by

"us, which might throw the mind into

"espondency; but by him who would

"t part with his life, before he had

"ly said, It is finished. Here, with

"the brightest splendour, shine forth

"the wonderful perfections of our

"God; his wisdom, power, truth, jus-

"ice, holiness, goodness, philanthro-

"y, or good-will to man, mercy—and

"hat tongue can rehearse them all?

"er before displayed on a more

"ust theatre, to the admiration of

"ll who behold them. Whoever

"erefore loves his own salvation,

"hoever desires to delight himself

"n the contemplation of the divine

"erfections, must come hither, and

"eeply engage in holy meditations

"n the covenant of grace: which I

"ink may not improperly be thus

"ined—

"The covenant of grace is an

"reement, between God and the

"ect sinner; God declaring his

"e free good-will concerning eternal

"ervation, and every thing relative erto, freely to be given to those

"n covenant, by and for the sake of the

"ediator Christ; and man consent-

"ng to that good-will by a sincere

"ith.

"That the nature of the covenant

"B.
of grace may be the more thoroughly understood, two things are above all to be distinctly considered. 1. The compact which intervenes between God the Father, and Christ the Mediator. 2. That testamentary disposition, by which God bestows, by an immutable covenant, eternal salvation, and every thing relative thereto, upon the elect. The former agreement is between God and the Mediator; the latter between God and the elect. This last presupposes the first, and is founded upon it.

When I speak of the compact between the Father and the Son, I thereby understand the will of the Father, giving the Son, to be the Head and Redeemer of the elect; and the will of the Son presenting himself as a Sponsor or surety for them; in all which the nature of a compact and agreement consists. The scripture represents the Father, in the economy of our salvation, as demanding the obedience of the Son even unto death; and for it promising him that name, which is above every name, even that he should be the head of the elect in glory: but the Son, as presenting himself to do the will of the Father, acquiescing in that promise, and in fine, requiring the kingdom and glory promised to him.

* * * * *

"Christ himself speaks of this compact in express words.* Καὶ υἱὸς τῆς θεοῦ, φίλος τοῦ μου βασιλέα. And I engage by covenant unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath engaged by covenant unto me. In which words the Lord Jesus says, that by virtue of some covenant or disposition, he obtains a kingdom, as we also obtain it by virtue of the same.

"And Heb. vii. 22. where he is said to be ἐπείγοντος διαθήκης εὐγγέλιον, a surety of a better covenant or testament. But he is called the Surety of a testament, not principally on this account, because he engages for us for God and his promises, or because he engages for us that we shall obey; as Moses intervened as a surety between God and the Israelites. For by how much Christ was greater than Moses, in so much he was also a surety in a more excellent manner. His suretyship consists in this, that he took upon himself to perform that condition, without which, consistently with the justice of God, the grace and promises of God could not reach unto us; and which being performed, they were infallibly to come to the children of the covenant. Unless then we would make void the suretyship of Christ, and gratify the Socinians, the very worst perverters of the scripture, it is necessary we conceive of some covenant, the conditions of which Christ took upon himself; engaging in our name with the Father, to perform them for us and which, having performed, he might engage to us for the Father, concerning grace and glory to be bestowed upon us.

"Moreover, Paul mentions a certain διαθήκη, covenant, or testament, that was confirmed before of God in Christ. Where the contracting parties are on one side God, on the other Christ; and the agreement between both is ratified. But lest any should think, that Christ is here only considered as the executioner of the testament bequeathed to us by God, the apostle twice repeats, that Christ was not promised to us, or that salvation was not promised to us through Christ, though that be also true; but that the promises were made to Christ himself; That Christ was that seed, to which he had promised, or to which the promise was made; namely, concerning the inheritance of the world, and the kingdom of grace and glory. It is evident therefore, that the word διαθήκη does here denote some covenant or testament, by which something is promised by God to Christ. Nor do I see what can be objected to this, unless by

* Exod. xix. 3—8. † Gal. iii. 17.
‡ Gal. iii. 16.
Christ any one should understand the head, together with the mystical body, which with Christ is that one seed, to which the promises are made. This indeed we shall very readily admit, if it also be admitted, that Christ, who is the head, and eminently the seed of Abraham, be on no account excluded from these promises, especially as the promises made to his mystical body, ought to be considered as made also to himself; since he himself too hath received gifts for [in] men.

Nor ought those places to be omitted, in which explicit mention is made of the suretiship of Christ; as Psal. cxix. 122. Be surety for thy servant for good; that is, as surety receive him into thy protection, that it may be well with him. In like manner, Is. xxxviii. 14. I am oppressed, undertake for me; be to me a surety and patron. And that none but Christ alone could thus undertake, God himself says, Jer. xxx. 21. Who is this that engaged [in] his heart, or quieted his heart by his suretiship, or sweetened his heart, by a voluntary and fiduciary engagement, or, in fine, pledged his very heart, giving his soul as both the matter and price of suretiship (for all these are comprised in the emphasis of the Hebrew language) to approach unto me, that he may expiate sin? These words also point out what that suretship or undertaking was, which David and Hezekiah sought for; namely, a declaration of will to approach unto God, in order to procure the expiation of sins.

In fine, we may refer to this point, what is to be found, Zech. vi. 13. The counsel of peace shall be between them both; namely, between the man, whose name is the Branch, and Jehovah: for no other pair occur here.

I consider three periods, as it were, of this compact. Its commencement is to be sought in the eternal counsel of the adorable Trinity: in which the Son of God was constituted by the Father, with the approbation of the Holy Spirit, the Saviour of mankind, on this condition, that in the fulness of time, he should be made of a woman, and made under the law; which the Son undertook to perform. Peter has a view to this when he says, that Christ was foreordained before the foundation of the world. To this purpose is also, what the Supreme Wisdom testifies concerning itself; I was set up [anointed] from everlasting; that is, by my own and the will of my Father, which is one and the same, I was appointed to the performance of the mediatorial office in time. Paul likewise declares, that we were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. Consequently, Christ himself was constituted from everlasting, the head of those that were to be saved, and they were given unto him, for whom he was to merit salvation, and in whom he was to be glorified and admired. From this constitution, the Son from everlasting bore a peculiar relation to those that were to be saved. Hence the book of life is, by a special appropriation, ascribed to the Lamb, as containing a description of the peculiar people assigned to the Lamb from all eternity. Hence also it was, that God, in his amazing wisdom, so ordered many things in man's state of innocence, that the attentive remembrance of them after the fall, and the comparing them with those things which were afterwards revealed, might have reminded man of this divine counsel.

The second period of this covenant I place in that intercession of Christ, by which, immediately upon the fall of man, he offered himself to God, now offended by sin, actually to perform those things, to which he had engaged himself from eternity; saying, Thou hast given them

Psalm, lxviii. 19.

* 1 Pet. i. 20.
† Eph. i. 4.
‡ 1 Prov. viii. 23.
§ John xvi. 6.
I Rev. xxii. 8.
to me, I will make satisfaction for them: and so making way for the word of grace to be declared to, and the covenant of grace to be made with them. Thus Christ was actually constituted Mediator and declared as such immediately after the fall; and having undertaken the suretiship, he began to act many things belonging to the offices of a Mediator. As a Prophet, and the interpreter of the divine will, he even then, by his Spirit, revealed those things which relate to the salvation of the elect, and by his ministers published them.* Nay, he himself sometimes appeared in the character of an angel, instructing his people in the counsel of God. As a king, he gathered his church, and formed to himself a people, in whom he might reign by his word and spirit. For it was the Son of God, who said to Israel, Exod. xix. 6. Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and who, with more than royal pomp, published his law on mount Sinai,† and whom Isaiah saw sitting as king upon a throne.‡ As a Priest, he took upon himself the sins of the elect, to be expiated by the sacrifice of his body, which was to be fitted for him in the fulness of time. In virtue of this, as being a faithful surety, he likewise interceded for the elect, by declaring his will, that they might be taken into favour, saying, Deliver them from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom.§ For what angel could speak thus, but the angel of the covenant? who even then was called an angel, before his coming in the flesh, because he was accomplishing what depended upon that future mission.

* Isa. xlviij. 15. 1 Pet. i. 11. and iii. 19.
† Acts. vii. 38.
‡ Chap. vi. compared with John xii. 41.
§ Job xxxiii. 24.
Compare Psalm xl. 7, with Heb. x. 5.

self as a voluntary servant to God, from love to his Lord the Father, and to his spouse the church, and his spiritual children (for the ears of such voluntary servants were bored;)* γένεται ὅτι τὸν φόρον, was made under the law, subjecting himself to the law: which he solemnly testified by his circumcision, on the eighth day after his birth, whereby he made himself a debtor to do the whole law.†

Thus it clearly appears, that there was a covenant between the Father and the Son, in which he undertook to be, in all the extent of the word, a Redeemer of the people who were given to him.

It only remains to remark,

V. That by Christ all his people are actually brought out of a state of sin and misery, into a state of salvation.

You will not understand that I now propose to go into a particular explanation how this is done. A large part of the subsequent answers in the catechism is employed in explaining these topics, and to anticipate them would produce confusion. Let us then only dwell for a few moments on the fact, that Christ Jesus, the eternal Son of God, is the great agent in the work of our redemption, and that he has perfected it in behalf of his people.

In virtue of his undertaking for them, he is made to be "the head over all things to the church, which is his body." There is no gift of grace or glory bestowed on the church, or on any individual member, but it is, as it were, first given to Christ, and then comes to the believer from him —"Of his fulness have we all received, and grace for grace." It was for this purpose that "it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." As the people of Christ are given to him, and he gave himself for them, it is infinitely fit and reasonable, that they should receive all immediately from him. And this is calculated unspeakably to encourage and comfort them, while they are permitted and required to look for all that they need, from the hands of their kinsman Redeemer, who has identified himself with them: and they also hence receive every possible assurance that the work of their redemption and salvation has been fully wrought out for them, shall be effectually wrought in them, and shall be completed in eternal glory and felicity; because the whole has been engaged for by God's eternal Son, whom no enemy can resist or disappoint.

* Exod. xxi. 5. 6. † Gal. iv. 4.
‡ Gal. iii. 3.

The efficacy of this work of Christ, was just as great, although not so clearly revealed, before, as after, his coming in the flesh. It is the prerogative of God, to call things that are not as though they were. Christ was "the lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The efficacy of his undertaking and atonement, was coeval with the fall of man. He was promised to our first parents as "the seed of the woman who should bruise the serpent's head." His character and his atonement were shadowed forth under the Mosaic dispensation, by a variety of symbols and sacrifices—These all pointed to Christ and his sacrifice; for the apostle expressly declares, "they were a shadow of good things to come, but the body was of Christ." To Christ, therefore, all who are saved, the ancient and the modern, the Jew and the Gentile, the infant and the aged, owe entirely and equally, their redemption and their eternal inheritance.

Two short reflections on what you have heard, shall close this lecture.

1. Reflect on the self-moving goodness, mercy and condescension of God, in the covenant of grace. Oh this let me counsel you to dwell in your meditations, more—far more—than on the inscrutable decrees of Jehovah. To Him, those decrees—those "secret things belong;" while to us, it belongs to wonder, admire, adore and love, in attentively contemplating the "revealed" truth, that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." Remember, I repeat it, that this is plain revealed truth; in which the benignity of God, manifested to our world, is exhibited as inconceivably great. He "so loved the world," that "he spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all;" and this when we were hardened and unrelenting rebels against Himself. This is indeed benevolence, compassion, and a stoop of mercy, without any parallel—without any thing to which we can even resemble it. Those who oppose our sentiments, often represent us as exhibiting the ever blessed God as an arbitrary, inexorable, and vindictive Being—Nothing can be farther from the truth. We do indeed plead for all the Divine attributes, and are careful not to deny one in order to establish another. Hence we maintain the perfect foreknowledge and entire sovereignty of God, that we may not impeach his wisdom, nor derogate from his supreme disposing power. But at the same time, we maintain the infinite goodness of God. We believe with the Apostle John, that "God is love." We represent this love as the first spring and source of the whole plan and work of redemption—that it was the inconceivable love of God that provided the Saviour, and "gave him up," to all that he endured in the work of our redemption. If our opponents will represent this part of our system as inconsistent with the other—we will ever deny it; and reply, that is your consequence, not ours. We believe, and so do you, that many of the ways of God are unsearchable. We believe that the things in question are perfectly reconcilable, although for the present we cannot tell how: We believe, from the word of God and the dictates of reason, facts and truths which we cannot fully reconcile. But we will not deny any of the facts or truths, because we cannot show exactly how they quadrate with each other. But on the fact that God is love, and the fountain of all goodness, grace, and mercy, it is our delight to dwell. We love to contemplate it by itself; yea, we love to inculcate it, till our own minds, and the minds of those we address, are filled with admiration, and warm with gratitude and affection, to the infinitely best as well as greatest of all beings.

2. Reflect on our infinite and endearing obligations to the Saviour. When “there was none to help—none to uphold,” then he said, “Lo, I come to do thy will, O God.” But for this intervention of the Saviour in our behalf—an intervention which was perfectly voluntary on his part, and to which he was under no obligation—but for this, the whole race of man, like the whole host of rebel angels, must have perished without remedy and without hope. What mortal can think of this, and not feel that his obligations to the Saviour are beyond all expression! But especially, when we consider the astonishing price of our redemption, and that the Saviour had a clear and perfect foresight of it—a perfect foresight of the ineffable humiliation, sufferings and death, that would be indispensable in executing the undertaking for which he made himself responsible, and yet that he cheerfully assumed it, and steadily persisted till he had fully performed it—what tongue of men or angels, will ever be able to utter his love and compassion, or the endearing obligations which bind redeemed sinners to their great Deliverer! This doubtless will be a theme for the songs and harps of saints and angels, while the eternal bliss of heaven shall endure. And O! how hard, my dear youth, must be that human heart, how lost to every worthy sentiment, how base, how vile, which feels nothing—grows not, melts not, moves not with one pulse of gratitude and love—when this unutterable goodness, kindness, and compassion of the Saviour, is made the subject of contemplation! Is such the state of any heart in this assembly? If it be, how great must be the change wrought upon it, before it can be reconciled to God! May every such heart be shocked, and humbled, and tremble, at its wileness—may it be broken and bleed, that it may at length be healed by the application of the atoning blood of Christ—Amen.

ON THE ATONEMENT.

No. III.

My dear Brother,—In my last letter it was, I hope, fairly proved, that the doctrine of the new school has no advantage over that of the old, in respect to a general and free preaching of the gospel, and an unfettered and unreserved offer of salvation to all men. We can invite all to come to Christ, as sincerely as any of our brethren. We can offer salvation to all, as freely as they; and hold out as many inducements and encouragements to incline the perishing to come to the munificent feast which grace has prepared. We can exhibit the promises in all their fulness and riches, as well as they; and thunder out the denunciations of a righteous God, against all who disbelieve the gospel and reject the Saviour.

3. But the advocates of indefinite atonement claim that their views correspond best with the freest and sovereignty of divine grace, displayed in the recovery of fallen man. They contend that, to represent the death of Christ as a real and complete satisfaction to divine justice for the sins of his people, is to set aside the grace of God in their salvation. If, say they, salvation was really purchased for them by the Redeemer’s sacrifice, then salvation must be granted to them as a matter of debt, and not as a free and
On the Atonement.

Omitous gift; and besides, as the has been paid and accepted, a ce requires that all for whom it paid, should be immediately jus- ted and released from captivity.

A reply to the latter part of this ment, I shall here observe brief- at the scheme sketched by the om of our opponents, is not the devised by infinite wisdom. sinners should be justified be- they were born, and be released condemnation as soon as they into the world, was no part of rah’s plan. It was the pleasure of the Father who gave them to on to be redeemed, and of his who bought them with his blood, they should remain under the o of the law, until they should ve on the Redeemer. Then, not till then, are they, or can be, justified. This was the of infinite wisdom; and so it is n by the pen of inspiration.

It paid the price of our redemp- that the benefits of it might be ed to his people in the way and determined on by divine sove- rainty; and surely he had a right range the economy of salvation, as most pleasing to himself.

Regarding the former part of thement, examination will show the objection, if it have any, will apply to the doctrine of new, as well as to that of the school. Man was fallen; and in infinite mercy, determined ve him. But a mighty obstacle in the way of his salvation. It be removed, or man must pe-

None in heaven or on earth, among all the creatures of God, is to remove it. The Son of God is equal to the stupendous un- thing; and even he can accom- it no other way than by hu- nation the most profound, and rings the most overwhelming. edience unto death is required, ite it consistent for a righteous to exercise his mercy in saving il men. Now, it cannot be de- that the inspired writers speak Saviour’s death as an invaluable price, by which his people were purchased. “For,” says Paul, “ye are bought with a price: therefore, glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God’s.” 1 Cor. vi. 20. By the same motive does Peter enforce a holy and heavenly conversation: “Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.” 1 Pet. i. 18, 19.

By his death we say that Christ satisfied divine justice for all true believers: and our brethren say, by his death Christ made an exhibition of divine justice, and satisfied pub- lick justice, so that God can now save all who believe. But if we view his death in either light, it will appear that it was the procuring cause of our salvation; and that without the intervention of his fear- ful sufferings, none of our guilty race could have been saved. The death of Christ our brethren represent as being a substitute for our sufferings, and some, if not all, will allow it to have been an equivalent for them. If then the justice of God, call it what you will, publекk or distribu- tive, required the amazing sufferings of his own Son for the salvation of sinners, and he, by them, actually satisfied the demands of justice; where, to adopt their own language, we ask, is the free and sovereign grace of God in a salvation thus dearly bought? The objection then applies to the doctrine of the new school, as well as to that of the old.

When it is affirmed that sinners are saved by absolute grace, our bre- then do not mean that salvation is bestowed on them without respect to the atonement of Christ; for they affirm an atonement to have been so necessary, that none of our sinful race could, without the death of Christ, have been saved consistently with the glory of the Supreme Ruler of the universe. Where then, we again ask, is the grace of God, in salvation procured by so costly a sacrifice?

A writer, I know not where to place him, says, if I understand him, that the sufferings of Christ were not a full equivalent for the execution of the penalty of the law on those who are saved; because this would be destructive to the grace of God in our salvation. Now, if this objection have any weight, it must depend on the assumption, that so far as the sufferings of Christ were necessary to our salvation, the grace of God is diminished: because if a full equivalent for our sufferings, or a complete substitution for them, be wholly inconsistent with the freeness and sovereignty of divine grace, then, for the same reason, a partial equivalent, or a partial substitution for them must be, in its degree, inconsistent with the freeness and sovereignty of divine grace. What consequence follows? Clearly this: if we had been saved, without the intervention of the death of Christ, by a sovereign act of Jehovah in remitting our sins, there would have been a more glorious display of free and sovereign grace. But who that has read the scriptures attentively, does not know that such a conclusion would be at war with the strains in which they celebrate redeeming love? Do they not teach us to consider the method of saving sinners, through the humiliation and death of the Son of God, as affording the highest display of divine love and mercy? Hear our Lord himself: “God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.” Hear his Apostle John: “Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us.” “In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.” Now, these declarations are manifestly based on the fact, that a richer and more glorious display of divine love has been made in our salvation, through the incarnation, sufferings and death of Christ, than could have been made in saving sinners without so costly a sacrifice; and that grace is magnified, not in proportion as the Saviour’s sufferings are diminished, but rather in proportion as they are increased. The exhibition of the Father’s love brightens at every step in his Son’s humiliation; and shines with the greatest splendour, when the Lord of glory, in the midst of the preternatural darkness, suffering under the hindings of his Father’s face, is heard to exclaim, “My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?” and then bows his head and gives up the ghost.

This objection, then, militates against the plain language of holy scripture, which teaches us that, if we would form exalted views of Jehovah’s infinite love and sovereign grace, we are not to diminish the Redeemer’s sufferings, but look at them in all the extent of agony, terror and dismay to which they were carried by divine justice. “He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all; how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?”

We believe, my dear sir, you well know, all the benefits of salvation to be the fruits of Christ’s death, and purchased by him for all who will accept them; and yet, in perfect consistency, we believe that they all flow from unmerited grace and infinite love. Both these propositions are plainly taught in holy scripture.

1. The inspired writers represent every blessing of salvation as the fruit of Christ’s death.

Forgiveness is the fruit of his death. “In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.” Ephes. i. 4. “And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you.” Ephes. iv. 3. Bo-
On the Atonement.

From these texts of holy scripture, it appears undeniably, that all the blessings of salvation come to us as fruits of the Redeemer’s death; and as his death was the price which he paid for them, it must conclusively follow, that they were all purchased for believers by his death.

2. But the inspired writers, while they teach this truth so fully, teach with equal plainness and fulness, that all the blessings of salvation are the fruits of free and sovereign grace. In the present discussion it is unnecessary to go into any labourous proof of this point; because it is freely and cordially admitted by our brethren, from whom we differ in our views of the atonement. Were proof required, it might, by an induction of particulars, be shown that each benefit of salvation is attributed to the free and abounding grace of God. “By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God.” Ephes. ii. 8. “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.” Tit. iii. 5—7.

Now, as the scriptures teach us that we are saved by the death of Christ, or that all the blessings of salvation were purchased by his blood; and teach us also that we are saved by free grace, or that all the blessings of salvation flow from unmerited mercy; if there be any difficulty in reconciling these two doctrines so fully and distinctly taught in the scriptures, the difficulty manifestly grows out of the revelation of an omniscient God. It is our duty in humble submission to his infallible teaching, to receive both truths, how irreconcilable soever they may appear to our feeble understandings.

A little more light, and difficulties of this kind would vanish. Wha mysterious doctrine of the Bible would be received by us, if it were not received till all difficulties attached to it were removed? Who can fully explain the doctrine of the Trinity, the doctrine of the incarnation of the Son of God, the doctrine of divine influence? Yet every Christian believes them.

But the scriptures contemplate no difficulty in regard to these two important truths; they consider them as perfectly consistent and harmonious: for they exhibit them in close connexion in the same verses; as will appear from a reference to the texts just quoted. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." Here the blood of Christ is represented as the price of our redemption; and yet forgiveness is represented as flowing from the riches of divine grace. Again: "Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Here justification is attributed to the free grace of God; and at the same time it is attributed to the redemption of Christ, or to his blood, which is the price of our redemption. Again: "That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life." What is the meaning of this passage? Plainly this: As sin, the procuring cause of every evil, reigns in all the calamities brought on our guilty world, and extends its destructive ravages unto death; so grace, the original spring of our salvation, reigns, through the righteousness of Christ, the procuring cause of every blessing, from the beginning to the consummation of salvation.

We cannot, my dear brother, but feel surprised that any should apprehend an inconsistency between the two propositions—that the righteousness of Christ is the procuring cause, and divine grace the original spring, of our salvation.

The scriptures, you know, set our works and the grace of God in opposition; and represent salvation by works, and salvation by grace as being wholly incompatible. "And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work." Rom. xi. 6. But, while this opposition between grace and our works, as the procuring cause of salvation, is abundantly exhibited by the inspired writers, no where, not in a single passage, do they set the grace of God in opposition to the works or righteousness of Jesus Christ.

To the great Redeemer, the covenant of redemption was indeed a covenant of works. His obedience unto death was the very work the law demanded of him as our Surety; and consequently to Him the reward was not of grace, but of debt; a reward secured by the promise of his Father to him, for the glorious services he had done in execution of his mediatorial office. At the close of life, when offering up his intercessory prayer for his church, he could say, "Father, I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work thou gavest me to do:" and on the ground of his obedience utter that divine language, "Father, I will, that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me; for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world." John xvii. 4. 24.

But to us the covenant is wholly of grace; inasmuch as it secures to us all the blessings of salvation, not on the footing of our own works, but on the footing of our Redeemer's righteousness. All is the fruit of grace. It was grace that planned our salvation. It was grace that chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world. It was grace that accepted the mediation of Christ. It was grace that provided the Mediator in the person of God's own son. It was grace that revealed the wonderful plan of redemption. It is grace that offers salvation, and grace that applies it. It's that remits our sins and justifies when we believe in Christ.

Grace that begins the work of justification; grace that carries it and grace that crowns it with

To our own salvation we do contribute a particle of merit, not for our righteousness, but for the righteousness of Christ we are saved.

I am, &c.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

POSITION OF ROM. VIII. 19—23.
A writer of this expository essay forty years ago, after having some acquaintance with the Testament, both in the original and in a translation, determined to read it carefully in the English version; with a view to see if he could not get a better understanding of some parts of it he then had, by giving a

attention to the scope and design of the inspired writers, in the passages which at first sight appear obscure—And he takes by the way, to recommend practice to all who may see the now writes.

The first of the eighth chapter appeared very plain, and very important. But at the 19th verse inclusive was observed to

once, and to extend to the 23rd

It was not seen until the discussion here introduced to be understood, when taken

nor how it was naturally understood, either with the preceding

sequent verses—In a word, it
d to be a dark and detached

s. By meditating on the Apostle's language, however, it was soon

ved that to understand his

it was essential to ascertain the meaning of the word

i.e. it is on this word that sense of the whole passage

ally hinges. At length, after some perplexity, the concluding part of the 23d verse, "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body," seemed to throw a gleam of light over the whole, by suggesting that the creature might mean the human body, or the material and animal part of man's nature.

This led to a more exact and critical examination of these verses, first in the common version, and then in the original. The result was, a pretty strong persuasion that the thought which first occurred would furnish a key to the real meaning of the Apostle, in a paragraph which has generally been considered as difficult of explanation as any in his writings.

This persuasion has since been strengthened, by finding it approved by a considerable number of the writer's friends; some of them skilled in Biblical criticism, and well versed in the Greek language. The interpretation of the passage, however, which the writer proposes, he has never found adopted or favoured, by any Biblical commentator that he has hitherto had an opportunity to consult.

As already intimated, it is essential to the exposition contemplated, that the original word ζωή, may, without perversion, be considered as a term used by the Apostle to designate the material and mortal part of human nature; or the body of man, as contradistinguished from his immortal and immortal spirit. ζωή, as well as the verb (ζωοίτε) from which it is derived, is, it is well known, a word of various significations. Schleusner assigns to it, in the New Testament, five distinct, though related, meanings; and Parkhurst enumerates six. The commentators have taken a still wider range. The author, whoever he was, of the exposition of this passage which appears in what is called Henry's Commentary, supposes that by the creature, or ζωή, we are chiefly to understand, throughout this whole passage, the brutal and inanimate creation; and actually favours the monstrous supposition that all brutes, if not all animals whatsoever, will be reanimated, immediately before the final judgment. Whitby thinks that by κτισίς we are to understand the Gentile world. Doddridge, in his paraphrase, renders it the whole creation, and in a note seems to think it especially refers to the whole unevangelized world. Scott understands by the creature the whole visible creation." Macnight says, "κτισίς in this passage signifies every human creature; and afterwards, in a note on the 23d verse, says a little more particularly, that we are to understand by it "mankind, in general, Jews as well as Gentiles." Pool's Synopsis gives, from various commentators, the following senses of this remarkable term; namely, angels, man in general, Christians, the whole human race, especially the Gentiles, the whole visible creation—Some of these senses, it will be observed, are the same as those adopted by commentators previously mentioned. On the whole, it appears that the learned men who have translated and commented on the passage under consideration, have thought themselves at full liberty to consider the word κτισίς as applicable to any created thing, or being, whatsoever; and that it was only necessary to consider, among created beings, which would best serve to explain the reasoning of the sacred penman in this place.

To consider κτισίς, then, as used by the apostle to denote the bodily frame of man, is only to take the same liberty that has been taken by commentators and critics of the most distinguished name. But let us see if we cannot assign satisfactory reasons for giving this meaning to the term, in preference to every other.

1. This construction accords well, if not the best, with the strict and primitive meaning of the word κτισίς. The verb κτίζω, from which the noun κτισίς is derived, not only signifies primarily to create out of nothing, (which as Parkhurst justly remarks, is a sense purely Hellenistic) but also, and especially, to form or fashion out of pre-existent matter; or to frame a structure, from materials previously prepared. Hence it is used by our Apostle, 1 Cor. xi. 8, 9, in speaking of the formation both of man and woman. Now woman we know was formed from a part of the pre-existent frame of man: and it is expressly said, Gen. ii. 7, that the corporeal part of man was formed "out of the dust of the ground." From this pre-existent matter, or material previously prepared, his bodily form was fashioned, while his immortal spirit, we are told, was not so formed, but came immediately from his Creator—God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." κτίσις then, following the sense of the verb from which it is derived, as it does, not only by the general rules of derivation, but by the express showing of the Lexicons, applies, not we admit exclusively, but in one of its most strict and primitive senses, and in the most frequent usage of the sacred writers, to something that is formed out of pre-existent matter, or that undergoes a change from a pre-existent or previous state. Hence it follows, that in giving it the construction for which we plead, we do not pervert the meaning of the term. On the contrary, we give it that meaning which is strict and primitive—And let it be observed, that this is a meaning from which it is made to depart, by most of the various renderings which, as we have seen, have been given it by others.

It may further be remarked, that the sentence past on man at his first apostacy was, "for dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return." That which had been formed out of pre-existent matter, is here sentenced to return to its primitive state: And at the period of "the redemption of the body," spoken of in the conclusion of the passage before us, this dust shall again assume a bodily form; that is, be again created out of pre-existent matter, or be formed into a structure, out of materials already existing. Hence it appears that the sense of ἡ τὸν, for which we plead, is peculiarly appropriate to the corporeal part of man’s nature; since not once only, but twice, it will have been formed out of that which had a previous existence. It may perhaps be observed that in the 23d verse, where the Apostle extends his views to “the whole creation,” as our translators render the words ἡ τὸν, the construction we contend for cannot be maintained. In regard to this we remark, that we have admitted that the Hellenistic sense of ἡ τὸν is sometimes to create out of nothing; and if we should suppose that the apostle here changes, or extends the meaning of ἡ τὸν, it would be easy to refer to numerous examples of a similar change, or extension of the meaning of terms, in the writings of St. Paul. But it is believed that we do not need the aid of this remark. It has been justly observed by critics, that our translators have often, for some reason or other, “put the worse rendering in the text, and the better in the margin;” and it is believed that they have done so here—The marginal reading is “every creature,” and this is certainly more literal, as well as more accordant with the rendering of ἡ τὸν which they had before given, than the words “the whole creation.” It seems reasonable to believe, that although it be true in itself that the very “ground is cursed” in consequence of man’s sin, and that there might be here some reference to this, yet the direct and special reference of the Apostle, when he speaks of “groaning and travelling in pain,” is to the sufferings which are endured by mankind in general, and by many of the inferior animals, in consequence of the first apostacy, and the subsequent abuse of them by man, as well as of their use for food—all of which have arisen out of the primitive apostacy. But it surely does not follow, because the inferior animals suffer in consequence of man’s sin, that they will be reanimated and rendered immortal at the resurrection of the just. The glorious resurrection and reward of the saints, are altogether owing to their connexion with the Redeemer; but between him and the inferior animals no such connexion has ever existed. We admit, indeed, that there are difficulties in accounting for the sufferings of inferior animals; but the solution of these difficulties belongs not to the present discussion.
Exposition of Rom. viii. 19—23.

2. It is believed, as we have already hinted, that if we translate ἡ τὸν as is here proposed, we shall preserve a beautiful coherence between the passage under consideration, and the verses which precede and follow it, which must otherwise be in a great measure destroyed; and also give a unity and consistency to the several parts of the passage itself, which cannot in any other way be maintained. Let it be remarked that in the 15th verse the Apostle begins to speak of the adoption of believers, and represents, in what follows, that its full benefits are not to be received till “the redemption of the body”—the last words of the 23d verse; where the beginning and the end of what he says on this subject of adoption, are strikingly brought together. To this general topick, then, all the intermediate verses have some reference, either direct or remote. In the 16th and 17th verses the Apostle speaks of the high privileges of the “children of God,” his adopted sons. In the 18th verse, he speaks of their sufferings in “this present time;” and then, agreeably to a method of writing often to be met with in his epistles, and particularly in this letter to the Romans, he goes into an explanatory digression relative to these sufferings, which he finishes by showing, as already observed, at the close of the 23d verse, that their complete termination is not to be expected, till the full benefits of adoption shall be received—till body and soul shall be glorified together, in the resurrection at the last day. Of this glorious consummation he then proceeds.
speak, in the 24th and 25th verses, as the object both of the Christian’s hope and patience.

Let it farther be remarked, that the body of man was originally formed for immortality. Death was not the original “debt of our nature,” as it is now sometimes called—it is only the debt of that nature, which has been contracted by sin. By sin all the sufferings and diseases of the body, as well as its final dissolution, have been brought upon man; and from a sinful body, with its corruptions and lusts, the sufferings of the renewed man are chiefly derived. It is therefore with peculiar propriety and beauty, that, according to our interpretation of the word ἐνεργεία, the Apostle, after having mentioned the sufferings of believers in “this present time,” makes a short digression, to show how they were introduced; how great has been their extension; how they will cleave to believers till death; and how all will be infinitely more than compensated, when the suffering, polluted, and dying body, shall be raised “a glorious body;” be indissolubly united to the happy spirit, and both be admitted, in the bliss of heaven, to the full inheritance of the sons of God.

Let it be still farther remarked, that the Apostle, from the 14th verse of this chapter to the end of it, is speaking exclusively of true believers. Whatever he says, therefore, of the human body, in this part of his letter, relates only to the bodies of the saints; except in the 22d verse, where, for the purpose of illustration, he refers incidentally to the general effects of man’s sin, on the whole sensitive and material creation.

Let it finally be observed, that the author of this essay does not propose to change the translation of the word rendered creature in the common version, into the phrase our bodily frame. He proposes no change in the translation, but only to show what is the meaning of the word creature in this passage. And he is very sensible that there will appear to the cursory reader a disagreeable awkwardness, in substituting a phrase consisting of three words, for something otherwise expressed by a single term. Yet the true test of a definition or explanation is, that it may take the place of that which is defined or explained; although this can seldom be done without the sacrifice of conciseness, and elegance of expression. To this test it is wished to put the explanatory phrase our bodily frame; and the writer must beg the reader to dismiss, as much as he can, all regard to sound and to neatness of expression; and to consider simply, whether the substitution of the phrase for the single term, will not free the passage from obscurity, and bear to be carried throughout the whole.

After these remarks, in which verbal criticism has been unavoidable, we shall give the common version of the passage we consider, with the proposed interpretation of ἐνεργεία, subjoined in brackets wherever the word creature occurs; and then, in an opposite column, an exposition calculated to show, according to the views of the writer, the true and full meaning of the Apostle, and the peculiar pertinency which it is supposed is given to all that he says, by the new explanation of the word on which the whole is made to turn. By a careful attention to the first column, substituting what is contained in brackets instead of the word creature, wherever that word appears, the reader will be able to judge for himself, whether the substitution does, or does not, clear up the obscurity of the passage. In the second column, he will see what manner the writer supposes the Apostle’s meaning may be expanded and explained. The 18th, 22d, and 25th verses are introduced, merely to show the connexion of the expounded verses with those that precede and follow them. Some references will be made to notes at the end of the exposition, containing remarks which could not so conveniently be elsewhere introduced.
19. For the earnest expectation of the creature [our bodily frame] waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

20. For the creature [our bodily frame] was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope.

21. Because the creature itself [our very bodily frame] shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God.
22. For we know that every creature [every bodily frame] groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now:

23. And not only they, but ourselves also which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

* As before intimated, we here adopt the marginal reading.
EXPOSITION.

period which will intervene between death and the resurrection, we are only waiting for the full effects of our adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body; and the ineffable and unending bliss, which, as I have already shown, shall then be ours.

24. For we are saved by hope, but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for:

25. But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

(a) Many critics in sacred literature have remarked, that the Greek word ἀποκαθαρδέω, here translated earnest expectation, "signifies the lifting of the head, and the stretching of the body as far as possible, to hear and see something very agreeable or of great importance, and therefore that it is fitly used to denote the greatest earnestness of desire."—Macnight. Yet Schleusner, quoting Fischerus, condemns this criticism, and insists that the term signifies nothing more than simply to hope for, or expect.

(b) Gen. iii. 16. "Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception: in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall reign over thee." Is it not reasonable to suppose that when the apostle spoke of the sufferings brought on the world by the sin of our first parents, and compared them to the cries and pains of a woman in travail, he had in his view the text of scripture here quoted, in which the sentence is recorded by which the sorrows of parturition were inflicted? Yet the criticism of Macnight seems to be well founded, that "the original word οἰκεῖα may be translated, suffereth acute pains together; for ὀδυοῖ does not signify to bring forth, but to suffer pain in child bearing. Accordingly οἰκεῖα, from which this word is derived, signifies any acute pain whatever—Matt. xxiv. 8. Mark. xiii. 8."

(c) By "we ourselves" the apostle must here mean, not exclusively his fellow apostles and others who were of eminence in the primitive church, but all sincere Christians indiscriminately; because in the 24th and 25th verses, he applies what he here says to all who have the hope of the gospel, and who wait with patience for the full manifestation of the sons of God.

Miscellaneous.

THE MAN OF FALSE HONOUR.

The late duel at Washington city, between the Secretary of State and a Senator of the United States, has been a source of shame and mortification to every citizen of the American union, who understands wherein consists the true honour of his country; and of grief and anxiety to every sincere Christian, who sees in it the increase of our national guilt, and an example which will probably prove fatal to many of our unreflecting youth, by leading them to adopt the same disgraceful and murderous method of settling their disputes and quarrels. No Christian advocate ought to be silent on such an occasion. He must forfeit his character, if he do not speak plainly and earnestly. Reserving therefore some further remarks to his view of public affairs, the editor of the Christian Advocate has determined to insert in this part of his work an exposure of the principle of duelling, and of its horrible consequences. This he will do by putting together some extracts from a sermon delivered to the youth of his charge, in the college of New Jersey, while he resided in that institution. The sermon has already been published at length, but has probably not been seen by most of the readers of this miscellany. The text of the discourse was, Mark vi. 26. "And the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oaths’ sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her." The character of the man of false honour was illustrated in that of Herod, as manifested by the murder of John the Baptist, in fulfilment of his oath to grant to Herodias, the daughter of his adulterous and incestuous wife, whatsoever she should ask, "even to the half of his kingdom." With these explanations, it is believed the extracts, taken from different parts of the discourse, will be sufficiently intelligible.

It was infinitely absurd for a man so abandoned as Herod was, to pretend to feel a moral obligation to do a thing most unrighteous in itself, after disregarding every obligation to do what was right. How was it, then, that "for his oaths’ sake" he was induced to act as he did? Must we believe that he was left of God to such a perversion of mind as really to think, and feel, and act, as if he were bound to keep bad oaths or promises, although he had violated, and was then living in the violation of the most sacred vows and engagements? Was he abandoned to such an infatuation, was he given up to such utter delusion, as actually to consider himself under some strange kind of obligation, to risk his reputation, to risk his life, and to act against the plainest principles of moral equity, rather than break the oaths he had made, or even give them another construction than that which his adulterous wife and her wicked daughter had chosen to put upon them? It certainly does appear, in fact, that such men as Herod was, will not unfrequently make an unlawful oath or vow, and keep it scrupulously, when they can be bound by no moral tie. They will bring themselves under an oath, or a curse, to do, or to forbear, a certain thing—a thing sometimes right and sometimes wrong in itself—and this engagement no consideration will induce them to violate. All this, however, may probably be resolved into that same principle of false honour, on which, as I apprehend, the whole conduct of Herod on this occasion must be explained.

I call that false honour which sets up a standard by which a man must think meanly or honourably of himself, and be so estimated by others, when, this standard is notwithstanding opposed to some plain and important principles of moral duty, as taught and sanctioned by reason, conscience, and the word of God. Honour always purports to be something that is noble, dignified or generous; and nothing surely can be truly so, which is characterized by the contrariety I have mentioned. It may be called honour, but it must be called so falsely; and therefore, without any harshness or exaggeration, it may be denominated false honour.

Now there have been men, in every age, who have been prone to establish such a false standard as we contemplate, and to make the point of honour consist in a strict conformity to it. Certain principles and practices, hostile to the duty which is due both to God and man, they, by a kind of tacit compact, agree to consider as marking the character of the man who acts honourably, splendidly, nobly; and who of course renders himself worthy of the esteem, countenance and company of these
The Man of False Honour.

...according to their classification, men of honour. And on the one hand, those who will not conform to their principles and standard, agree to consider and treat as an inspired, contemptible and unqualified for the regard of honourable men. Some of the patrons of this system, all religion with open contempt. Others profess to reverence its tenets generally; and some of them, Herod, retain no inconsiderable bility of conscience. In all cases, however, they are manifestly infidels. They attempt to ape the divine commands by regulations of their own, which diametrically oppose those commands, and establish a system of human law and a criterion of character, direct hostility with that which has prescribed, and which he sanctioned, not only in his word, but in the natural conscience of man.

* * * * *

Ah! it is a dreadful situation when a man has gone so far in vice, that he is in a sort compelled to go farther; that he cannot retreat without shame and confusion, nor go forward without increasing his guilt and sealing his perdition. How cautiously, should the first steps be avoided which may lead to such a fearful issue!

But an alternative, after all, it has been supposed and said, was left to Herod, by the adoption of which he might have wavered a compliance with the revolting request of Salome, without forfeiting his honour, even in the estimation of his companions. He might, it has been suggested, have told her, that he felt himself at liberty, to make her a gift more valuable than that which she asked, though certainly not to make one that was less so: that seeing her disposed to wrong herself, by asking what he was sure she would eventually regret, he must interpose to prevent it, and would do so by granting her what he knew would afford her the most lasting satisfaction: and then, that he might have made her a present which would have been a proud display of his royal power and liberality.

It is not certain, however, that Herod had time or sobriety enough to think of such an alternative as this; nor, if it had been suggested, that either he or his companions would have judged that its adoption would preserve his honour. It is true, indeed, that those who claim for themselves exclusively the character of men of honour, do seem, at times, to go a good deal farther than their own principles require. But it must be recollected that those who have not been taught in their school, are probably not competent judges, either of their maxims or their feelings. The wretched monarch whose case we consider, had sworn to give Salome whatever she should ask. Now, to propose anything else than what she did ask, might seem to reflect on her choice; and not to consist with that high and delicate regard to sex and rank, which men of honour always affect. It might also appear unprincipled; as implying, either that he wanted the power, or else that he was afraid, to do what had been required: and to be afraid of anything, except the loss of honour—a fear even of the wrath of Him “who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell,” is what—I speak it with horror—is never permitted to a man of false honour, when that honour is at stake. The fact undoubtedly was, that the fidelity of John had given an offence to Herodias, for which she was resolved that nothing but his blood should ever atone. No gratification could be put in place of this; Herod knew it well, and probably they who sat with him knew it too. When therefore, this was asked, his honour, he thought, was concerned to grant it, without hesitation or evasion; because to do otherwise, would be considered as a reproachful shrinking from his promise and oaths, by those with whom he was associated. Yes—that the plain truth must appear like paradox or irony—a nice sense of honour required, in his opinion, that he should immediately kill the best man in his kingdom, and cause his reeking head to be brought in a charger to a royal banquet, and there that it should be formally delivered to the enchanting damsel, who had requested this princely present, and that she should take it and deliver it to her mother, who had prompted her to demand it. The point of honour required exactly this bloody proceeding, and admitted of no alternative. It was nothing; therefore, though the thing itself was shocking beyond all description—so shocking that we wonder how female lips could ever request it, or female hands help to execute it; nothing, though “the king was exceeding sorry” that he had sworn to comply with this request; nothing, though the compliance would strike at his character, safety and conscience, all at once; nothing, though it was forbidden by every law of God, of justice and of humanity—as a man of honour, he could not and would not refuse it. He did not refuse it—the holy Baptist was that night beheaded; and a sting was fastened in the bosom of this man of honour, which no time or efforts could ever extract, whose poison no art could mitigate, and whose corroding anguish, through the whole of subsequent life, was, we have reason to fear, the earnest only of the gnawings of that worm which should never die, and the torments of that fire which should never be quenched.

From what has been said in regard to Herod, you may learn that the principles on which he acted, are the very same on which men of false honour act at the present time.
The Deaf and Dumb.

213

consider the duellist. He has ested a standard of honour, in option to the dictates of revelation, n and conscience. In a hasty guarded moment, or perhaps, ed, with coolness and deliberation he has given or provoked a rage, and is pledged to a deadly at—it may be with one whom u loved or venerated. He has a or children, or parents, or ds, who, in a few hours may over his lifeless corpse, and to latest hour of life suffer anguish, perhaps poverty too, as the conscience of his rash act; while his soul, all covered with its crimes, tself-seen to the bar of God, shall there to receive its unchanging nation. Or suppose it is his an whose is to fall. Then, though mive, he may be corrodcd with rse to the end of his days. The re of his murdered brother, hur to the eternal world, may haunt reams, and seem to tell him of her meeting beyond the grave. what of all this! The challenge fallen and accepted; and man of honour has promised with tth, never to refuse such a call now made upon him. Although or, when he reflects on these es, he is "exceeding sorry" he is thus circumstances; yet, is oath's and honour's sake, and their sakes who have been his en associates, he will not refuse right. He will do it, though all moral and all eternal considera—honour alone excepted—form. Honour in one scale, and the tenderest endearments of life, the alternative of heaven or hell other—honour preponderates, fights and falls; or he lives, to a thousand deaths! And are 2, O false honour! these the offer—that must be made at thy shrine? a bloody Moloch! thou fiend acc! depart from earth to thy na-hell! Precious youth of my ge—I charge you, in the name Christ our Saviour, have nothing a with this sanguinary demon. matter what are the consequences of not accepting a challenge. They weigh less, in comparison with those which follow an acceptance, than the dust of the balance against the everlasting mountains.

THE DEAF AND DUMB ENTIRELY DESTITUTE OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

In our number for March, 1825, we reviewed a sermon of the Rev. Thomas H. Gallaudet, principal of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Hartford, in Connecticut. We took that occasion to state, that "a very intelligent correspondent had requested us to ascertain and publish, whether the Deaf and Dumb have any distinct notions of a Supreme Being; before those notions are communicated to them by the happy means of instruction lately devised and brought into use. The avowed design of this inquiry was, to use the information that should be obtained, in settling the question, whether, without revelation, the knowledge of the being and attributes of God could ever have been possessed by mankind." We also then stated, that we had consulted on this subject a gentleman who had been for some time employed in teaching the Deaf and Dumb, and had requested him to consult Mr. Gallaudet, and to give us their united opinion, corroborated by any additional circumstances with which he might become acquainted. The gentleman of whom we made this request, was the Rev. William C. Woodbridge, whose name there is no reason to conceal, and which we mention to give weight to his testimony. Shortly after we made our request, he left the United States for Europe, where he still remains. It appears that although a reply to our request has been delayed, the delay is to be attributed wholly to the desire of Mr. Woodbridge to collect as much evidence as possible, relative to the enquiry in which he has been engaged, and which he has prosecuted very extensively and carefully. A few weeks since, Mr. Gallaudet kindly transmitted to us the communications which we now publish. Both he and Mr. Woodbridge consider the question referred to, as settled by the incontrovertible facts which they state; and the very able principal of the Deaf and Dumb in the Pennsylvania Institution, Mr. Weld, appears, by a late publication, to be of the same mind. Our opinion, as expressed in the review of Mr. Gallaudet's sermon, was different; and we cannot say that we have yet resigned it. But we admit that very competent judges seem to be decisively against us. We shall first publish an extract of a letter from Mr. Woodbridge, from London, which accompanied the article addressed to the Editor of the Christian Advocate. The article itself will follow, which it appears was written at Edinburgh; and then an extract from the letter of Mr. Gallaudet, in which the whole was transmitted to us.

My dear Sir,—I promised long since the enclosed paper, but deferred it in hope of having more full evidence on the subject. I send all that my information and time admit—to be used as you think best. I have enclosed it to Mr. Gallaudet that he may correct it, or add to it.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Mr. Editor,—The correspondent whose communication you handed me some time since, desires information concerning the natural condition of the deaf and dumb, as a means of solving the problem whether the idea of God is innate; or whether the human mind will attain it independently of revelation. I agree with him in regarding it as an evidence of great importance; for the deaf and dumb are the only beings with whom we can have any communication, who are entirely cut off from the stream of traditional revelation. Indeed it is now so well understood that visible, as well as audible signs, may be employed to convey ideas, that it will readily be seen how many of them may learn from their friends the opinions entertained by them on this subject—in the same manner as they are ultimately taught them in public institutions. All of those who reside in Christian countries have their minds directed towards this as a subject of inquiry—by the continual exhibition of the worship and ordinances of religion, which they must soon discover to have no reference to any thing connected with the world around them. Many of them establish complete communication with their families and acquaintances, on all common subjects; and must, therefore, be supposed to inquire and receive some degree of information concerning these, to them, extraordinary appearances. If one intelligent mind, under all these advantages, is still enveloped in darkness, as to religious truths, it seems to me to afford complete proof that the ideas in question are not originally implanted in man. If most, or all, are in the same condition, it is a strong presumption, that they would not be generally acquired by fallen beings, without the aid of tradition or revelation. We must not forget that this is a question of fact merely, and that we have only to judge of the capacity or credibility of the witnesses, and not of the abstract principle involved. These views have led me to make particular inquiries on this subject, during an intercourse of several years with the deaf and dumb, and in my visits to the deaf and dumb institutions of the United States and of Europe.

On the first point, the evidence seems to me incontrovertible. Not one, but many, intelligent deaf and dumb persons have been found utterly ignorant on this subject, and after acquiring a knowledge of written language and of religious truth, tated explicitly that they had
sly no conceptions of a God.
Thusly, the celebrated pupil of the Scard, and deaf and dumb is birth, is a living witness to point in our own country; and mony of his companion, Mass equally decisive. The eviof a deaf and dumb instructor
stitute at Edinburgh, and her from the school of Genoa,
th of whom I have had the re of conversing, is precisely ne. The reports of deaf and stitutions, furnish many teses to the same effect, in the ge of the pupils themselves.
extracts from those of the in-ion at Hartford, will illustrate oint sufficiently. In the sixth man of 18, in-
 about his former condition,
Growing up, I had no know-
of reading and understanding ly Bible of God; and I did not that God created the universe.”
seventh report, a young lady
—I have some correct ideas
f the wonderful creations of nd the merciful atonement of
. Before I came to the asy-had no correct ideas of God rist.” In the eighth report, a man of 17, writes thus cong his situation before instruc-
When I was grown, I was hat like the beasts; that is,
ul was in utter darkness. “I idea of God, who is of uni-
power, and fills the immensity iverse.” A young lady of scribing herself and her deaf
umb sister, says—“We had no
God and Jesus Christ. I my mother, or sisters, or what the pictures in the holy
were? and they answered me, erly God had created every
the world; but I did not und.” In the ninth report, a man of 21, writes a history
ife, observes—“Before I was ed, my mind was darkened orant of religion. But I said self, I determined to defend against death was come; for
I thought there was no existence of God, but the earth stood firm itself,
and the sun himself moved round
the earth.”

A deaf and dumb young lady, of more than ordinary intelligence, and whose thirst for knowledge, and coniction of its value, were so great,
that previous to instruction, she often wept with disappointment that she could not learn, was brought by circumstances to associate for years with well informed persons; and many attempts were made by her friends to give her some idea of God.
When asked what idea she had of God, she said that her friend had shown her the name of the Deity, and endeavoured to explain it; but the only conception she could form
was, that it was a number of strong men living at a distance in the sky,
who printed the Bible and sent it to us. On being asked if she had never thought, in looking at the works of ature, that these must have a Maker. She replied—“Never.”— Another female, of great intelligence,
had so little idea of referring to a first cause, that she imagined that her parents produced the rain and thunder, and vented her passion
upon them, when they caused her
any disappointment or apprehension;
although every effort in their power was made to correct her error. In this case and another which fell under my own observation, the decisive evidence of their ignorance was af-furred by the fact of which they afterward assured me; that for several months they utterly disbelieved
all that their instructors taught them
on religious subjects.

With regard to the second question, whether this ignorance is general among the deaf and dumb, the evidence is not less decisive. I have visited the principal institutions in the United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy, and all the deaf and dumb persons whose testimony
I have been able to obtain, confirms entirely the extracts given above;
and agree in stating, that the deaf and dumb have originally no idea of a Supreme Being, a Creator, a Preserver, or a Ruler of the world. I have never heard of but one opposing testimony, and this proved to be that of an impostor. It may serve as a useful caution to state the circumstance. A gentleman familiar with the deaf and dumb, was shown a reply to a question on this subject, written by a person professing to be deaf and dumb, who had visited the first institution established in Philadelphia. It declared in the most explicit terms, that the deaf and dumb had the knowledge of a Deity before instruction; and was deemed a triumphant refutation of the opposite opinion. The gentleman to whom it was shown, pronounced without hesitation, from the opinion expressed, but especially from the style, that it could not have been written by a deaf and dumb person. In the result, it appeared that he had feigned dullness, to conceal his designs upon a deaf and dumb boy, whom he had fraudulently got into his power.
The Deaf and Dumb.

The evidence of those who are connected with the deaf and dumb, goes to establish the same general ignorance of a Deity among them. The language of the reports of public institutions, is uniform on this subject, so far as I have been able to examine them. The Edinburgh report of 1824, may serve as an example. In speaking of the natural condition of the deaf and dumb, the committee observe—"From the things which are seen, they have opportunities of inferring proofs, of infinite power and intelligence; but into such matters, how can their uncultivated minds be supposed to inquire? and it is quite certain, that though surrounded by the most intelligent, and devout, and excellent of the earth, they are so exclusively engrossed with objects of sense, and so reckless of every thing serious and solemn, that God is not in all their thoughts. While they are strangers to God, they must be without hope."

The opinion of all the instructors of the schools of Europe and America, with whom I have conversed, is precisely the same, with a single exception. It is proper to state, that his acquaintance with the deaf and dumb was limited; and that he did not adduce any opposing testimony from the deaf and dumb themselves; but believed that God would not leave them in ignorance of himself, and was confirmed in this opinion by the solemnity with which they attended to religious instruction. I need not show the little weight which such an opinion can have. I cannot express the general opinion of the instructors of the deaf and dumb whom I have known, better than in the eloquent language of the first of our countrymen who entered this field of Christian benevolence, in a sermon delivered on behalf of the American asylums—

"I have seen the affecting spectacle of an immortal spirit exhibiting the possession of every energy of thought and feeling which mark the most exalted of our species, inhabiting a body arrived to its age of full and blooming maturity, speaking through an eye, whose piercing lustre beamed with intelligence, and sparkled with joy at the acquisition of a new idea. I have seen such a spirit—oh! it was a melancholy sight—earnestly contemplate—

The boundless store
Of charms which Nature to her votary yields,
And all the dread magnificence of heaven;
while such an amphitheatre of beauty, and order, and splendour, raised not in this mind which viewed it, the notion of an Almighty hand that formed and sustained the whole."

I will only add—if there are 3000 of our countrymen in this state of hopelessness, heathenish darkness—their claim upon the benevolence of Christians is stronger than that of any other heathen on earth. What will the Master say of that church, which suffers one such heathen to grow up within its borders, unnoticed and unenlightened? W.

Edinburgh, Nov. 1825.
Exposition of a Common Saying.

It might be curious to see accurately marked, the different acceptations of terms, as used in the circle of fashion, of politics, or of business; but my present object is to notice the varying import of a phrase which has obtained a wide currency in the religious world.

I can do nothing. The sense of this short and oft-repeated sentence, can be known only by an acquaintance with those who use it. In the mouth of a man whose possessions are large, and whose soul is narrow and selfish, it means, “I will not draw my purse strings.” A stranger applies to him for pecuniary aid to some suffering family, or some useful institution, but the answer he gives is, “I can do nothing.” The applicant is perhaps startled and puzzled by the utterance of these words, so little accordant with the proofs of influence which strike his eyes. He urges his suit, and tries to touch some string of humanity or benevolence, but in vain. The looks and replies of the Curmudgeon begin at length to discover his ruling passion. His character, once known, furnishes a key to open the paradox in his speech. We turn indignantly away, and cry, “Poor wretch! what ability canst thou have for any good, while loaded with the oppressive chains of mammon?”

I can do nothing, in the mouth of a trembling time-server, or thorough-paced party-man, means “I dare not offend my superiors, or displease my... associate." His conscience is not in his own keeping; or rather, as a dignified clergyman once said, "he cannot afford to keep a conscience." Before any thing can be done by him, he must consult some Diotrephes, or sound the minds and movements of those with whom he has agreed to act an under part. Interest and prejudice have robbed him of independence, and left him but a narrow scope for choice.

_I can do nothing_, in the lips of an Antinomian, is self-justification, or indolence. He has a small measure of knowledge, but a large stock of conceit; he deals out strange startling language, and condemns without reserve all who differ from him; his chief aim is to spread mischief, and cause divisions. It were well, indeed, if, in reference to these things, his favourite expression were literally true, that he could do nothing. Let him have his own high doctrines, and he discards duties. Let who will visit and relieve the poor, instruct the children of ignorance, send the gospel to benighted heathen, _he can do nothing_. Let zealous ministers employ every effort to recommend the use of appointed means, for promoting the life of godliness, he evades every pressing exhortation, by the convenient subterfuge, _I can do nothing_. Miserable, deluded man! thy words are but too true! for thou hast drunk in those errors, which first intoxicate, and finally poison and paralyse the soul.

_I can do nothing_, in the mouth of a sound and sincere Christian, is self-annihilation or genuine humility. With him such language is not a cloak for avarice, prejudice, or indolence. He feels and owns his constant dependance on God, but refuses all servile subjection to fallible fellow men. Nay, the same sentiment which humbles him in devotion, animates in action. By myself I can do nothing; but I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me. Hence, Lord, I dedicate to thee my time, property, talents, and all I have and am. Thy service is perfect freedom; and I feel happy in proportion as I yield myself wholly to it. O, come, thou Spirit of wisdom and grace, enlighten my mind and warm my heart, and work in me to will and to do, of thy good pleasure; let me never grow weary in well-doing; for in due season I shall reap if I faint not.—[Evangelical Magazine for Feb. 1826.]

---

ANECDOTE.

The Reverend John Brown, the author of the valuable Dictionary of the Bible; and afterwards Professor of Divinity in the Theological seminary of the Associate (Burgler) Synod of Scotland, was called by the congregation of Haddington to become their pastor, very soon after he had been licensed to preach. The call was a harmonious one. The voice of one man only, prevented it from being unanimous. But that person possessed considerable influence in the church, and in the neighbourhood; and great fears were entertained that he would exert that influence in disturbing the peace of the church, and in marling the comfort and usefulness of the minister.

Mr. Brown neither sought nor shunned his presence. But it so happened that after his accepting the call—but previously to his ordination, he met with this person. With his usual frankness, he took the gentleman by the hand, and begged him to state his reasons for opposing him and voting against him. "I am as frank as you are, Mr. Brown," replied he, "and I beg leave to say that my reason for voting against you is a strong one; and it can be told in one word: _J do not think you are a good preacher._"

"There we are perfectly agreed," replied Mr. Brown: "I know it as well as you do, my friend, and I say frankly as you do, that I am a good preacher. But then Mr. Brown, as he shook neighbour heartily by the hand, while you and I are perfectly well on this particular—where is the use of you and me setting up opinions and views against the whole parish?"

The gentleman laughed heartily and told Mr. Brown that he had utterly disarmed him; and added, "I begin to be of your opinion—you will find that I shall not myself up against the views and opinions of the whole parish?" He was afterwards his best friend.

I am persuaded that it would add greatly to the peace and satisfaction of our churches—and I am sure that it would add greatly to our mutual comfort and happiness, if the brethren associated together in the house of God, if we could heartily reciprocate this and imitate the praiseworthy example of these two men.—[Mag. formed Dutch Church.]

REV. MR. STEWART’S PRIVATE JOURNAL.

(Continued from p. 169.)

Wednesday night, Aug. 10th. The day of this evening, my sister, being of a different character from have yet made on these shores, far tranquillity and peace, with tending prospects of blessedness, these islands, have been the con-subject of my communications: violence, death, and war, now or a note from my pen.

I have just completed every station this afternoon, for our to Maui to-morrow, in the Wahinah, and were making a visit to our friends, Mr. and Ellis, when the pilot boat New was seen approaching the harbor from Tana. She had scarce to an anchor outside the reef, instead of welcoming Karaimoku, Mr. and Mrs. Bingham, as we had expected, the whole town, as well as our families, was thrown into agitation, by the intelligence of a rebellion and battle at that island, and of the necessary desertion of the station at Waimea by Mr. B. and Mr. Whitney, for the safety of themselves and families.

G. P. Tamoree is supposed to be the head of the insurgents—they attacked the fort at daybreak on Sabbath morning; it was saved with difficulty, and not till the assaulting party was killed. Among the latter were two foreigners, with one of whom, a young Englishman, of the name of Trowbridge, I have had very considerable intercourse. Karaimoku immediately after the repulse of the rebel party, (a part of whose plan, it appears, was to cut him off at the same time they seized the fort,) sent for the missionaries to return thanks to God with him, for his deliverance—to inform them that the pilot-boat would sail immediately to Oahu for assistance, and to urge their departure with their families by the opportunity—assuring them that he would protect them with his life so long as he lived, but at the same time intimating a fear that from the weakness of the party with him, they might all perish.

Our friends have suffered much from the horrors of the scene they witnessed at the storming of the fort, and on their visit to it after the battle, while it was yet filled with the bodies of the slain, and echoing with the groans of the wounded and dying—much from anxiety for the safety of Karaimoku, and much from fatigue and privation, having embarked without taking any refreshment, or preparing anything for the voyage, which has been 48 hours long. They were all completely drenched with the surf, in getting off in a canoe to the schooner, and had not the means of changing the clothes even of the two infants with them.

We fear this may prove only the beginning of troubles to the nation.
We have no apprehensions for our own personal safety, but our hearts bleed at the thought of witnessing the violence of the heathen against each other; and our prayer is, that He who rules over all will have compassion on them, and spare them the heavier judgments of his providence, in the curses of war.

The evening has been one of intense interest, while we have listened to the narrative of our friends, and our worship a season of tender and devout thanksgiving, that our brothers and sisters, with their little ones, have been brought to our arms from amid “the ragings of the people,” and the scenes of death. We hope the news will not prevent the departure of the brig for Maui in the morning. We feel more than ever anxious to reach our home and associates, and by the return of Mr. Bingham, every necessity of our remaining is removed.

Thursday, Aug. 12th. On board the brig Tamaahmaah. Much to our joy, a messenger from Capt. Ebbets and Capt. Meek came to us at sunrise yesterday, with the information that the vessel would sail immediately after breakfast. At 9 o’clock, after having parted with our friends at a throne of grace, we came on board, accompanied by Mr. Bingham, Mr. Ellis, and Mr. Chamberlain. At 11, they left us with the pilot, the brig having gained the open sea; after which we fired a salute, and filled away with a fresh breeze. There never was a finer day; and under a cloud of bellying canvas, our rapid bark leapt from billow to billow, dashing every opposing wave in banks of foam back upon the deep, while the sportings of the porpoises, the hurried motions of the flying fish, and the bright beauty of the dolphin below, and the lofty soaring and shrill cry of the tropick bird above, hurried our recollections back through the voyage of two oceans.

We had the prospect of making a very short passage, but at 8 o’clock, were becalmed off the south-west point of Ranai, where we still are. The delay is unpleasant, but with the elegant accommodations of the brig, and the polite attentions of the gentlemen to whom we are indebted for a passage, we do not feel impatient. All the windward islands are now in sight. Immediately before us, at a distance of 8 or 10 miles, are the lofty precipices of Kohola on Ranai; still further to the north, the more elevated summits of Morokoi appear, with Oahu in the distance, almost lost in a bed of light and graceful clouds. On the east is Maui, more romantic in its outline than any of the others—and on the south Tahoorawa, far behind which, rise the sublime mountains of Hawaii.

I ought not to forget to mention, that two vessels sailed from Honolulu for the relief of Kaimoku at Tanai, the same time we did, carrying about 400 men, well equipped for service. Although the intelligence had been known scarce twelve hours, 900 men were mustered and ready armed for embarkation at sunrise. Scarce any thing was heard during the night but the rolling of the drum and the discharging of muskets, by way of trying their fitness for use. In the morning, all seemed to have entered into the spirit of the occasion. Scarce any one was to be seen without some of the insignia beli—caps, cartridge boxes, feathers, swords or muskets, while every step and every look was en militaire.

10 o’clock at night. We are still on board the Tamaahmaah, the calm having continued till within the last three hours. The disappointment of not spending the night at our home, has been more than made up by the uncommon loveliness of the evening. A full moon riding through a sky more serene and lucid than is often seen in ruder latitudes, throws shades of softness and beauty over the wild features of the islands, and crowns every heaving billow with a silver crest, while a fresh and balmy breeze hurries us forward with an animating rapidity. The ship's company presents one of the happier sketches of sea life. The courses are hauled up, that the helmsman may steer by a landmark on the top of the mountains overhanging Lahaina, which leaves the view of the whole deck unobstructed. The captain and officers are silently walking their respective stations, while an occasional loud laugh and exclamation from the forecastle, signify the manner in which the watch below are enjoying their partial release from duty. The rest of the crew are variously grouped—some leaning over the bows, watching the dashing of the waves, as they are furrowed by our bark, or the transient illumination of the water by a sudden movement of one of the larger inhabitants of the deep—others are lounging on the gunwales or against the long-boat, while a still greater number are mounted on their favourite station, the windlass—one of these last is playing with skill and taste on a clarionette, in which he is accompanied by three or four good voices, singing many of the more modern and fashionable songs, occasionally relieved, perhaps by way of kindly remembrance of former scenes and distant friends, by one or two verses of "Auld lang syne." This may be called a domestic scene at sea, and answers to the happy fireside at home, when the business, the duties, and the cares of the day, give place to the indulgences of a leisure hour, and the joys of social life. I could not contemplate it, without admiring the wisdom and the goodness of God to all his creatures, in denying to none the common sources of contentment and happiness, and in so constituting man, that all the ordinary situations of life have pleasures and joys for those to whose lot they fall. But, though interesting and pleasant, it has not been, like some of the happy evenings at sea we once knew, whilst floating on the bosom of the Pacific. No, I have no reason to believe that the Spirit of God is here—but the decks of the Thames did, at least at times, give evidence of his presence.

Saturday, Aug. 14th. After breakfast on board the T. yesterday morning, we once more entered our humble habitation, and met the warm embraces of our beloved Mr. and Mrs. R. Lahaina never before appeared so beautiful: nothing but necessity could induce me to exchange the fresh sea breeze and foaming surf that rolls almost into our door, for a residence near the dusty plain, and stagnant marshes and fish ponds, about the mission house at Honoruru. Notwithstanding this, Oahu is unquestionably the most fertile and most beautiful of the islands, and from the constant prevalence of the trade winds, is among the most healthy.

This morning Capt. Meek politely sent on shore the packages he has been kind enough to bring from my friends in New York. They consisted of three boxes, and a barrel containing articles of very considerable value. My friend and classmate, E. H. Johnson, has very handsomely furnished me with a set of mathematical and philosophical instruments, including a good telescope, barometer, microscope, &c. &c. with a pair of handsome globes. Many other friends have remembered us with similar kindness. They have our gratitude—but we know not how to express it. Whatever they have given in the name of a disciple, will meet a disciple's reward.

As the duty of writing the publick record of the station will now devolve on me, and though I know of no immediate opportunity of sending this, I will close it with the present date. I would, however, first remark, that the state of the people in reference to spiritual things, was never more interesting than at present. The chiefs are making rapid advances in religious intelligence, and the subject of salvation is evidently taking the highest place, in the hearts and thoughts of many of the most powerful persons in the nation. For many of these we feel a strong personal attachment—and you yourself, my dear sister, would with us love them, could you but see them as they are. Their looks of affection and gratitude to us—the starting tear, at the open and almost daily declaration, “we do love the word of God, we do love Jehovah and Jesus Christ, we do rejoice in this day of light, this time of good tidings and of salvation,” &c. &c.
would melt a less tender heart,
would touch a less susceptible bosom
than belongs to my sister. If we do not find in the scenery of the islands
all the variety and beauty of an Amerivan landscape—if we most sensibly feel the loss of our friends, and with them the elegance, the refinement,
and intelligence, of civilized society
—if we are daily conscious of a tenderness and intensity of affection for you and for all our friends, which we cannot describe, still we are happy
in our work, and would not leave
it without a call in providence,
clear and indubitable as that of a voice from heaven. While these are our feelings, do not lead us to suppose by your silence, that we are forgotten or unloved, but by your journal and your letters—by constant communications, refresh our hearts
and cheer our spirits, both, too often,
unavoidably depressed by the debilitating influence of a warm climate,
and the various cares and fatigue,
inseparable from our work. By doing thus, you will not only be insuring us much happiness, but you will also do the cause good, by inspiring us with fresh vigour, and giving a renewed impulse to our exertions. Such we find to be the happy influence of the communications of all our friends
yet received. Yours in the tenderest and best of bonds,

CHARLES SAMUEL STEWART
(To be continued.)

TRANSLATION OF THE DIES IRE.

On that great, that awful day,
This vain world shall pass away.
Thus the sibyl sang of old;
Thus hath holy David told.
There shall be a deadly fear
When the Avenger shall appear,
And, unveiled before his eye,
All the works of man shall lie.

Hark! to the great trumpet’s tones,
Pealing o’er the place of bones.
Hark! it waketh from their bed
All the nations of the dead,
In a countless throng to meet
At the eternal judgment-seat.

Nature sickens with dismay;
Death may not retain his prey;
And before the Maker stand
All the creatures of his hand.
The great book shall be unfurled,
Whereby God shall judge the world.
What was distant shall be near;
What was hidden shall be clear.

To what shelter shall I fly?
To what guardian shall I cry?
In that destroying hour,
Source of goodness, Source of power,
Shew thou, of thine own free grace,
Help unto a helpless race.

Though I plead not at thy throne
Aught that I for thee have done,
Do not thou unmindful be
Of what thou hast borne for me;
Of the wandering, of the scorn,
Of the scourge, and of the thorn.—
JESUS, hast thou borne the pain;
And hast all been borne in vain?

Shall thy vengeance smite the head
For whose ransom thou hast bled?
Thou whose dying blessing gave Glory to a guilty slave;
Thou who from the crew unclean
Didst release the Magdalene;
Shall not mercy vast and free
Evermore be found in thee?

Father, turn on me thine eyes:
See my blushed, hear my cries:
Pain though be the prayers I make,
Save me, for thy mercy’s sake,
From the torments of thine ire
From the worm and from the fire;
Fold me with the sheep that stand
Pure and safe at thy right hand.

Hear thy guilty child implore thee,
Rolling in the dust before thee.
Oh the horrors of the day
When this frame of sinful clay,
Starting from its burial place,
Must behold thee face to face.
Hear and pity; hear and aid;
Spare the creatures thou hast made.
Mercy, mercy! save, forgive;
Or who shall look on Thee and live?

[Chris. Observer for Jan. 1826.]
Dr. Blatchford's Sermon.

Reviews.

In a religious miscellany, of not more than 48 pages, one of the most difficult and delicate duties of an editor is, to determine on the portion of space to be assigned to the several departments of his work: and he may esteem himself fortunate if, after his best endeavours, he, in this particular, avoids giving offence—Among those who patronize his work there is a great diversity of taste, and it can scarcely be expected that some will not think that their taste has not been sufficiently consulted and gratified.

It is in the department of reviews that the difficulty to which we here refer is the greatest of all. Authors, as well as readers in general, are likely to think themselves neglected in this department. The editor, too, may not only be restricted by the want of space, but may not be able to publish as many reviews as he would willingly do, if he either had time to prepare them himself, or could have them furnished by his correspondents. For ourselves, we can say, that our whole time would not suffice to review all the works that are sent us; in such manner as we think every work ought to be reviewed, on which we deliver our opinion to the public. We have stated this, as an apology for ourselves in the matter of reviewing. It has been with regret, and some mortification, that we have omitted altogether the notice of several publications, of which we wished to give even an ample review.

The foregoing remarks seemed to be specially called for on the present occasion; because we are now going to review a single sermon, and thus to make a discrimination between it, and at least a dozen others, which perhaps, in point of composition, are equally meritorious. We have also hitherto done the same, in several instances; and in all this we may be suspected either of neglect or of great partiality. We believe, however, that any suspicion of this kind would be entirely groundless. From the causes already stated, we have, in instances not a few, found ourselves compelled to pass in silence many single sermons of sterling merit; as well as several pamphlets of the same character, treating on topics not altogether of a religious kind. The preference we have given has commonly, if not always, been occasioned by the general interest of the discourse or pamphlet reviewed; or by the local situation of the writer; or by a desire to aid some effort in the promotion of an important design; and by such like considerations we must continue to be governed.

It is seen at once from the title of this sermon, that the subject of it, however trite, is of the greatest public interest; and although the venerable author, in replying to a request for its publication which appears on the second page, says, “it was written without the most distant view to publication,” yet it will be found well deserving of the careful perusal of all into whose hands it may fall. The text of the discourse is Ezek. xx. 12.

Moreover, I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

After a short and pertinent introduction, the preacher says—

“Let me then at present ask your attention, whilst I attempt to revive ou your minds a sense of the important obligations which lie upon us for the sanctifying of a weekly Sabbath, for the ends for which it is instituted.

"By a Sabbath, in general, we are to understand a certain time, which is set apart from other time, and is appropriated as a day of rest, for the purpose of divine worship, and which is so appropriated by divine appointment. It is to be considered as a cessation from ordinary employment; a time, devoted to the duties of worship.

"Now, all who are acquainted with the Old Testament scriptures, will have perceived that there were several times, which, by the authority of the Divine Legislator, were set apart for the observance of the Jewish nation; and these are called Sabbaths; because God had commanded his people to spend them in religious services, and forbidden them on such occasions to engage in any worldly business; such, for instance, were several feast days enumerated in the books of Moses, and such was the great day of expiation. These are to be regarded by us as parts of their ceremonial law, which is now abrogated by the dispensation of the gospel; but over and above these, was a weekly Sabbath, which is solemnly and emphatically impressed in the moral law, and was not designed particularly for them; but is of moral obligation to all, and under every dispensation. In confirmation of this we ask you,

"I. To observe, that the law of nature, itself, which teaches us that there is a God, doth necessarily pour conviction on our minds, that such a Being is to be worshipped by all his intelligent creatures. And, if worshipped by mankind, that it is highly reasonable that some part or proportion of time should be set apart for this purpose."

Little is said on this first head of discourse, and that little we must forbear to quote. The preacher's second position is thus stated—

"II. Reason would naturally suggest to us, that, if it be proper that God should be worshipped at all, that it is suitable and highly desirable, that some particular portion of the time which he gives us should be devoted to his service—some time in which the family of man should meet for his service."

Here it is shown that reason clearly dictates that some portion of our time should be sacredly set apart to the worship of God; and that as reason might have erred, and men would have differed, in forming a judgment as to the proper portion to be appropriated to sacred use, it was wise and merciful in God to tell us what that portion was. It is then added—

"Now this arrangement was as early as the completion of the creation; so that, when man entered upon the first day of his first week, he was brought under the law of the Sabbath. In this we are instructed by the divine historian. 'The heavens and the earth were finished and all the host of them, and on the seventh day God ended the work which he had made, and he rested on the seventh day from all the work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all the work which God created and made.' Nor can it be denied, that it is most reasonable to suppose, that man, immediately after his creation, when a sense of his Maker's kindness and glory was fresh upon his mind, amidst the guiltless scenes of Paradise, would begin his life with the adoration of his Creator; and that his Creator would call him to the religious observation of the first day of his existence, which was the seventh from the beginning of God's mighty work, for the same general reasons as he afterwards prescribed to the Jews a weekly Sabbath.

"These rational deductions, says a learned writer, are confirmed by facts. It is a fact that the Patriarchs, long before the Jewish Sabbath, and all, even the most ancient heathen nations, distinguished time into weeks of seven days; which no appearance in nature could have suggested; and which therefore, must have resulted from the appointment of a weekly Sabbath. It is also a fact, that the earliest Pagan writers, particularly Homer and Hesiod, speak of the seventh day as peculiarly sacred. The latter styles this day the "illustrious light of the sun," and the sun was the Supreme God of the Pagan world. Homer hath this verse, 'then came the seventh day which is holy.'

* "It is observed by an eminent critic, that the Samaritan text, with the Greek and Syriac versions read, 'God ended his work on the sixth day.'—Orton's Expos.
† "Dr. Kennicot remarks, that the Hebrew word here used carries with it a double idea; first of blessing, secondly of worshipping."
‡ "Tappan."
§ "Mr. Selden, in his Jus Nat. & Gent. Lib. 3. ch. 22, completely satisfies us, that Sunday was the first day of the week in the East from the remotest antiquity, and that on this day the idolators worshipped their Supreme Deity."
is to the Israelites, when God gave commandment on Sinai, in the memo-expression ‘Remember,’ it implies they were previously acquainted with bath of weekly occurrence. In some acts, however, the Jewish Sabbath, ry strong grounds may be consider-
a new and peculiar appointed to their particular circumstances, 1, whilst it afforded them the oppor-
t of celebrating the creation of the
and the divine perfections therein ued, was specially to be moreover ved by them, to celebrate their de-ence from Egypt; and on that day
ere by divine direction to com-rate that event.* Now, though we

'There is great reason to believe, he Sabbath of the Israelites was al-
ther year at their coming forth Egypt, and a short attention to this may not here be improper. The then seems to be this. At the finisof the creation, God sanctified the day. This seventh day being the lay of 'Adam's life, was consecrated of first fruits to God, and therefore may reasonably be supposed to began his computation of the days

the week with the first whole day of istence. Thus the Sabbath became at day of the week. But when man-fall from the worship of the true
they first substituted the Sun in his
, and preserving the same weekly
orship; but devoting it to the
the Sabbath was thence called Sun-

Thus the Sabbath of the Patriarchs
ued to be the Sunday of the idol-ll the coming up of the Israelites Egypt, and then, as God altered the ring of their year, so he also change day of their worship from Sunday unday. The first reason of which be, that as Sunday was the day of ip among the idolaters, the Israelites be more likely to join with them if rested on the same day, than if they work on that day and serve their upon another. But a second reason ly was—in order to perpetuate the ry of their deliverance on that day Egyptian slavery. For Moses, when plies the fourth commandment to icular case of his own people,
. v. 15,) does not enforce it, as in s, xx. 11,) by the consideration of resting on the seventh day, which be Sabbath of the Patriarchs; but it upon them by saying—‘remember at thou wast a servant in Egypt, and be Lord thy God brought thee out rough a mighty hand, and by a ed out arm; therefore the Lord thy th commanded thee to keep this
lo. IV.—Ch. Adv.

have reason to believe that the Jewish Sabbath was not the primitive Sabbath,
but that it was made to appertain to the Jewish polity under the express command of God, ‘Thy children shall observe the Sabbath throughout their generations;'
yet the morality of the Sabbath is not hereby destroyed, but confirmed: and the direct appointment of the seventh part of time is binding upon the world in all ages.
The Jewish polity, however, being now terminated by the dispensation of the gospel, the peculiarity of this appointment ceases with it, and of course, without the need of any further direct command, the Christian Sabbath, or the first day of the week, hath attached to it all the sanctity
and authority of the primitive Sabbath.
It is emphatically called the Lord's Day—
the day in which He, who died for our sins, rose again for our justification; whose grace we know, and the mysteries of whose love we celebrate—The day santioned by those inspired men, who were specially taught by Jesus Christ in all things pertaining to his kingdom; who received their commission from his hand
to preach the gospel to every creature,
and were specially anointed to this office,
by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them, when the day of Pentecost was fully come; which, also, was the Lord's day. Of this day, they made use, for the purpose of carrying their great commission into effect; and gave the influence of their example, acting as inspired men,
for the benefit of the church in after ages;
an example, followed by the primitive Christians*, without scruple, and therefore, under the certain conviction, that this day was, by divine authority, set apart for divine worship.

"The dispensation of the gospel is a new creation, which hath broken in upon us;
and the Christian Sabbath is a standing memorial, both of the creation of the world and the redemption of man. It is SABBATH DAY.'"— Vid. Kennicott's Discor.

on the Ob. of Cain and Abel, p. 184.

* "Barnabas, in his Epistle, says, p. 56,
'That we joyfully celebrate the eighth day, in memory of the resurrection of our Saviour, because, it was on this day, he rose again and ascended into Heaven.'
Ignatius, the martyr, in his letter to the Magnesians, would have us honour this day of the Lord, this day of the resurrection, as the first and most excellent of days. Justin Martyr, says, 'The answer of the Christians assemble together on this day, because it was the day of the creation of the world, and of the resurrection of Jesus Christ.' Ireneus, Tertullian, Origen, say the same thing.'— Vid. Calmet's Dict. in verb. Sab.
then, the Sabbath, which we believe, God gave us by creation—it is the Sabbath given us by the resurrection of Christ—it is supported by all the commands of God, as to its proportion of time—for its moral reasons must continue to the end of the world.

"This proportion of time, too, is so wisely and kindly adjusted, that it respects all the circumstances of animal nature. It does not break in upon the necessary cares, and business, and labours of life—it does not come so frequent, as to incommode our lawful employments; nor yet is it delayed so long, as in any degree to lose its efficacy—it is undeniably so adjusted, as, in the very best manner, to answer both the purposes of life and religion.

"We have already hinted, that had it been left to mankind to determine what would have been an exact proportion of time to set apart for the business of religion, it never would have been settled. Indeed, in the corruption of our nature— in the natural enmity of our hearts towards God, there would have been no Sabbath. But, God hath fixed it. His high authority, mingled with his own wisdom and goodness, hath fixed it. We hear him say, amidst that awful apparatus which flashed on the burning mount, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is in them, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.'"

P. 9—14

After this the speaker proceeds to specify "some special reasons for sanctifying the Sabbath." We cannot follow him here, but must not deny our readers the following just and eloquent appeal, which is introduced in showing that "the laws of the land and the good of society, oblige us to the sanctification of the Sabbath."

"Our laws, indeed, have left every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. We may sit under our own vines, and under our own fig trees, and there are none to make us afraid. Yet, is the Sabbath recognised by the statutes of our country as that sacred time, which is not to be disturbed by the wanton interruptions of the profane, or the intrusions of ungodly men. And, indeed, my hearers, let the Sabbath be abandoned, human and social rights would expire, and the best privileges of man would be buried in its ruins. It was tried once, and what was the result? O let infatuated France tell, by the record of her assassinations—her adulteries—her causeless divorces—the blood which flowed in her streets, from the veins of her infants—her virgins—her philosophers and her priests, in the rage of her infidelity, and the days of her terrible republic!

"What then, we ask, from the experience of ages, can be so great a security to any people as the guardian influence of religious institutions—the instructions of the Bible—the institutions of Christ—Worship—the institution of the Sabbath, which is urged upon us by the consecrated language of an Apostle, 'Forbear not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is.'

"Every good man—every benevolent man, were there no other considerations than those which respect outward prosperity, the security of life and property, and limbs—the upholding of justice in its impartial grandeur—the excitement of mercy in gentle pity for the miserable—or the encouragement of charity, with her orphans by her side, clothing the naked, feeding the hungry, instructing the ignorant, and drying the tears of the widow—every such man will honour the Sabbath, and lend his cheerful aid to its maintenance and integrity.

"Are you then a patriot, and do you love your country? for the love you bear your country, you will honour the Sabbath; or, we will suspect your honesty. Are you a parent, and do you love your children? teach them to honour the Sabbath, by honouring it yourself, and bringing them to the house of God; or we will charge you with a fictitious affection, which overlooks their best education, and neglects the means of their highest happiness. Are you a magistrate, sitting under the laws of your state, and do you suffer the Sabbath to be violated under your eye? We will suppose, you have not well considered the important trust committed to your hands, or the guardian provisions of the country would not be suffered to sleep, under the warrant of your commission."

The discourse is closed with inculcating the solemn truth stated in the text, that the Sabbath is a day between God and his people: and is concluded in the following impressive strain—

"But we must not enlarge—I shall therefore only remark, that our sanctifying or profaning this holy day, is to be considered as a sign which we present to God of the sense which we entertain of our obligations to him, to whom we are indebted for all we enjoy and all for which we hope—himself the greatest, the wisest, the best of all Beings; who hath, in the exercise of an indisputable right, flowing from his own perfections and our dependence upon him, commanded it upon us, that we should 'love him with all the heart and soul, and mind, and strength.'

"How affecting then is it to reflect on that sign of our religious and moral character, which such multitudes among us present to him who is jealous of his glory, and claims to be worshipped by all his intelligent creation! I need not at present point out to you the alarming increase of those acts, whereby the sanctity of the Sabbath is violated. You have them before you on our publick roads—our natural and artificial rivers—in the indulgence of amusement—the pursuits of business—the occupation of our streets by saunterers and men of boisterous mirth—the neglect of the sanctuary of the Lord's house.

"Brethren, these are awful signs indeed! Signs, however, held up before the eye of God. Signs which go before us to the judgment of the great day. Signs, upon which that award will be eternally justified—'Those mine enemies, who would not that I should reign over them, bring them bitter and slay them before me.'

"But I have done. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

The idea thrown out in this sermon, and fortified by a quotation from Dr. Kennicot, that the first day of the week, now observed as the Christian Sabbath, was that which was first declared to be holy and blessed, will probably be novel to some of our readers; yet we think the circumstances stated show it to be just. The consequence is, that the institution of the Jewish, and not that of the Christian Sabbath, was a departure from the original appointment of the day of sacred rest. The Christian Sabbath is only a return to the original appointment; and we now actually observe the day on which God rested from all his work which he created and made. On the general subject of this discourse, an essay contained in our number for October last, expresses our opinion correctly. But it is a subject of such deep interest to our country at large, and to all the vital interests of religion and morality, that we shall miss no proper opportunity to inculcate it. The fact is equally notorious and melancholy, that the profanation of the Sabbath is an evil rapidly increasing throughout our whole land: and the friends of religion are solemnly called on to exert all their influence, determinately and perseveringly, to arrest and correct this evil, as being fraught with irremediable mischief to the souls of men; and as calculated to subject our nation, as such, to the frowns of Almighty God. If the manner in which we observe his holy day be, as it certainly is, a sign, indicative of our obedience or our disregard to his supreme authority and righteous commands, reformation or chastisement, we have reason to believe, must be near at hand.

As some, if not all, of the works mentioned in the following article, will probably be reprinted in this country—and why should they not, since our booksellers have given us a splendid edition of the poetical impieties and impurities of Byron—we think it may be of some use to our readers, to know how these pious publications are estimated by the editors of the London Evangelical Magazine. The article is extracted from their number for March last.

1. THE CHRISTIAN PSALMIST; OR, HYMNS, SELECTED AND ORIGINAL. By James Montgomery; with an Introductory Essay.

2. PSALMS AND HYMNS, PRINCIPALLY FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP; SELECTED FROM DR. WATTS, AND OTHER AUTHORS. By Henry Foster Burder, M. A.

3. DEVOTIONAL VERSES, FOUNDED ON, AND ILLUSTRATIVE OF, SELECT TEXTS OF SCRIPTURE. By Bernard Barton.
Religious Poetry.

4. OSRIC, A MISSIONARY TALE: WITH THE GARDEN, AND OTHER POEMS.
    Second Edition. By Charlotte
    Elizabeth.

    It is a long while since we were able, at one time, to lay before our readers so many poetic compositions of taste and piety, of which we could speak with such unbounded confidence. Two of the volumes are entirely original, and the other two are chiefly selections of hymns from the most approved authors. If we furnish a distinct character of each, it may perhaps best serve to aid the public in judging as to the intentions,
    at least of the respected authors.

    The Christian Psalmist, by the well-known and much-loved Montgomery, is a volume containing 562 hymns, one hundred of which are the product of his own devotional muse.
    The work is distributed into five parts.—Scripture Subjects; or hymns on 129 different texts of Scripture. II. Prayer and Praise, or hymns embodying the principal topics which form the matter of those sublime exercises. III. Special Occasions, or hymns adapted to times, places, persons, events, particular institutions, and specific duties. IV.
    Miscellaneous, or hymns on almost every subject relating to Christian doctrine, experience, and practice.
    V. Original. Amongst the last will be found some choice specimens of the author's pre-eminent talent for the composition of "psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs." We would willingly select, but cannot.
    The Introductory Essay is decidedly the most elaborate and philosophical we have met with on the subject of Christian Psalmody. It is, indeed, a most exquisite critique, and will be read with pleasure and profit by all the true lovers of the songs of Zion.

    Mr. Burder's Hymn-Book has the peculiar excellence of strict adaptation to the service of the sanctuary.
    We think we can perceive that this has been the main object at which he has aimed; and we speak on conviction when we say, that he has done more to supply this desideratum than any of his predecessors in the same department of Christian literature.
    This is really a hymn-book for public worship. Great pains, also, have been taken to secure the union of taste and devotion. We think the educated and the vulgar will find themselves equally at home in the use of this volume, provided they have a heart to praise God. The selection at large affords an additional proof, were any necessary, of the correct taste, acute discrimination,
    and sound judgment, of the worthy author. We should feel somewhat reluctant to hear that Dr. Watts' hymn-book was supplanted; but if any thing could reconcile us to this,
    it would be the knowledge of the fact, that Mr. Burder's had been adopted in its stead. To those who so justly admire the compositions of Dr. Watts, it will be gratifying to learn, that nearly 300 of the very best of his psalms and hymns are introduced into this selection.

    Most happy are we, once more, to meet our valued friend, Barton, in his unpretending, but useful and interesting, career. We have always admired his spirit, and in general liked his verses. The purity and delicacy of his mind evince themselves in every thing that falls from his pen. His love of Scripture is truly primitive, and, in an age of folly and fiction like the present, cannot be too highly applauded. If the highest characteristics of genius do not belong to these "Devotional Verses," sure we are they will vie with most of the poetry of the day, in tenderness of feeling, in adherence to nature, and in spotless sentiment:—in one word, they are every one of them fitted to aid the devotions of the closet.

    As a specimen, we beg to lay before our readers the poem entitled
    "THE RAINBOW."

    "I do set my bow in the cloud."
    Gen. ix. 13, 14

Still in the dark and threat'ning cloud,
    That bow is brightly placed above.
Literary and Philosophical Intelligence.

nd despondency enshrouded

ght, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,

ight, more beauteous are its beams,
St. Thomas's. The Metropolitan remaining after the sermon to receive the sacrament, the Bishop conducted him within the rails of the altar, placed him in his own chair, and administered the communion to him, together with the English clergy and the Syrian priest in attendance.

—The Bishop of Calcutta embarked from Bombay for Ceylon, taking with him the Rev. T. Robinson, of Poona, as his chaplain.

The following are calculated as the proportions in which different languages prevail in the new world. The English language is spoken by 11,647,000; the Spanish by 10,504,000; the Indian by 7,593,000; the Portuguese by 3,740,000; the French by 1,242,000; the Dutch, Danish, and Swedish, by 215,000 persons; making, altogether, the number of 27,349,000 speaking the European languages, and 7,593,000 the Indian.

As an illustration of the scattered state of the population in many parts of South America, it is calculated that the metropolis of Great Britain alone is supposed to contain more inhabitants than all the provinces of La Plata, extending over 28 degrees of latitude and 13 of longitude.

—Christ. Obr. for Feb. 1826.

A lady, residing in Edinburgh, has sunk two hundred pounds, the interest of which is to be given to some distinguished clergyman for preaching an annual sermon against cruelty to animals, and we subjoin a short account of the first discourse that has been preached on that subject, in consequence of this benevolent appropriation, by the celebrated Dr. Chalmers:

"Yesterday forenoon (Sunday, March 5) the Rev. Dr. Chalmers preached in the High Church, a sermon from Proverbs xii. 10. 'A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast,' being the first annual sermon against cruelty to animals. The discourse was distinguished for that powerful eloquence and impressive manner which characterize the composition and the style of the Rev. Doctor, and was listened to with breathless attention by a most crowded audience. He took a luminous and comprehensive view of his subject, reprobated the cruelty to which various animals are subjected, to pamper the appetite of the epicure and the sensualist; condemned the sports of the field and of the turf, as being the means of blunting that sense of feeling which man should possess to animals subject to his power; and contrasted the cruelty which was exercised by man on the inferior animals, to the beneficence and goodness which mark the character of the Divine Being to the human race. So early as nine o'clock people began to collect round the doors, and at half-past ten, when they were opened, the crowd was immense and the rush very great. The passages were so crowded, that it was with considerable difficulty the judges and magistrates got into their seats."—Edinburgh Courant.

Philosophical Questions.—M. de la Place, in one of the last sittings of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, proposed the following four questions for examination and decision, by a commission of that philosophical body. 1. The actual intensity of the terrestrial magnetism. 2. The exact proportion of the two gases which constitute our atmosphere. 3. The exact pressure of the atmosphere at the surface of the sea; and 4th, the heat of the terrestrial globe at different depths, following latitudes and other appreciable differences. The ingenious academicians allowed, that two or more of these points had been already examined by the greatest philosophers, and had been considered as sufficiently settled for most practical purposes; but he thought that results sufficiently accurate to be appealed to by posterity ought to be established, after more still more rigorous inquiry. Unless a more decided and more generally admitted statement of the facts involved in these questions could be made, future ages would want the means of ascertaining or measuring the changes which may take place on the surface of our globe. A commission was accordingly appointed to make experiments to ascertain the above mentioned points, and M.M. de la Place, Poisson, Gay-Lussac, and Arago, were nominated members.

Improved Mechanical Powers.—Dr. Birkbeck, in delivering a lecture lately on the general principles of mechanical science, took a review of the earliest rude speciments of mechanics, and traced their rapid improvement down to the steam engine. He pointed out how the influence of the sun and moon, by changing the elevation of the ocean, had been converted into a mechanical power, and by its means, vessels with their cargoes, sunk to ocean's bed, had been raised to its surface, and restored to the use of man; and he exhibited a drawing of a sunken vessel to which cables were, by means of the diving bell, fastened to empty caisns on the surface of the water at ebb tide, by which means as the tide rose, the vessel rose also, and at the flood was floated into shallower water, and brought to shore. He said, that there was one combination of power lately arrived in this country, which was completely original, and wonderfully effective. It was the invention of Mr. Diet, a watchmaker in Boston.
Religious Intelligence.

Within a few days past we have received the twenty-first Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society, for the year 1825, with an Appendix. We know not why this important and interesting document does not usually reach this country till toward the close of the year, subsequent to that of which it contains the report of the Society, and the detail of its operations. We should be glad to extract copiously from the Report before us; but are obliged to confine ourselves to a few quotations. The summary, which forms the last of our extracts and the conclusion of the Report, will be particularly gratifying to those who take a deep interest in the diffusion of the sacred scriptures.

"The Paris Bible Society has continued to receive many testimonies of the utility of its labours to the Protestant communions in France. The Associations in connexion with itself, or its Auxiliaries, have gone on increasing. The scriptures have been received in many instances with demonstrations of the most lively joy; and their perusal is reported to have produced beneficial effects. Many among all classes of Protestants, among the clergy and laity, the rich and the poor, the aged and the young, continue to maintain an interest in the work. The monthly bulletins are enriched with pleasing and edifying communications, several of which have been transferred to the pages of your own monthly extracts, and are therefore not noticed here. Among the works completed by the Paris Society during the past year has been Ostervald's Bible, stereotyped, the first copy of which was presented to the so of your venerable president, who happened to be in Paris at the time of its publication, and the second has been placed in your own library, as an expression of gratitude to the part of the Paris Committee. Their last anniversary was held on the 14th of April, and was more numerously attended than any preceding. Mr. Monod, sen. has arrived as their representative on the present occasion, and has interesting communications to make to the meeting.*

"Your committee have pleasure in stating, that extensive distributions of the scriptures take place from your society's depot at Paris. An important application, from an island in the Mediterranean, for 300 Bibles and 3000 Testaments, for the use of schools, has been met from this source; and many thousand copies of the French Testament of De Sacy have been circulated. The depository, formerly occupied, having been found very inconvenient, a new one has been engaged, in which the various editions belonging to your society are now safely and advantageously arranged. To replace the editions which have been exhausted, 10,000 Testaments and 10,000 copies of the Gospels and Acts, of De Sacy's version, were ordered at Paris during the past year.

"In Spain, Portugal, and Italy, little can at present be done towards disseminating the holy scriptures.*

"Every letter that has been received from Dr. Leander Van Ess has borne testimony to the prevailing desire for the holy scriptures, notwithstanding the difficulties which have arisen in the way of their circulation. These very difficulties have in many instances been overruled for good. He has been supplied with the following grants, 10,000 German Testaments of his own edition and 3000 of Gossner's, 1000 Lutheran Bibles, besides some smaller quantities in the Hebrew, Greek, and other languages. An opportunity of supplying the Roman Catholic schools in the kingdom of Wurttemberg, having occurred, the professor has applied for 10,000 Testaments for this important purpose, which your committee readily granted. The zeal of this individual has stirred up others; and your committee have heard with pleasure, that another professor in the Roman Catholic communion has prepared a version of the New Testament, which has been approved by some ecclesiastical authorities in that church. The author, in a concise preface, remarks that it is intended for Christian schools and for education in private families. Dr. Van Ess, in speaking of this work, observes, that the translation is good. "It would seem," he adds, "that several of the Episcopal vicars favour it, a circumstance which will give me real pleasure, for it is certainly all one whether Christ be preached through the medium of a version by Kistemaker, Van Ess, or any other, provided only that his gospel be faithfully published." In these sentiments your committee most heartily concur.

"The minister of finance in the grand duchy of Darmstadt, has waved the duties in favour of the Bible Society, as well as of the professor himself, and other individual distributors; and duties previously paid have been returned.

"The same accuracy and care continue to distinguish his accounts; the minutest as well as the largest distributions are marked in his statements; there are items such as sundry poor travelling journeymen 43 Testaments and 7 Bibles, and such as, "a clergyman in the Black Forest, 3228 New Testaments." The extracts of his correspondence with different individuals, in parts remote from Darmstadt, give solid proof that the blessing of God accompanies his extensive distribution of the scriptures. They have amounted now in the whole to above 550,000 copies."

"With mingled feelings of regret and delight your committee now turn to Russia; regret at the difficulties which have arisen in that quarter, and delight at the retrospect of the labours of the Russian Bible Society. His excellency Prince Galitzin having resigned the office of president, his eminence Archbishop Sermifin has been appointed his successor by an imperial rescript. Your president, at the request of the committee, has addressed the archbishop on this important occasion. At the first meeting of the committee at which his eminence presided, the members present rose and congratulated him; and in reply he expressed a lively hope that the Lord would be pleased to shower down his blessings on the united and important labours of the committee, and vouchsafe to them his almighty aid. His excellency Prince Galitzin has written to your president a letter expressive of the interest felt by him in all the operations of the Bible Society in every part of the world, notwithstanding he has resigned the situation which he before occupied. By the Russian Society a periodical monthly paper has been issued during the past year. In the first number a general review is taken of the

* See Mr. Monod's Address in the Monthly Extracts for May.
Religious Intelligence.

ons of the society since its comment; from which it appears that,

space of eleven years, it has puror printed versions of the entire res, or the New Testament, or hereof, in forty-one different lanor dialects, and distributed 448,109
and has collected and received 76 rubles; and that there are in
at parts of the empire 289 com-who mutually co-operate, and in with the St. Petersburg committee, ious arms of one and the same spense throughout the whole ex-
the Russian dominions the bread
Among its most important ver-hat into the modern Russ certainly es to be mentioned; 50,000 of the Russ and Slavonian New Testaave been published, and 20,000 of modern Russ alone.
se journals contain many pleasing ories of the good produced by the of the society. In No. 3, it is ned, that the first pages of Matin the Wjatka, were printed about son of Advent. Twenty-seven pa-were furnished with them, and the appointed for the first Sunday in nt were read in this dialect. The wre equally astonished and de-
, and many declared the translafectly intelligible, and requested sons to be read to them again.
the different committees, that of is well worthy of a record. This hee has printed sixteen editions, in derent languages, and copies to the t of 79,500. In No. 5, a very in-account of the Moscow anniver-sours. More than 1400 persons at-
, and among them about 500 were urer classes. His eminence the shop Philaret gave an excellent adnpon the occasion, and, in imaginmselv replying to those who de-What moral benefit has arisen from among many other very ent observations, remarks—" Is not
y desire to read the holy scriptures,
is awakened by their circulation, a pledge in favour of the moral iminent, I will not say of every one,
suredly of many into whose hands
ll, as a return of appetite and conan are symptoms of convalescin diseases of the body." In No. 8, parish ministers are stated to have red in their reports of the number then, who have been led to, em-Christianity from among the Tche-nians; one mentions eleven, another eight, a third one hundred, and a fty-two; and this has been ac-ished in some instances exclusively,
others principally, by reading the gospel, translated in their vernacular dialect, and put into their hands by means of the Russian Bible Society. Who that, reads such accounts, your committee may ask, but must regret that any difficulties should have arisen? The work however has not been standing still; 70,000 copies of the scriptures, in different languages and dialects, have been printed, and 31,163 distributed, during the past year.
"In the Turkish empire the operations of your agent, the Rev. H. D. Leeves, have not, from the difficulties which have arisen, been quite so successful during the past, as in the preceding year. There is, however, much to demand your gratitude, and much to encourage you. For the benefit of the Greeks who speak the Turkish language, the New Testament is now preparing in Greek characters, by an individual of whose competency to the work Mr. Leeves has received every testimony that could be desired. With very slight alterations, indeed, this same work, transcribed in Armenian characters, will serve for the Armenians speaking Turk-

Among the benefactions to the Society
by legacy, of which information has been received since the last Annual Meeting,
the following are the principal, viz.

Mrs. Henrietta Cave Brown, late of Dawlish, duty free 100 0 0
Rev. Wm. Dodwell, late of Welby, Northamptonshire, 100 0 0
A portion of the residue of his Effects, at the discretion of his Executors.
Thomas Wilkinson, Esq. late of 100 0 0
Blackheath
William Wilshere, late of Hitch-ch, duty free 100 0 0
Mrs. Ann Jarratt, late of Hull, 100 0 0
Yorkshire
Thomas Smith, Esq. late of 100 0 0
New Norfolk Street, duty
free 2000 0 0

In the last year the nett receipts of the Society have been 93,285 5 2
And its expenditure has amounted to 94,044 3 5

The number of copies of the Scriptures issued from the depository in the past year has been

116,539 Bibles, 164,116 Testaments,
making a total of 3,722,987 copies of the Scriptures issued in this country by the Society in twenty-one years.
To the list of your Vice-Presidents, on the recommendation of your President, your Committee have had the most an-

2 G
cere pleasure in adding the name of the Earl of Rocksavage.

The following works are now executing on the Society's account:

German Bible, 8vo. stereotype.
Spanish Bible.
Syriac New Testament, 4to.
Syriac Psalter, crown 8vo.
Arabic Psalter.
Modern Greek Testament.
Welsh Pocket Bible.
Welsh Pocket Testament.
Irish Bible, vernacular character.

Besides various editions in the English language.

Jewish Spanish Testament, printing at Malta.
Turkish Bible,
Carshun New Testament
Carshun and Syriac ditto printing at Paris.
Ancient and Modern Armenian ditto, (just completed)
Gospel of St. Matthew in the Basque language, printing at Bayonne.

In closing this review of the Society's proceedings, your Committee feel that they cannot, as on some former occasions, indulge in the language of unmingled triumph and exultation. You will have learned from the Report, that in the past year difficulties have arisen in a part of the Foreign operations of the Society. That in the event of these difficulties what it may, let them altogether subside, or let them altogether increase, your Committee will have but one duty to perform, "to hold on their way;" remembering that, again and again, they have had occasion to notice that when their own operations have for a season been bound, the word of the Lord has not been bound. Often have they beheld, with sacred pleasure, all things working together for good, and events, which appeared to be making against the cause, essentially furthering it. In this your Committee do rejoice, and will rejoice.

There are, however, many other causes of rejoicing unmingled with regrets such as those to which allusion has been made. In many parts a most pleasing desire for the Sacred Scriptures has been manifested, and they have been received with the most lively joy. As an instance of this your Committee refer to a letter received within these few days from the Deputation sent out by the London Missionary Society, to visit the Missions in the South Sea Islands. It is therein stated: "In times of the greatest distress in England we have never seen greater solicitude to obtain food or money, than these people have shown to be permitted to purchase the Sacred Scriptures. Their care of their Bibles, and their diligence in perusing their sacred contents, are as great as their solicitude to obtain them."

If a parent may rejoice in the prosperity of his children, if no tidings can be more welcome than that they are doing well, surely your Committee may call upon you this day to rejoice in what you have heard, and in what you may yet hear from the representatives of various foreign societies, now in the midst of you. Kings and queens, and many of the noble and illustrious, account it their honour and their privilege to foster the interests of your Institution. Others of humbler degree, continue their labours unwearied, both at home and abroad, and cause multitudes to invoke the benediction of heaven upon it.

Another just cause of rejoicing is the unexpected openings made both for circulating received versions of the Scriptures, and preparing new ones; openings which no wisdom or foresight on the part of your Committee could ever have discovered, nor any exertions of their own have effected. Combinations of events over which they have no control, have sometimes made a way in the desert, and a high way for our God. Your Committee have been led step by step, in the train of others whose pursuits are widely different; but among whom many have been unexpectedly found willing to render assistance. And these, whether led by love of knowledge, or from religious motives, or for the building of the Church, or as literary travellers, have each pursued their own avocations, and have left a path where all was trackless waste before, in which the peaceful labourers of your Society might follow and make known that word by which, all that is lawful and all that is good in human affairs, may be used so as not to be abused, may be sanctified to the glory of God and the comfort of man, while all that is evil may be corrected.

Such are some of the benefits already realized. Without indulging in too laudatory a strain, your Committee would feel encouraged by past experience to anticipate even greater things than any they have yet seen. The mountain shall become a plain, the valley shall be filled up, and many people shall go and say, "Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." May the Society continue to be one of the favoured instruments of the providence of God in these...
hat day when the hymns of heaven strike on the ears of the children of
and when, waked by these sweetest
and in the sea, shall say, “Blessing and ho-
and glory and power, be unto Him
leth on the throne, and unto the,
for ever and ever, Amen.”

SUFFRAGAN OF THE REV. P. L. N. FISHER.

We deeply sympathize with the se of missions in this country,
in other countries, in the afflic-
they experience from the death of the most accomplished, and faithful missionaries, that missionary age has produced.
REV. P. L. N. FISHER, one of the aries to Palestine from the rican Board of Commissioners
ign, Syria, on the Lord’s day
ng, the 23d of October, 1825,
an attack of fever which com-
ed on the 11th of that month.
ng his illness, although while paroxysms of fever he was times delirious; he was, for the
of the time, perfectly rational,
and resigned; and dictated
s to his friends, and one, which left unfinished, to his father.
ould wish to insert in our
all that we have seen publish-relation to this excellent man.
we must content ourselves with tract from the letter of his ge, Messrs. Bird and Good-which gives an account of his
; and a part of the remarks
by the editor of the Missionary ld, which follows this letter in iscellaneous. Describing the last Fisher’s life, his mourning en thus write—

sday 22. He was able to return orning salutation to those that came the physician entered the immediately recognised him,
vered a little with him in Italian ed the day quietly—said almost ng—tongue palsied.
un had set, and no appearance of al paroxysm. His strength was that he could still raise himself on bow, and nearly leave his bed, with-stance. Our hope had not, for days, been higher, that he might yet survive. The fever came on, however, at 8 or 9 o’clock, but so gently
that the physician repeatedly assured us he apprehended no danger from it. We therefore retired to rest, leaving him, for the first half of the night, in the hands of the physician and a single attendant.
Scarce had we closed our eyes in sleep,
when we were awaked to be told, that all hope concerning him was fled. We hasttened to his bed side, found him panting for breath, and evidently sinking into the arms of death. The physician immediately left him and retired to rest. We sat down, conversed, prayed, wept, and watched the progress of his dissolution;
until, at precisely 3 o’clock on the Lord’s day morning, October 23, the tired wheels
of nature ceased to move, and the soul,
which had been so long waiting for deliverance, was quietly released.
It rose, like its great Deliverer, very early on the first day of the week, triumphant over death, and entered, as we believe, on that Sabbath, that eternal Rest, that remaineth for the people of God.
We sung part of a hymn, and fell down to give thanks to Him that liveth
and was dead, and hath the keys of hell
and of death, that he had given our dear brother, as we could hope, the final victory over all disappointment, sorrow, and

As soon as the news of his death was heard, all the flags of the different consuls were seen at half mast. His funeral was attended at 4. At his grave, a part of the chapter in Corinthians respecting the resurrection, was read in Italian, and a prayer offered in English, in presence of a more numerous and orderly concourse
of people, than we have ever witnessed on a similar occasion. His remains sweetly slumber in a garden connected with one of our houses.

As for us, we feel that we have lost our elder brother. Our house is left unto us desolate. To die, we doubt not, has been infinite gain to him, but to us the loss seems at present irreparable. He cheered us in the social circle, he reproved us when we erred, he strengthened us by his prayers, exhortations, and counsels.

The Board of missions will feel the loss, perhaps, not less than we. Another servant, with talents like his for explaining and enforcing the doctrines of the gospel, and who shall be able to preach fluently in most of the languages heard
in this country, will not soon be found.
But the Lord of the Harvest has resources of which we know but little. To him let us still repair, and pray in hope.—Your unworthy afflicted servants.

I. BIRD.
W. GOODELL.
Thus died this excellent Missionary: and perhaps it is not too much to say, that, among all who have sustained that office, since the apostolic age, but few have possessed a happier combination of qualities for the missionary work, than did Mr. Piak. For that work he was peculiarly, pre-eminently fitted. To use the language of Mr. Goodell, in a letter written a few days after the above,—"He possessed a vigorous constitution, a discriminating judgment, an ardent spirit of enterprise, an entire devotedness to the service of his Lord, a facility in acquiring the languages and learning the customs of the people, and a happy talent in accommodating himself to times, and places, and companies. If to this rare assemblage we add his long experience, it only awakens us to a more affecting sense of our loss." In Italian, French, Modern Greek, and Arabic, he had made such attainments as to be able to preach in all these languages; and with great propriety did his companion, above quoted, say of him, "His doctrine dropped as the rain, and his speech distilled as the dew.""

NOTICE.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, will convene in the First Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, on the third Thursday, the 18th day of the present month, at eleven o'clock, A. M.—to be opened with a sermon by the Moderator of the last year, the Rev. Dr. Rowan of New-York.

---

The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of April last, viz.

- Of Rev. Robert Steel, Abington, for the Contingent fund: $5.00
- Of Rev. B. Hoff, Bridgeton, West New Jersey, for do.: 4.00
- Of Rev. John W. Scott, a quarter's rent, for do.: 87.50

Amount received for the Contingent fund: $96.50

- Of Rev. Henry Perkins, Allentown, New Jersey, for the Professorship to be endowed by the Synods of New York and New Jersey, viz.
  - Dr. John Reeve's 4th and 5th instalments: $40.00
  - Dr. Wm. Davis's 4th do.: 3.00
  - Contributed by two other individuals, 100: 8.00

Total: $104.50

---

View of Publick Affairs.

EUROPE.

Britain.—By the recent arrivals from Europe, London papers to the 22d of March, Liverpool to the 23d, and Paris to the 24th, have reached this country. It appears that the British monarch had been dangerously ill, but was so far recovered that bulletins of his health were no longer published—Gout and dropsy united, are said to have formed his malady—if so, his life and reign will probably be soon terminated. The Parliament was still in session and busily occupied in attending to the various concerns of the nation. The entire abolition of slavery in the British West India islands was petitioned for earnestly, from every part of the kingdom. The ministry seem to have been beforehand with the opposition, in bringing forward a number of popular measures; indeed the present ministry have less opposition than almost any of their predecessors. Considerable dissatisfaction however has been manifested in Scotland, on account of the measure by which country banks are to be abridged of a long standing privilege of issuing small bank notes. The commercial distress of the kingdom was diminished, but not removed. It was believed, however, that the worst was past, and that publick confidence, and commercial enterprise and prosperity, were likely soon to return. We observe that in the House of Lords a statement had been made, that the supply of grain in the kingdom was not sufficient for the nation till the coming ha-vest, and that measures ought to be speedily taken to make up the deficiency by importations. The Duke of Wellington's mission to Russia is stated to have had a most desirable influence. It is affirmed "that he was charged with what might be termed credentials, from France, and Austria, and Prussia, as well as from Great Britain, all calculated to impress the cabinet of St. Petersburg with the conviction, that the above great powers are unanimous in their purpose—(1) Of protecting the Greeks against the Ottomans. (2) Of protecting the latter against an attack from Russia." With the first of these points it is said that the Emperor Nicholas was satisfied: and that he entirely acquiesced in the second. In a word, we are given to understand that the great powers have determined that the general tranquillity of Europe shall not be disturbed; and that they will require of the Grand Senior that his armies be withdrawn from Greece, and that he renounce all claims to the sovereignty of that country—It will be matter of great joy, if time shall confirm the truth of these statements—In regard to Ireland, we observe nothing that is new and important.

FRANCE.—In the French Chamber of Peers, M. de Chautaubriand has made an eloquent speech in favour of an amendment of the law "against trading in black slaves." It seems that the law in France, passed in 1818, for the suppression of slavery, prohibits the transportation in French ships, of black slaves; and that as the transportation of white slaves is not explicitly forbidden, French vessels in the Mediterranean have been employed in transporting the Greeks, who have been captured by the Turks and sold to them as slaves in the different bazaars of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Thus it appears that it is not easy to frame a law which those who traffic in the souls and bodies of their fellow men will not evade. Will it not soon be necessary to provide by a special law, that they shall not sell their own wives and children? Who would have thought, till taught by the fact, that a prohibition to transport black slaves, could be construed into a license to ship cargoes of white ones; that to prohibit the sale of savage heathen, was to permit the sale of civilized Christians; that the captives of petty African princes should not be enslaved by the agency of Europeans, but that the captives of the Grand Turk might be carried for a market wherever European captains and ship owners might choose to take them? Yet it appears that M. de Chautaubriand was opposed by "the keeper of the seals." We rejoice to find, however, that the motion to amend the law was carried by a vote of 85 to 64. The prime minister of France, nevertheless, it is confidently affirmed, does all in his power to favour the Turks in their sanguinary war with the Greeks. The Constitution says—"Fifty French officers are now at Marseilles, ready to embark for Alexandria, and new recruits of officers are daily swelling their ranks. Six vessels of war are also recruiting in the port of Marseilles, for account of the Pacha of Egypt; and the French minister takes pleasure in rendering them all the assistance in his power." We believe the truth is, that the great body of the French nation are sincerely opposed to slavery in all its shapes and operations, while some ship owners and commercial men, whose idol is gold, are in favour of it; and that the ministry favour the wishes of the latter party, and are, especially, willing that the Greek struggle for liberty should be crushed.

SPAIN—Affords nothing new, except rumours apparently entitled to little regard; unless it be that she has succeeded in sending six frigates, with considerable reinforcements of troops, to the Havanna—probably not only for the protection of Cuba and Porto Rico against a descent of the South American patriots, but with a design, if opportunity shall favour, to make a descent on some vulnerable part of their territories, which Spain still obstinately claims as her own.

PORTUGAL.—John VI. king of Portugal, and nominal emperor of Brazil, died at Lisbon on the 10th of March last. On the 4th of that month he was seized with apoplexy, which was followed by epilepsy, under which he languished till the morning of the 10th, when he expired. He was born May 13th, 1767; and from 1792 till 1817 he governed as regent, in the name of his mother, who was insane. He was crowned at Rio de Janeiro, whither he had fled to escape from Buonaparte. In 1790, he married Charlote Joachima, daughter of Charles the IV., king of Spain. His eldest son, Don Pedro, is the present emperor of Brazil. His second son is Don Miguel; who, aided by his mother, attempted, not long since, to dethrone his father. This hopeful youth is now at Venice, and all he can do to obtain anything for himself. It belongs, both by ordinary descent and by a late treaty, to Don Pedro. The old king, during his last illness, or his ministers for him, appointed his eldest daughter, the Infanta Isabella Maria, regent; with a council of six distinguished and titled ministers, as her advisers—her vote to be decisive in all cases where the council is equally divided. This order is to last till the pleasure of Don Pedro shall be made known, and no longer. Time must decide whether civil dissensions of a serious character are to follow from the demise of the late king. There is a seed of liberal se timent sown in Portugal, as well as Spain, which, smothered as it is for the present, by an overwhelming despotism, will eventually germinate, and perhaps produce the tree of liberty.

Greece.—In a rather gloomy view which we gave last month of the affairs of the Greeks, we concluded with observing, that we were aware "that great changes in favour of this interesting people might suddenly take place; and if they should, that we should hail them with no common pleasure." That pleasure we now enjoy. Making allowances, as we know we must, for exaggerations and misrepresentations in every thing that relates to this subject in the publick papers, we still think, that from the accounts received within the last month, there is reason to believe that the Greeks have gained great, and we hope decisive advantages over the Turks, both by land and sea. The sum of the news is this. On the 13th of January last, the Turkish army near Missolonghi, lost some of their best men in a skirmish. On the 13th there was a regular battle; the force of the Turks 10,000 men, that of the Greeks 7,000. The Turks were completely routed—lost on the field of battle, 3,000 dead, 400 wounded, 900 prisoners. Generals killed 2; officers wounded 14, and 25 prisoners. Taken 9 cannon, the tent of Ibrahim Pacha, and his seraglio of women, with 14 baggage and ammunition wagons. The loss of the Greeks 800 killed, and 700 wounded. On the 23d January, the Turks, having been reinforced till their army amounted to 18,000 men, made a second attack. The Greeks, reinforced to the amount of 9,000 men, engaged the Turks for seven hours; when, by the blowing up of a conven, by which 70 Turks were killed, their line was broken, and a complete rout ensued. Ibrahim Pacha was wounded by a carbine ball in the breast, and was carried off the field, having narrowly escaped being made a prisoner by the Grecian cavalry. The Turks lost at this time 4,000 killed, 800 wounded, and 2000 prisoners, 8 standards, 10 cannon, and 6 ammunition wagons. The Greeks lost 2000 killed, and 400 wounded. The Turkish fleet before Missolonghi, was put to flight by 27 Greek vessels of war, and the garrison relieved. A still later account states that Colocotroni had stormed and taken Triopolizza, and put the garrison to the sword, and that Ibrahim Pacha had retreated to Navarino. It is not common for false accounts to be so circumstantial as these; and if they are in substance true, the triumph of the Greeks must be nearly completed. And if what we have reported of the errand of the Duke of Wellington be not apocryphal, we shall soon hope to see Greece free and independent. We think the account is not true, that three European noblemen or princes have been offered the sovereignty of Greece, and have refused it.

Russia.—Every thing was quiet at St. Petersburgh at the date of the last accounts. The whole conspiracy, which it appears had been brooding in Russia for a number of years, has been developed; and we are at a loss whether to wonder most at its audacity or its folly. A detailed account of it has been published by authority, but we have no room for its insertion. Some of the nobility have been implicated and sent in chains to Siberia. The emperor Nicholas appears to act with firmness, prudence and decision. He has conferred a high and honourable military command on his brother Constantine; and seems determined to pursue the same general policy adopted by his immediate predecessor. We hope he will not continue the imperial frowns on Bible societies and evangelical missions. The appointment of prince Gallitzin, as one of the commission to investigate the sources of the conspiracy and try the conspirators, shows that this prince has the entire confidence of the new emperor; and Gallitzin we know is an ardent and determined friend of the Bible cause.

Austria.—It appears that the Emperor of Austria is still declining in health, and not likely to recover. Death and disease are among the means which the God of providence often uses, to effect great and sudden changes in empires and kingdoms, as well as in families and circles of private friendship. We live in an age of great and sudden changes; and within the two last months the death of two monarchs has been announced, and the mortal disease, probably, of two others. And seven of the four have ruled over the most powerful nations of the earth. But "the Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of the isles be glad thereof."

ASIA.

Hostilities have again commenced in the Burman empire between the British forces under general Campbell and the native troops. It is said that at the late armistice, the British commissioners demanded as the conditions of peace, a large sum of money and the cession of a considerable territory; and that the Burman emperor rejected these conditions with disdain, and ordered the war to be recommenced. It is also said that after the proposal of these conditions, he refused an exchange of prisoners, to which he had previously agreed, and ordered them, with the American missionaries, into close confinement. There is no doubt that the war has been renewed; and that the British troops have suffered loss—Some accounts say that the whole army has been defeated. We believe, however, that the defeat was only of a detachment, of which the number of the killed and wounded, which is not great, is perscularly specified. It seems, nevertheless, that the Burmese are in great force. Their army is differently estimated, from 70,000 to 110,000 men.

Melancholy accounts have been received of the deaths of missionaries in India. No less than six, of different denominations, were carried off in a very short space—among the rest, Mr Frost, the American missionary at Bombay.

AFRICA.

It appears that the mortality, both of Europeans and natives, in the colony of Sierra Leone, has recently been so great and alarming, that it has been made a serious question in the British parliament, whether that colony ought to be maintained. We hope the idea of abandoning it will not be hastily adopted—The mortality may be only temporary and occasional, and capable of great diminution by proper care, as it is known to have been in many other places.

AMERICA.

PERU.—The fortress of Callao, so long and obstinately defended by the Spanish General Rodil, has at length been compelled by famine to surrender to the republican arms. An honourable capitulation was obtained, which we hope will be sacredly regarded. Of all her former American possessions on our continent, Spain now holds not a foot of territory. It also appears that the fortress on the island of Chiloé, in the gulf of that name, in the southern part of Chili, has lately been captured by the Patriots.

PANAMA.—The Congress of American nations had begun to assemble at this place, in the beginning of the last month. A few only of the delegates had then arrived. The Congress will probably be regularly constituted in the course of the present month—May wisdom from on high guide its counsels; and may peace, fraternal dispositions, prosperity and happiness, throughout our widely extended continent, be preserved and promoted by the deliberations and decisions of this interesting assembly.

BUENOS AIRES AND BRAZIL.—We have seen the manifesto, or declaration of war against Buenos Ayres, of Don Pedro I., emperor of Brazil. It is certainly not a despicable state paper, and makes out a very plausible case. But there is another side to the story, and we presume the Patriots will make it quite as plausible as that of their enemy. The truth is, that the region of country contended for, was not in a condition to make a deliberate choice when it came under the dominion of the emperor of Brazil; and it is equally certain that it was originally no part of the Portuguese possessions.—An embassy from the general congress of the Provinces of Rio de la Plata, of which Buenos Ayres is regarded as the capital, has been sent to the liberator Bolivar; and in reply to the address delivered by the embassy he has returned a very favourable answer. There seems little doubt that the war against Brazil will be conducted under his auspices. The result of all wars is uncertain; but to human appearance the emperor's land forces are very unequal to those of the republics which adjoin his territories, commanded by such generals as Bolivar and Sucre. Possibly a peace may be hushed up by the interference of Britain; but we retain the opinion heretofore expressed, that the period is not distant when there will be neither emperor nor empire in the western hemisphere.

UNITED STATES.—Congress is still in session, and now earnestly engaged in legislative business. The appropriation laws for the ensuing year have, we believe, all been passed. The important bill relative to bankruptcy is still under discussion; as is another, scarcely less important, making provision for the remaining officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army. We have our fears that neither of these bills will become a law, and shall be most agreeably disappointed, if either or both shall be enacted.

Never since our editorial labours commenced, have we felt ourselves so much at a loss to know what, as Christian advocates, we ought to say in relation to what has taken place at Washington, during the present session of our Congress. We feel humbled, we mourn, we sometimes feel indignant.—We see great national guilt contracted by the acts and ill example of some who represent the nation, and by the toleration of these acts and this example by others, who might, if they would, put the offenders at once from their high places. But we are Christians, and are bound, and hope we feel disposed, not to indulge intemperate feelings, nor use opprobrious language—lest of all, while we censure the same things in others. Yet we are citizens of a free republic, a part of the community represented by those who have not represented us as we could wish: and we have the editing of a religious miscellany of pretty extensive circulation, to which we know our readers will look, and may reasonably look, for our candid opinion of what is doing by our publick men—men whose errors must commonly be corrected, if they ever are corrected, by the influence of the press and of publick opinion. On the whole, we will try to state briefly, plainly and temperately, what we think has been wrong in our representatives at Washin
ton. And first of all, and as the real source of all, we think that most of the discussions relative to alterations in the Constitution of the United States, and to the expediency of the mission to Panama, were superfluous; and especially that the manner in which these discussions have been conducted, and above all, the bitter personalities and acrimonious language that have been permitted and indulged in, have been not only wrong, but highly dishonourable to Congress and to the nation. Each department of our government ought to keep within its own sphere; and maintain fully its own independence. But each department ought likewise to treat the other departments with decorum and respect: and we may be assured that when this ceases to be the case, the stability of our government will be shaken, and our liberties will come into real and serious jeopardy. It is the most popular part of our government which is the most likely to assail improperly the other parts. Far be it from us to intimate, that in our house of representatives there should not be entire freedom of debate, and perfect freedom to exercise the right of impeachment too, whenever it may be judged that the exercise of that right is called for. But in debate, as in other things, there may be freedom without licentiousness; and the House of Representatives will lose its real respectability, and its proper weight in the government, if the debates there become licentious—if a degree of dignity be not preserved in the discussions which are there carried on. Now, in the present session of Congress, there have been in that house, and by one or two members of the other house, broad and direct invectives uttered against the executive—nay, such coarse and unseemly language, as we believe was never witnessed in our Congress before; such as we think: a man who respects his own character ought not to use at any time, and therefore to the last degree improper for the legislators of a great nation. And why were not those speakers sternly arrested, and called and kept to order? This we know, for we have witnessed it, has sometimes been done. The outbursts of an intemperate speaker cannot always be prevented; but when they are permitted to continue, and to be repeated without check or control, the whole body in which they take place is implicated; and thus implicated does our national legislature, as a body, now stand before the world. Some of the consequences of their intemperate proceedings—and they are the natural consequences—have been witnessed in one duel which has taken place, and in the causes that have probably been furnished for others yet to come.

Let it not be understood when we say that duels are the natural consequences of personalities in Congress, that we mean either to justify or extenuate duelling. Nothing can justify it; and we firmly believe that he who has given no cause for personal reproach, will always best consult his reputation by disregarding it altogether: And sure we are, that if just cause of reproach has been given, it will never be wiped away by fighting a duel—this will only increase both guilt and ignominy. But the mournful fact is, that personal invectives and the imputation of base and dishonourable practices, will produce duels among men of high station; who, in such cases, seem to make it a point of honour neither to “fear God nor regard man.” But we cannot enlarge. The late duel at Washington is likely, by its baneful example, to be prolific. The springing and fountain, many streams of human blood, shed in murderous single combat, many tears of widows, and orphans, and parents, and friends, may hereafter be traced. And what is the duty of the people of this country, in the view of these things? We think it is obvious. They are not to be “partakers in other men’s sins”: And partakers they will be, since these men are their representatives, if they ever again make them their representatives; at least, till the evidence of repentance and reformation is unquestionable. The rulers in despotic governments may be guilty of offences against both God and man, while the people at large are innocent. Not so in popular governments—In these, the people make and unmake their rulers; and when they give their suffrages for the guilty they are themselves guilty. Oh that our countrymen were as much awake to this subject as they ought to be! There are surely those to be found who will represent a virtuous people virtuously—a moral and orderly people in a moral and orderly manner. We rejoice to say, and should feel criminal if we concluded these remarks without saying, that there are a considerable number of men now in Congress—would that they had been a majority—who have had no share in any of the late disgraceful proceedings. In the midst of all the acrimony with which they must have been deeply pained, they have spoken and acted with true dignity and genuine patriotism. Their talents, too, have been shown to be of the first order for parliamentary debate. Had all the speakers in the present Congress, spoken and acted like Webster and Wurtz, our country had been honoured, and there had been no cause for complaint.

The Creek Indians have consented to a treaty by which, for a large sum of money, they have resigned nearly all their lands within the limits of the state of Georgia. What better they could do we know not; but we certainly regret, as we doubt they so do, the necessity by which they were compelled to submit to this arrangement.
THE

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

JUNE, 1826.

Religious Communications.

Lecture XX.

Now proceed to consider the 22d answers of our cate-

ism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines—Addressed Youth.

The only Redeemer of God's elect is the Lord Jesus Christ, being the eternal Son of God, the man, and so was, and contitinuous, God and man, in two disnatures, and one person for-—Christ the Son of God, became by taking to himself a true body reasonable soul, being conceiving power of the Holy Ghost, in the womb of the Virgin Mary, born, and yet without sin."

discussing these answers it will, in order, as proper method as we the time, and easiest to be referred, if we take certain separate portions of the answers severally and connect, where necessary, of the first with those of the se-

Consider that the only Redeemer of God's elect is the Lord Jesus Christ, although now used as a common appellation, were not arbitrarily. They are, and intended to be, descriptive of character of our blessed Redeemer. Jesus, or Joshua, (for they are the same name in the original of the scriptures,) denotes a Saviour, in the most peculiar and extensive sense of the term. Thus it was said—"thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." The term Christ in Greek, is exactly of the same import with Messiah in Hebrew. Each word, in its proper language, signifies anointed, or the anointed one. When therefore Peter said—"Thou art the Christ of God," it was the same as if he had said, thou art the anointed of God. Among the ancient Jews, kings, prophets and priests, were set apart to their office by anointing them with oil. Now Christ as mediator, united all these characters in himself, and is represented as set apart to them by the designation of God—So that the words Jesus Christ mean the Saviour, anointed, or set apart to that office, by God.

Jesus Christ is "the only Redeemer of God's elect." The Jews are yet looking for a Messiah to come. They will not allow that Jesus Christ was the true Messiah. But this is only a proof of their judicial blindness and hardness of heart; and is indeed the strongest proof that could possibly be given: For the character, actions and sufferings of our Saviour, are so exactly delineated and described by their own inspired prophets, that they are driven to the most unworthy shifts and evasions, to avoid admitting and allowing it. The prophecy in the 53d chapter of Isaiah, is more like a history than a prediction: So much so indeed, that some of the early enemies of Christianity, insisted that it must have been forged, after the events to which it manifestly refers had taken place. But its reception all along by the Jews themselves, shows that the infidel objection is false; and thus one class of unbelievers is seen to answer and confound another.

The prophecy of Daniel points so exactly to the time in which Jesus Christ did appear, that there could be no mistaking it as the epoch of the Messiah's advent: And it is a fact, as well ascertained as any in ancient history, that the whole Jewish nation, and even some among the neighbouring nations, were in full and earnest expectation of the Messiah, at that very time—At that very time accordingly, the true and only Messiah, Jesus Christ, the anointed Saviour, did actually appear; and the expectation of another by the unhappy Jews, must forever be vain. But it is comfortable to think that their delusion will come to an end; and that when the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in, they, too, shall yet acknowledge and obtain salvation, by that Jesus whom their fathers crucified, and whom they have so long and so wickedly rejected and blasphemed.—"There is salvation in no other; for there is no other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved."

In the answers we consider, Jesus Christ is called "Our Lord." He is so called to denote his true and unquestionable Deity. It cannot be denied that our Lord is, in the Old Testament, called Jehovah, one of the peculiar names of the Deity, for which the Jews had the highest veneration. In a prophecy of Isaiah, which all Christians do and must apply to Christ, because it is expressly quoted and applied to him by John his forerunner, it is said, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."—In the original it is, "Prepare ye the way of Jehovah." This naturally introduces another portion of the answers before us, namely, That the Lord Jesus Christ was "the eternal Son of God."

When I discoursed to you on the doctrine of the Trinity, I gave what I consider as demonstrative scripture evidence, of the proper Deity of each person in the Godhead: And I have just now mentioned incidentally, what is, by itself, a clear scripture proof of the proper Deity of Christ, the second person in the adorable Trinity. We shall not, therefore, resume this subject, with a view to consider it extensively.—I shall only make a few remarks on the eternal Sonship of Christ. All the most ancient creeds, or symbols of the Christian church, notice this point. The Apostles' creed, the Nicean creed, the Athanasian creed, the creed of the Synod of Cappadocia, all either allude to it, or distinctly affirm and inculcate it. They distinguish carefully the Sonship of Christ, from all ideas of creation.—They represent him as the Son of God by a peculiar and mysterious relation; and affirm that he is of the same essence and eternity with the Father. This seems to be the scripture doctrine, although some modern divines, not in the least disposed to deny the divinity of Christ, have maintained that the appellation Son of God, is given to him only with respect to his mediatorial office. But as we are baptized in the name of the Son, as well as of the Father, and Holy Ghost, it seems to follow that his Sonship is equally natural and necessary with the paternity of the Father, and the personality of the Holy Ghost. In a word, the Sonship and personality of Christ are the same, eternal in existence, and constituting the second hypostasis is the undivided essence of the glorious Trinity.

This adorable Being, the Son of God, the catechism affirms "became man;" that is, the second person in the Trinity assumed human nature into a perfect union with his own. This is technically called the hypostatic union. And after all the profane and foolish cavils which have been raised and perfect as the first before the fall—Not descended from the first Adam by natural generation, but miraculously and immaculately conceived in the womb of one of his descendants. The grave and guarded words of Holy Scripture on this awful subject are—"The angel said unto her (Mary) the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that Holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."
Lectures on the Shorter Catechism.

As it is only in this answer of the catechism that the virgin mother of our Lord is mentioned, let me remark, that we are neither to worship her, nor degrade her. She was, doubtless, by nature a sinner, like the rest of the human family; and was redeemed and saved by him to whose human nature she gave birth. On one occasion our blessed Lord even reproved her too great forwardness, in hinting to him that there was a call for the exercise of his miraculous powers. But that she was eminently a Saint; that her faith, and resignation, and absolute devotion to God, on the message of the angel, were most extraordinary and exemplary; that her relation to our common Saviour should render her name dear and venerable to us all; and that we should fulfil our part of her own prediction, that "henceforth all generations shall call me blessed,"—all this is not only to be admitted, but remembered and regarded. Alas! how do extremes produce each other, and how, by their doing so, are truth and duty every way injured? The religious worship which has been paid to the Virgin Mary is palpable idolatry. She was but a human being, and worship is due only to God. There is not one word in the holy scriptures to warrant, to encourage, or to colour the offering of religious worship to her; and if she herself can be conscious of it, she must perfectly disapprove it. Yet, in counteracting this error, the veneration and affection due to her true character, has, I think, been sometimes refused, or impaired. Let us avoid both extremes. Let us worship God alone; but let us love and venerate all his Saints, and the mother of our Lord among the chief.

(To be continued.)

ON THE ATONEMENT.

No. IV.

My dear Brother,—The object I had in view in my last, was to show how well our doctrine of the atonement corresponds with a full and glorious display of the free and sovereign grace of God in man's salvation.

In this, I propose to resume that subject, by replying to some of the objections urged in recent publications.

To illustrate the entire harmony between the grace of God in our salvation, and the righteousness of Christ as its procuring cause, the subject may be viewed in a different light from that in which it has already been presented.

Speaking of the great Redeemer, the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews says, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him." Heb. v. 8, 9. Salvation, then, is the work of Christ; and consequently the whole of it from beginning to the end must be attributed to his grace. All its blessings are deposited in his hands; and he distributes them as he pleases. Hence it is recorded, "Of His fulness have all we received, and grace for grace:" John i. 16; and he himself says, "As thou, Father, has given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." John xvii. 2. He is the inexhaustible fountain from which all blessings flow to believing sinners. "Our life is hid with Christ in God." Col. iii. 3. He is the vine that bears all the branches, and imparts to them life and fruitfulness. John xv. 5, 6. He is the Head, from which all vital influence is derived to every member of his mystical body. Col. ii. 19. "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me:" Gal. ii. 20. "I give unto my sheep eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." John x. 28.

It is plain, then, that Christ both procured salvation for us, and distributes all its blessings according to his sovereign pleasure. But shall we imagine his grace to be less free and glorious, because he became obedient unto death, in order that he might become the author of eternal salvation unto all who obey him? Do we owe him less, because he fulfilled the law in our place, and satisfied all the demands of justice against us, by enduring the penalty due to sin? Would his grace have been more free, more conspicuous, more illustrious, if he had humbled himself less, and suffered less, in accomplishing our salvation? Let an inspired writer answer these questions: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye, through his poverty, might be rich." 2 Cor. viii. 9. "The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me, and gave himself for me." Gal. ii. 20. It is in the depth of that humiliation to which the great Redeemer submitted, and in the greatness of those sufferings which he endured for our sins, that the riches of his grace, and the fervency of his love are to be seen in the best advantage; and it is from the purchase he made of salvation for us, while hanging on the accursed tree, that the strongest motive to obedience is drawn. "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. vi. 20. "The love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. 2 Cor. v. 14, 15.

Now, if the sufferings of Christ for our salvation do not detract from his grace in saving us; and if the payment of his life as the price of our redemption is not at all inconsistent with his love in redeeming us, nor with his sovereign pleasure in bestowing redemption on sinners; then it will follow that his sufferings do not detract from his Father’s grace, and that the payment of the inestimable price he made is not inconsistent with his Father’s love in our salvation, and does not at all infringe upon his adorable sovereignty in its application; because the Father and the Son, being one in nature and perfections, are most perfectly harmonious in all their counsels, designs, and operations. But this idea will receive a fuller illustration, when the objection referred to is taken up.

Previously to that let us see how the difficulty is removed by the new doctrine, and how its advocates harmonize the justice and the grace of God displayed in the salvation of sinful men. While they admit that, by the death of Christ, publick justice was satisfied, they maintain that distributive justice is not satisfied. They further say that publick justice demands that the greatest good of the universe should be promoted, that the greatest possible sum of happiness among intelligent beings should be brought into existence; consequently publick justice demands the salvation of all who believe in Christ. Now, here is the very difficulty to which they object in the doctrine of the old school: for if justice demands the salvation of believers, where, to use their language, is the grace displayed in the salvation of sinners? How can they be saved by grace, if they are saved by justice? But, it has been shown, according to our views of the scheme of redemption, that grace and justice perfectly harmonize. Our brethren, however, by trying to get rid of what seemed to them an insuperable objection, have created a real difficulty. They represent the justice of God as at once demanding the salvation and the damnation of believers: for it will scarcely be denied, that both publick and distributive justice are the justice of one and the same divine Being. Distributive justice they say, “demands that every person should be treated according to his moral character,” and “that the guilty should be punished.” It follows, therefore, that as believers will for ever remain, as they teach, guilty even in heaven, that distributive justice will eternally demand their punishment. But the demands of publick justice, it seems, will prevail over the demands of distributive justice; and consequently the publick justice of God will for ever preserve all believers in the enjoyment of heavenly happiness, in opposition to the unceasing demands of his distributive justice. So much for this scheme of removing the difficulty.

In a recent publication, I have met with the following remarks: “And if Christ has suffered that very penalty involved in the eternal condemnation of the elect, as some contend, then they ought to be liberated on the principles of the law. Their debt is paid. There is but one being in the universe to whom these persons would be indebted for their release; and that is the friend who paid their debt, or suffered the penalty of the law in their stead.” Bold assertions indeed! The writer is led to the conclusion he has here formed, merely by pushing a metaphor far beyond the limits intended by those who use it. It is well known that the disciples of the old school illustrate the doctrine of the atonement by referring to transactions occurring between debtor and creditor. With this illustration they have been furnished by the Saviour himself; as will appear from the petition prescribed by him, “Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors,” and from the parable he spake about the servant who owed his Lord ten thousand talents. Here the Redeemer compares sins to debts, and the forgiveness of them to the remission of a debt by a creditor.

* Dial. on Atonement, p. 21.
† Beman, p. 41.

It is a feature of the old school divinity, of which it is hoped its pupils will never be ashamed, and one in which they differ from most of the new school writers, that they are fond of the language of scripture, and have little regard to any theological reasoning which are not clearly sanctioned by the authority of the inspired penmen. In regard to the point before us, it should be remembered that not only do we find such expressions and illustrations in the New Testament as those already quoted, but such as the following: “Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price.” 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. “Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the servants of men.” 1 Cor. vii. 23. “Denying the Lord that bought them.” 2 Pet. ii. 1. Nay, the whole work of our salvation is frequently denominated from a pecuniary transaction—It is called Redemption, and believers are said to be redeemed. Now redemption, it is well known, in its literal signification, refers to the price which is paid for a prisoner or a slave—The same is also the import of the term Ransom—Justified through the redemption that is in Christ.” Rom. iii. 24. “In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins; according to the riches of his grace.” Ephes. i. 7. “Having obtained eternal redemption for us.” Heb. ix. 12. “Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us.” Gal. iii. 13. “Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold—but with the precious blood of Christ.”

1 Pet. i. 18. “Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood.” Rev. v. 9. “The son of man came to give his life a ransom for many.” Mat. xx. 28. “Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.” 1 Tim. ii. 6. While we have such a warrant as is contained in these, and many similar passages, we shall never hesitate to illustrate the doctrine of atonement by the similitude of debtor and creditor; nor to speak confidently of the satisfaction of Christ. At the same time, we shall be careful not to push this similitude to an unlawful extreme, nor to represent the satisfaction of Christ as tallying in all respects, with that which is made in human transactions.

But all these illustrations, although borrowed directly from the volume of inspiration, appear to be thought improper by the writer on whom we remark; for from one of them, which virtually embraces the whole, he derives an argument which he deems subservive of our whole doctrine. Hear him: “Your neighbour becomes indebted to you in a large amount, which he is utterly unable to pay. You resort to legal coercion— institute a prosecution, and eventually lodge him in prison. A third person, actuated by benevolence, inquires into the affair—is touched with pity for the tenant of the jail—becomes his legal surity—pays the whole demand, and restores him to personal freedom. Now, we ask on what principle that man is permitted to cross the threshold of his prison? Must he come to your feet, and beg to be released; or may he boldly demand liberty on the principles of law? And when he again rejoices in the light of heaven, to whom shall he express his gratitude; to his benefactor who paid the debt, or to you who set him at liberty when the last jot and tittle of your demand was extinguished? It is manifest that you have no farther claim upon this man, because the debt is paid. He has a legal right to a discharge; and on the score of grathe is indebted to that benefacdone who cancelled the de-

In this case the author adduces anle to that of the atonement, acing to the views of his brethren he is opposing. We deny the

Let him find, in pecuniary actions, if he can, a perfect pat; and then he may push the arison as far as he pleases, and all be ready to meet all the quences. But this case is by ans parallel. Here it is sup-that the creditor has no agen-
bringing forward the surety;
of course no gratitude is due to
for the payment of the debt.
let us suppose the creditor to the surety, and to engage son to become responsible be debt, and to consent to his
; found in a state of humilia-while procuring the means to le him to make the payment;
not, we ask, the debtor be, in
so, under obligations of gra-
to his merciful creditor; and reason to thank him for the rey of his liberty? Surely Mr. B. ot yet to learn that the Father,
demands from sinners payment
e debt which they have con-ed by violating his holy law, is antly exhibited by us as being merciful that He; provided the y for our fallen race, and that nt into the world his only be-Son, in a state of the deepest ion, to pay the debt which uld never have extinguished:
ain, in this case it is supposed,
the debt is paid absolutely, so the creditor is compelled by
and justice to release the debtor
ately. But let us change stances. Suppose a be-individual visits a prison
with debtors—He finds one had contracted his debt through and vice. But he is touched at ecital of his case, and deter-to pay his debt. Wishing, ver, to reclaim the unfortunat

man, and to humble his de-spirit, he tells him, I will pay your debt;
but remember, the payment will be made on this condition, that you shall not enjoy the intended benefit and obtain your freedom, till you acknowledge your fault to your creditor, and ask his forgiveness of your improper conduct towards him.
Now, from this arrangement it is plain, that this debtor could not, on principles of law or justice, claim a release, until he had submitted to the prescribed condition; and his creditor could justly detain him in prison, with a view of humbling his proud heart, and bringing him to the required acknowledgment.

Jehovah had a perfect right to arrange the economy of salvation as he pleased; and his Son had a perfect right to pay the price of our redemption under what stipulations he chose. For sought we know, the plan, in respect to the application of the atonement, might have been different from what it really is, in a variety of respects. The whole economy of salvation was arranged in the counsels of infinite wisdom. It is what the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost chose it should be; and to carry into effect this wonderful scheme, the eternal Son of God laid down his life as a ransom for us, or as the price of our redemption.

But pecuniary transactions, we not only admit but insist, can furnish no perfect parallel to the mysterious transaction of saving sinners.
A creditor cannot refuse the payment of his debt by a third person:
but Jehovah might have exacted the debt from every sinner, and refused the mediation of a surety. A debtor may provide his surety; but a sinner cannot, and must be indebted for the blessing to the bounty of his offended sovereign. The creditor's pecuniary demands are satisfied the moment his debt is paid; but the demands of God upon the sinner are not satisfied till he believe in Christ,
although the price of our redemption was paid long before he came into existence. The debtor, after the payment of his debt by another, is not commonly under obligation to his creditor for releasing him from prison: but the sinner must, according to the provisions of the covenant of redemption, be under eternal obligations to the Father, for delivering him from the curse of the law and the prison of hell, through the atoning sacrifice of his own Son. In human transactions the surety is a different individual from the creditor: but in the divine transaction of saving sinners, the Son, our surety, though a different person from the Father, yet is with him one and the same infinite Being.

* Beman, p. 39.

It is absurd then to infer that because the inspired writers illustrate the doctrine of atonement by referring to pecuniary transactions, that it must resemble them in every particular; and it is equally absurd from the fact that the atonement does not agree with pecuniary transactions in every particular, to infer that it cannot agree with them in some general principle, and is not a price in any sense whatever.

Let us view the remarks of the writer last quoted, a little closer, and we shall find in them several important errors.

"Their debt is paid. The law has no further demand; grace and pardon are out of the question," so says this author, but so say not the inspired writers. The entire consistency between the grace of God in our pardon and the satisfaction of Christ for sin, has already been shown; and any further proof on the subject is deemed unnecessary. But in regard to the law, it is perfectly plain from the testimony of scripture, that on unbelievers it has all its demands, and that they must remain under the curse, till they believe in Christ; for the stipulations between the Father and the Son are such, that they secure an actual release from its penal demands only to believers.

"There is but one being in the universe to whom they would be indebted for their release; and that is the friend who paid their debt, or suffered the penalty of the law in their stead." Is this the language of a professed trinitarian? Does he not know that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one being? Does he not know that they are so perfectly one, that if in prayer we address the Son, we address the Father and the Spirit; and if we address the Father we address the Godhead? He has surely read what our Lord declared to the Jews: "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; that all men should honour the Son even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath sent him." John vi. 22, 23. Does he not know that there is a perfect concurrence of all the persons in the Godhead in all their works; and that although one part of the work of man's redemption is peculiarly appropriated to one person, and another to another person in the divine Trinity, yet they all concur in every part? Has he not read the Saviour's declaration? "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doth the Son likewise." John v. 19. And after all this, in opposition to the perfect unity of the Father, Son and Spirit, and to their entire concurrence in all their works, does he venture to make so round and unqualified an assertion—"There is but one being in the universe to whom they would be indebted for their release; and that is the friend who paid their debt or suffered the penalty of the law in their stead?" Now, from this difficulty the writer cannot extricate himself by saying he admits the unity of the divine being, and that we are indebted both to the Son and the Father; because this would be abandoning his argument, which was to show, that if Christ paid our debt, or suffered the penalty of the law in our stead, then we are indebted for our release not to the Father, but to the Son alone.

This objection to the truth betrays its origin.—Infidelity forged it.
the author may be said, “Be it now manifesto to thee, for this mercy is the same, but by God is this mercy exercised. Surely by God the Father. It is a principle of that scheme against as rigidly insisting upon the
the whole penalty of the before he consents to the offer of rebellious world. Every curse must be inflicted.
Every jot and tittle of the law
be executed.”

Now, if when the penalty of the was about to fall on sinners, the
of God came forward and endur amount of suffering due to principles, to these sinners small, then
whole mercy involved in their re
tion is expressed by Christ.
The Father, as one of the per
of the Trinity, is inflexibly just,
not any inclination to the exer cising of mercy; while the Son is so deful, that he has suffered the rigid demands of the law, in obtain the consent of the er to the salvation of his people.
representation appears to us des
by the character of God. It ulates the attribute of mercy, represents the Son as a kind of Deity who has interposed and ered the stern demands of the er, in behalf of his people, and way literally purchased them perdition.”

The Father is without any in the exercise of mercy!!!
whole mercy involved in redem
is expressed by Christ alone!!!”
its this a fair representation of views of those who cordially be what is stated in the Confes Faith? “Christ, by his obe
and death, did fully discharge
all those that are thus led; and did make a proper, real, satisfaction to his Father’s in their behalf. Yet, inas was he was given by the Father
m, and his obedience and sa satisfaction accepted in their stead, and both freely, not for any thing
in them, their justification is only of free grace; that both the exact jus ce, and rich grace of God, might be glorified in the justification of sinners.” chap. ii. sec. 3. Had the author who has subscribed the Confes
of the Faith, attended to this and other articles of that admirable sum ary of Christian doctrine, it might have kept him from making such un just misrepresentations of his breth
ren’s views and statements.

But does he not know that all int ligent advocates of the scheme he opposes, have uniformly rep resented the plan of redemption as originating in the unmerited mercy and bound less love of God the Father? Does he not know that they believe the at tributes of Jehovah to be immutable;
and that they teach that the death of Christ was not the cause, but the fruit, of mercy, as an attribute of the Father? Does he not know that, while they believe the satisfaction of Christ to have been necessary to a consistent and honourable exercise of mercy, they regard the gift of Christ
as the highest demonstration of the Father’s unbounded mercy? Does he not know that they can, with as much emphasis as he, repeat the de lightful encomium passed on the Fa ther’s love by the Redeemer? “God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever be liveth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.” Does he not know that they constantly teach that “the love of God was the cause, and not the effect, of the atonement?” These facts he ought to have known, before he assailed an important doctrine in the Confession of Faith and of the Bible; but if he did know them, he must account for misrepresenting so greatly the views of his brethren, as well as he can.

But I have not done with the quo tations from this writer. If his re marks have any force they apply to his own scheme. He maintains the necessity of an atonement, to open the way for the exercise of divine mercy.
and he has spent a whole sermon on that point, and in showing the love which God bears to his holy law. He contends that unless satisfaction had been made to public justice, salvation would have been impossible. Now, he believes that the Son, and not the Father, became incarnate; that the Son, and not the Father, humbled himself; that the Son, and not the Father, suffered; that the Son, and not the Father, bled and died on a cross; that the Son, and not the Father, made an atonement; that the Son, and not the Father, intercedes for sinners. He expressly says, “In the case of all believers, and such and such only will be saved, the misery which Christ endured, is the real and only ground of their release; because without these sufferings, or the atonement, there could have been no pardon or grace for sinners.” What follows from all this? Why, if his remarks be just, then it will follow, that according to his own scheme, we are indebted to Christ alone for salvation. How happens it that some writers, while objecting to the principles of others, do not perceive* that they are fighting against themselves. The reasoning of this author, if fairly and fully carried out, would sweep away two of the fundamental doctrines of the gospel, the atonement and the Trinity.

In my next, I propose to compare the two theories in regard to the nature of the atonement, in order to discover which accords best with scriptural truth. In the mean time, I remain affectionately yours.

* Beman, p. 50.

The memorials of wise and good men, especially of those who have been ornaments of their country and distinguished benefactors to society, are interesting and profitable. Since the publication of “The Lives of the Puritans,” the author has obtained almost immense stores of new materials relating to the history of those worthies, partly from rare printed books, and partly from original MSS.; and he hopes the memoir of the venerable divine whose name stands at the head of this article, will not be unacceptable to the numerous readers of the Congregational Magazine.

Miles Coverdale was born in Yorkshire, and educated in the university of Cambridge, where he was trained in all the superstitions of popery, being an Augustine monk.
ok his doctor's degree at Tug in Germany, and was incor-g at Cambridge. Early in the

of Henry VIII. he cast off the bles of popery, and proved him-zealous Protestant, being one first who faithfully preached
s Gospel, and devoted himself to promote the reformed re-
. He was classed among the st professors of the Protestant
, at the commencement of formation; and when sound and pure religion began to
on the university of Cam-
he was uniformly zealous in good work, uniting with the reformers in their useful asso-

The year 1528, Coverdale
sh ed at Bumstead, in Essex, declared openly against
ass, the worship of images, uricular confession; main-
tent confession of sin before and conviction in a man's own ience, were sufficient without ession to a priest. His zealous faithful labours at this place not in vain; since he was the ured instrument of turning
as Topley, afterwards a mar-rom the errors of popery to the Protestant faith. Our divine king for some time espoused and oted the reformed doctrines, nding himself in danger of the
led to Holland, where he assially employed himself in the ation of the Scriptures. In William Tindal, having fin-
his translation of the Pentished to have it printed at burgh, but, in crossing the sea,
ship was wrecked, when he lost his money and papers, and so to begin the work afresh. On arrival at Hamburg, his friend erdale, waiting for him, assisted in writing a new translation;
the year 1535, Tindal and erdale published the whole Bi-folio, the first in the English age, when John Rogers, the
-martyr, corrected the press.

This first English translation is entitled "Biblia; The Bible—that is, the Holy Scripture of the Olde and New Testament, faithfully and truly translated out of the Douch and Latyn into English," and is dedicated by Coverdale to king Henry. At the head of this dedication, his majesty:—

"Unto the most victorious
ynce and our most gracious overaigne lordes Kyng Henry eght, kyng of Englonde and of Fraunce, lorde of Irlonde, &c. defendour of the fayth; and under God the chefe and supreme heade of the church of Englonde. The ryght and just administracyon of the lawes that God gave unto Moses nd Josua: the testomyne of faythfulness that God gave of David: the pleenteous abundance of wysdome that God gave unto Salomon: the lucky and prosperous age with the multiplicacyon of sede whiche God gave unto Abraham and Sara his wife, be geven unto you, most gracyous prync, with your dearest
just wyfe and most vertuous pryncesse Quene Jane. Amen."

To the dedication, Coverdale subjoined his "prologue," from which the following extract is inserted in his own language:—

"To say the trueuth before God, it was nether my laboure nor desyre
to have this worke put in my hande;
neverthelss it greved me that other nacyons shuode be more pleenteously provided for with the Scripture in theyr mother tongue; then we;
therefore, when I was instantly re-quered, though I coulde not do so well as I wolde, I thought it yet my dewyte to do my best, and that with a good wyll.—Seynge then that this diligent exerçye of translatyng
do so much good and edifyth in other languages, why shueth it do evell in oures? Doubtles lyke all nacyons in the diversite of speeches
maye knowe one God in the unyte
of the faith, and be one in love;
 even so maye dyverse translatyons undeystonde one another, and that in the head articles and grounde of our most blessed faith, though they use sondry wordes. Wherefore me thinke we have greate occasion to geve thankes unto God, that he hath opened unto his church the gyft of interpretycon and of prynting, and that there are now at this tyme so many, which with such diligence and faultynesse interprete the scripture, to the honoure of God and edifyenge of his people. Yet thou hast knowledge, therefore, to judge where any faute is made, I doubt not but thou wilt helpe to amende it, yf love be joyned with thy knowleg. Howbeit wherin so ever I can perceive by my self, or by the informacyon of other, that I have fayled (as it is no wonder), I shall now by the helpe of God overoke it better and amende it."

This translation was divided into six tomes or parts, and Coverdale prefixed to every book the contents of the several chapters, and not to the particular chapters, which was done afterwards. It is adorned throughout with wooden cuts, and in the margin are scripture references. In the last page it is said, "Prynted in the yeare of our Lorde MDXXXV., and finished the fourth daye of October." By this first translation of the Bible, it is said, Coverdale "recked the cradle of the Reformation." Lord Cromwell, by his injuncions in 1536, ordered this Bible to be set up in all the churches.

The year following, two editions of the Bible in quarto, "newly oversene and correcete" by Coverdale, were "sett forth with the kynges moost gracios licence;" the one with, the other without, his dedication. One edition printed this year is entitled, "The Bible, which is all the Holy Scripture, in which are contayned the Olde and Newe Testament, truelye and purelye translated into English." From the end of the Chronicles to the end of the Apocrypha was Coverdale's, and the rest was Tindal's; but this, which was called "The Great Bible," was not published till after Tindal's death.

In the reign of Henry, the New Testament was published in Latin and English, with this title, "The Newe Testament both in Latine and Englishe eche correspondent to the other after the vulgare texte, commonly called S. Jeroms. Faithfully translated by Myles Coverdale," quar. 1538. In the dedication addressed to the king, Coverdale informed Henry, "that oon of the chiefest causes why he did now with moost humble obedience dedicate and offre this translation of the New Testament unto his moost royall majesty, was his highnesse's so lovingly and favourably taking his infancy and rudeness in dedicating the whole Bible in English to his most noble Grace."

At this early period, this New Testament was re-published in quarto, with nearly the same title, and said to be "Faithfully translated by Johan Hollybushe." The whole of this impression is printed page for page, and with the same type, as the former. It has the appearance of being the same as the other, with only a new title-page; but, on examination, it will be found that every sheet was re-composed, and both Latin and English differ in some few places. Coverdale being abroad, committed the care of this edition to Hollybush, with particular instructions to see it corrected; but, on a perusal, as Coverdale said, it was "sinistrally printed and negligently corrected;"—therefore, in the same year, he printed another edition in octavo at Paris, which he dedicated "To the ryght honorable Lorde Cromwell, lorde preuye seale, vicegerent to the kynges highnesse concerning all his jurisdiccion ecclesiasticall within the realme of Englelande." In this dedication, after stating the inaccuracy of the former edition, he says—"My dewtye is to be faith-so have I (though my business create ynothe besyde) endeavoured myself to wade ou the s."

The year last mentioned, Lord Cromwell procured letters from Henry to the King of France, granting his license and allowance for printing the English Bible in the university of Paris, since it could be executed there to much better advantage than in England. Obtaining this grant, the work was immediately undertaken; and Coverdale being so eminently qualified for the office, was appointed to perintend the press. He composed the former translations, with original Hebrew and Greek, and with the requisite alterations and omissions; but when the work was nearly completed, the printer was convened before the tribunal of inquisition, and accused of heresy; and Coverdale and others were summoned; but, aware of their danger, they fled for their lives, and their Bibles, to the number of a thousand five hundred, in the hands of their enemies. Coverdale, therefore, narrowly escaped the fire, or some other cruel punishment.

Then the heretical translator was not found, the Bibles were committed to the care of an officer; but, instead of casting them into the flames, this officer, through covetousness, sold four fat's full to a haberdasher, as he paper, of whom they were bought and brought to England: the rest were publicly burnt at the market place. Lord Cromwell, afterwards procuring the press, and brought the servants of the printer to London, where the printing part of the Bible was done, but not without much opposition from the bishops.

The renowned Bonner, then ambassador at the French court, had basely encouraged the printing of the Bible; for which he was after nominated to the bishopric of Hereford, then appointed to the See of London. This sumptuous and costly edition of the sacred volume was published in folio, in the year 1539; the Calendar, exhortation, and prologue of which were written by Archbishop Cranmer. On the interruption experienced at Paris, and the troubles which followed, Coverdale, in great perplexity, wrote a letter to Lord Cromwell, his generous patron, soliciting his good advice how to act at this painful juncture; which is here inserted from the original.

"To my most singular good lord and master, the lorde Cromwell, lorde prevy seal. Right honorable and my singular good lorde, after all dew salutaciones, humbly beseech your lordshippe, that by my lorde electe of Hereford maye knowe your pleasure concernynge the translation of the Byble, whether I shall proceede therein or no. Pite it were that the darke places of the text (upoon the which I have alwaye set a hande) shulde so passe undeclared. As for any pryate opinyon on contencious words, as I wyl utterly avoyde all suche, so-wyll I offre the annotacions first to my sayde lorde of Hereford; to the intent that he shall so examen the same afores he be put in pryute, ye it be your lordshippe's good pleasure that I shall so do.

"As concerneyng the New Testament in Englysh and Latyn, whereof your good lordshippe receavde lately a bok in your servaunt Sebastian the cooke, I beseech your lordshippe to consydr the greynes therof, which, for lack of tyme, can not as yet be so apte to be bounde as it shulde be. And wheras my sayde lord of Hereford is so good unto us to conyavye this much of the Byble to your good lordshippe, I humbly beseech the same to be the defender and keper thereof. To the intent that ye these men proceade in their crouelnesse agaynst us and confest the rest, yet that the rest may be safe by the means of your lordshippe, whom God the Almighty evermore preserve to his good pleasure. Written somewhat hastily at Paris, the xiii daye of Decembre (1539). Your lordehippese humble and faithfull servitor, Myles COVERDALE."

The first publication of the Bible in English roused the unworthy passions of the prelates; and, filled with jealousy and anger, they laid their complaints before the king; who, in compliance with their insinuations, ordered all the copies to be called in, and promised a new translation. When Coverdale published his translation, the bishops laid their accusation before Henry, that it contained many faults. His majesty, far more favourable to the circulation of the Scriptures than these right-reverend fathers, asked them whether it contained any heresies; and on their lordships saying they had found none, the king replied, "Then, in the name of God, let it go abroad among the people."

Coverdale’s immense labours in publishing translations of the sacred volume, exposed him to severe persecution from the angry prelates; who hunted him from place to place, which obliged him to flee for safety, and continue many years in a foreign land; where he printed the Bible, and sent it to be sold in England, by which he obtained a comfortable support. But this could not be long concealed from the jealous eye of the Bishop of London; who presently inquired where the Bibles were sold, and bought them all, supposing he should be able to suppress their circulation. God so ordered these occurrences, contrary to the prelate’s expectations, that the merchant of whom the Bibles were purchased, sent the money to Coverdale; by which he was enabled to print more, and send them to England. This so roused the fury of the prelates, that, by their outstretched arms, they reached him even in Holland; and, to escape their potent malice, and find a place of rest, he was obliged to retire into Germany. He settled under the Palsgrave of the Rhine, where he found a secure asylum. In this situation he taught school for a subsistence; and, having learned the Dutch language, the Prince elector Palatine gave him the benefice of Burghsaber; where, by his faithful ministry and holy life, he was made a blessing to the people.

---

Miscellaneous.

TRAVELS IN EUROPE FOR HEALTH IN 1820. BY AN AMERICAN CLERGYMAN, OF THE SYNOD OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Continued from p. 162.)

Toulouse, June 17th, 1820.

My dear Friend,—I have been here eight days; which is a much longer delay than I had intended, and is owing to the coldness of the weather, which is rather unusual at this season of the year. Such an amount of cloudy, windy, raw weather, with very little rain, I have seldom experienced in the United States. Bagneries, the watering place for which I am bound, lying on the range of the Pyrenees, whose tops are covered with snow, must be much colder than this place, on which account I have been advised to delay my going thither, until the hot weather fairly sets in; which it ought to have done by this time, according to the usual course of the climate. This delay has given me an opportunity to make some acquaintance with this place, which is well worth the attention of a stranger. An outline of the things which have ap-and worthy of notice, I shall on paper, for the gratification for curiosity.

Marseilles is a large city, with its walls and bulwarks, beautifully seated on a level and fertile county on the banks of the Garonne; which is here a fine stream, though too diminutive to be entitled the denomination of a river. It is notable in the winter and spring. The city contains a population of about sixty thousand; and considered as an ancient place, may be called handsome. The streets are wider and finer every way, any of the old towns I have in France; though modern would pronounce them narrow, crooked, and inconvenient: houses are generally built of two and three stories high, every substantial. Those of modern erection, are more generallyick. The streets are without rails, and paved with round hle-stones. Many of them have gutter, that pass from the houses, and discharge all the dorrall of the kitchens, &c. the streets. Without great attention to cleaning the streets, it is evident that they must soon become very foul. It is but justice, however, to say, that except in the suburbs, which seem to be surrenderd to nastiness, the streets are generally attended to. The order is to be, that every house cleans to the middle of the street, before his own door, and the matted product is conveyed in carts for manure. There is such garden cultivation around house; and what would appear to indicate great honesty on the part of the population, many of the gardens are entirely without fence, while others are protected from the incursions of cattle, by walls, built altogether of mud; a slight cover of straw on the top, to shelter the wall from the weather. The straw roof is kept to its place by a ridge of clay, laid along above it. It is an indication of great mildness in the climate, that such a wall, with such a roof, should stand through a year.

There is a large publick square, planted with trees, and laid out in walks, which I should have considered very fine, did not its low situation and deficiency of prospect, sink it so far inferior to the hill top of Montpelier, which I so much admired, and which I left so lately. It appears to be a characteristic of French towns, to possess fine publick groves and shady walks, which mark the character of the French people, as fond of gaiety and amusement. That such they are, no one will dispute, who has had opportunity of seeing the throngs of well dressed idlers, with which these inviting resorts are crowded, every evening when the weather is fine. I have not noticed a town of any importance unfurnished with one or more of these publick walks, on the decoration of which, much expense and labour have been bestowed. And yet I am totally at a loss to reconcile with this indication of taste and pleasure in the cities, the almost total deficiency of every thing of the kind, about the country habitations. I have been struck with the general barrenness of the French country. Trees of any kind are a rarity. There are certainly some handsome exceptions; yet, generally speaking, as far as my observation has extended, the country dwellings, even those of the better order, are extremely destitute, both of shade and ornament—I would say far behind the well improved parts of the United States. It would seem as if in France taste and learning had generally deserted the country, and taken up their abodes in the cities.

In a large pleasure garden attached to a restaurant, or eating of time and money is here made, to worse than no purpose. Surely these votaries of pleasure are legitimate objects of the prophet's exhortation, while there is none to address it to them—"Why do you spend you labour for that which is not bread, and your money for that which satisfies not?". The time bestowed on this useless play, if spent with equal intentness and ardour of mind, in the use of the means of grace, might store the mind with solid instruction, and change the heart to the fear of God—might elevate from the deformity and perdition of hell, to the purity and bliss of immortality; while the money expended might do a great deal towards carrying the gospel to the myriads who are perishing for lack of knowledge.—"Father forgive them, for they know not what they do."

There is a Protestant church in Toulouse, but very small. Once this city contained a large amount of Protestant population. The Protestant minister here showed me the gate, near the hotel I occupy, through which, he said, about five thousand Protestants were driven, to be butchered, at the fatal revocation of the edict of Nantz, when, in the mysterious wisdom of the Almighty Ruler of the universe, the misguided legions of Rome were permitted to triumph over the prostrate disciples of the reformation. The wonder is, not that the Protestant remnant should be so small, after the expiration of one hundred and twenty years, during which their worship was totally suppressed, but that there should be any remnant at all. A little remnant however there is, who have procured a house of worship. Never shall I forget the feelings with which I worshipped on Sabbath last with this little remnant, who have been gathered together in their feebleness, to "build the old wastes, to repair the desolations of many generations." who gathereth the outcasts of Israel, may crown their labours with abundant success, was the stranger, a lonely unknown, but in the midst of them. They placed under the pastoral care of the most interesting man I have met with in France, Mons. Lasignol, at Montpelier, and find him, as far as I have opportunity to judge, to answer the character given of him, as "an excellent man." He is very sagacious in his doctrines. This is true from a little volume he put into my hands lately, published in French, which is about to be translated into French. The title of it is "Christ showing mercy," which he corresponded with the account of me of it in these words——it is excellent." Perhaps in a fatigable industry, he may fall of his pedestal, as very few indeed would not; but most other respects, my esteem would make him superior. I have seen few men grace a pulpit of the same degree. To a very possessing person, he adds a voice, ready utterance, gravity of manner, and fervour of voice. I regretted exceedingly deficient acquaintance with the language, which excluded me from all feast, I have no doubt his person would have afforded me. The afternoon of the Sabbath he did not preach, but met in the church with a small Bible class of young people.

The kind attentions of Mons. Chabrand have been much indebted to, and particularly for an invitation to an English physician, has been long a resident in house, and a member of the constant congregation. By this man I have been laid under obligations. It was the day after coming here, that Chabrand took me to his house, where we took tea in the garden. On the following morning, he visited me at the hotel, inquired particularly into the nature of my complaint, and proffered any assistance he could any way render, without charge; inviting me again to partake of the hospitality of his table. You can scarcely conceive how a wandering outcast, a stranger and alone, feeble both in body and mind, feels under the reception of such kindness. "Come ye blessed of my Father," &c. "for I was a stranger and ye took me in." May all the gladness which this joyful invitation shall one day inspire, be felt in the heart of Dr. Thomas of Toulouse.

There are in this city a number of very spacious Roman Catholic chapels. Like the buildings of this kind I have seen every where else in France, they show great antiquity in their exterior, while internally, they exhibit much splendour of decoration. As Roman Catholic houses of worship are always open to receive whosoever may enter, and as they are really places of curiosity, from the paintings and ornaments they contain, I seldom pass any of them in my walks, without taking a view of what is within. On entering lately a very large one, near the suburbs of the city, you can hardly conceive how much my feelings were shocked, to find it converted into a stable, and filled with horses belonging to the military. This desecration took place under the dominion of Bonaparte——Why it has not been corrected since the restoration of the Bourbons, I am not informed. It would appear that the influence of infidelity must have greatly lessened the demand for churches, as well as the power of religious feeling in the community, before such an outrage could be tolerated in a Roman Catholic country.

Great efforts are at this time making to restore popery to its ancient standing in France. Among other means, there is a company of six or seven.
seven missionaries, going from city to city, preaching; and some of them are said to be men of considerable eloquence. At every city they visit, a wooden image of the Saviour is procured, larger than life, exquisitely carved and painted. This image is nailed on a cross, the stem of which is from twenty to thirty feet long; and this cross, after being carried in procession through the city for several days, followed by crowds of devotees, is erected in some conspicuous situation, where it is left to be the object or medium of adoration, after the missionaries are gone. I saw this procession at Aix, but did not at the time know its nature. I find by the crucifixes they have erected, that these missionaries have been before me, in most of the cities I have visited. There is an immensely high one lately set up in the publick square at Toulouse. It has given me strange feelings, to see well dressed people, coming with hasty steps, and dropping on their knees, to offer their supplications, literally at "the foot of the cross."

The contrivances of popery to occupy the publick attention and enlist the senses, by interesting spectacles, is really astonishing, and displays a zeal worthy a better cause, from which Protestants might learn. The annual processions are taking place at this time in this city, and are very splendid. You will understand that the different religious orders belonging to the Romish church, have each annually, a procession conducted with vast parade. On one day, the blue penitents walk, on the next day, the white penitents, &c. making four or five days together, devoted to these pageantries; and the effort is, for each order to surpass the other, in their gorgeous exhibition. My powers of description are utterly insufficient to give you any adequate idea of these fooleries. Crucifixes, altars, wax candles of immense size, golden censers, with incense smoking, &c. &c. are carried in slow procession, preceded and followed by long ranks of ecclesiasticks, clad in white, in blue or black garments, down to their heels, walking barefoot, having their heads hid in masks, that give them a most grotesque appearance. Every few minutes the procession halts; bowing, kneeling, every attitude of adoration, takes place, mingled with much singing of psalms. Before and behind, the streets are literally gorged with the multitudes, anxious to enjoy the show. Every window is filled with projecting heads, while the whole fronts of the houses, along the streets where the procession moves, are covered with the finest decorations of curtains, carpets, bedspreads, &c. which the inhabitants can hang out. I have had full opportunity to see the whole spectacle from the window of my chamber, where it would have doubled my gratification had you been with me, to look down upon the moving scene. As matter of curiosity, it is highly worth seeing. But, alas! how grieving is the reflection, that these are the toils in which the souls of men are "snared and taken." It is by these fooleries, that men are seduced to trust the absurdities of popery, as their preparation for eternity, instead of seeking in gospel truth the illumination of their understandings, and the amendment of their hearts. I am sick of such sights; but desire to rejoice for my country and my kindred, that with them the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. To them may it be given in God’s "light to see light clearly."

Yours, &c.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.
February 28th, 1836.

Rev. and dear Sir—In the January number of your valuable paper, the queries of a writer under the signature of L. attracted my attention. The queries were doubly interesting to me as one doomed to labour in the vineyard, on that part of the American soil, which is styled by some writers north of the Delaware, and by some bordering thereon, "slave holding states." I well know, and duly appreciate, the enlarged and just and benevolent views, which you entertain, and have ever expressed, in all matters where north and south are concerned. Should the following answers to the queries of L. be deemed worthy of a place in the Christian Advocate, they are at your service.

Query 1st.—"Are there not two millions of slaves in the republick of the United States?"

Ans.—Not having the census of the different states, which have had entailed upon them by freemen, the curse of slavery, the writer cannot pretend, accurately to answer. He believes, however, the number to be even greater than two millions.

Query 2d.—"Are not almost the whole of them denied the word of God?"

Ans.—The term "almost," includes a great deal, and is doubtful as to precise quantity or number.—The term "denied," too, is not sufficiently explicit.

Should it be asked, "Are not the greater part of them ignorant of the word of God?" I would reply in the affirmative. Should it be again asked, "Are not many of them 'denied' the word of God?" I should reply, yes. Still must add, the number, although great, is small, very small indeed, when compared with the number, the immense multitude of white and brown Catholics in Ireland, and on the continent of Europe, to whom the "unadulterated word of God"is denied. If the Bible be denied to the slave, it is from the impiety and inhumanity of his owner. No legal statute can debar him its use and instruction. The common law, which is founded in common sense, provides for the duties and the privileges of master and servant. The writer believes no "slave holding state" has yet dared to make a slave, of the white man, by fettering his conscience in this matter, in order to rivet faster the bonds of the African. And should any legislature "deny the word of God" to the slave, they, and their wretched constituents, may soon look for the vengeance of that God whose name combines in it, justice and mercy. The page of history is replete with the awful visitations of his providence, on those who have rejected or denied his word, in reference either to themselves or to others. The following brief replies then, may be given to the 2d query of L.

1st. Some slaves, are by their wicked owners, absolutely forbidden the use of the word of God—just as are many poor Cathlicks, by their priests and their parents.

2d. Many slaves, owned by masters professedly Christian, are so neglected by them, as regards their spiritual interests, that they live and die in utter ignorance of the word of God.

Query 3d.—"Are not ninety-nine hundredths of them incapable of reading the scriptures?"

Ans.—Here the respondent cannot pretend to accuracy. The proportion of those who cannot read, to those who can, is distressingly great—almost equalling the subjects of the new emperor Nicholas—or the lower class of the inhabitants of the island where Cathlick emancipation is a subject of such deep and heartfelt interest. May the year soon "roll round" when "Columna sexaginta pedes Alta," shall be erected in every state—inscribed "Universal emancipation"—and underneath, "Am I not a brother." The instruction of the slave occupies the heart and the time of many Southern Christians, and their number and employment is gradually, though slowly, increasing.

Query 4th.—"Are they not immortal beings, needing the salvation of Christ?"

Ans.—Some have indeed questioned, whether the blacks have immortal souls. But "the world without souls,” seems to be confined to the vicinance of London.

The writer can see no more difference betwixt this class of human beings and others—than between black or red, or yellow, or white peas—These, when broken, exhibit the same internal colour and texture. So do all human beings, save where there has been some particular mal-conformation. I think, from all the evidence before him, L. may be perfectly satisfied, that “they are immortal beings,” and therefore need salvation through Christ—and too to that man, who hath it in his power to help them to the knowledge of this salvation, and refuseth thus to do.

The 5th Query is—“Are they not within the full view of the American church, and yet, in a great measure, overlooked by this church?”—On this I remark, that the words “full view,” when applied to civil, political or religious matters, means a good or perfect understanding of the thing in hand.

The situation of the slave, I reply, is not, in the above sense, “in full view of the American church.” Many northern members of this church are utterly ignorant on this point. Too many derive all their information on this matter from the “Carr’s and Faux’s” of America.

The situation of the slave is bad indeed, very bad—more wretched than some suppose, though not quite so miserable, as many think. The writer most ardently wishes that the “American church” were wide awake “to the condition of the slave,” and the situation of the “slave-holding states.” And that portion of it which is freed from this incubus by the kind providence of God, would more liberally aid in fostering the only hope of their southern brethren, the Colonization Society. They are indeed “overlooked by the American church;” and it is to the writer a matter of astonishment that this foster mother of all good, should cast her eyes over immense and populous tracts of country to the south and west, to light with such intense interest upon a few small specks in the Pacific ocean. Still, however, he thinks, a skilful general should direct his view to the little hills and vales around him, as well as to the larger—and that the latter should be first occupied and garrisoned, before his troops are sent out to take possession of the former.

Query 6th.—“Is their lot remembered in the prayers of the church, or in the monthly concerts?”—It is to be feared, that on this point, as well as on others, the “disinterested benevolence” of many professing Christians, carries them too far from home. It is to be hoped that many ministers and many Christians, bear this subject on their hearts at our monthly concerts for prayer. Indeed, they cannot understandingly sing many of the appropriate excellent hymns in Dobell’s selection, without doing so. Yet the lot of the slave is too seldom specially remembered, at such seasons. And I hope the inquiry of L. will lead both ministers and people, to make the matter into serious consideration.

Query 7th.—“Is there any good reason why they should be disregarded, especially while Greeks are remembered, and distant heathen commiserated?”

I answer, none. Africa once boasted of her Carthage, as well as Italy her Rome, and Greece her Athens. The coloured man was then as free as the Greek, or the Roman. In intellect, and in martial and spiritual prowess, Hannibal and Cyprian, were second to few, if to any. And are there not among the race of Africa, wherever they may be scattered, or whatever be their situation, the same intellectual, the same moral powers? Yes, and if unshackled, the incidents of life would call them into action. Every benighted portion of our globe, has claims upon the church of God. But our slave population has peculiar claims upon the American part of it—claims which every Christian must admit. The only difference of opinion seems to be in answering the question, how ese claims to be satisfied? To sti icate them "en masse," would cru el, as to send forth children
el years of age to navigate
an—or as wild, as to call them
age our political, or even docconcerns. They must be ined and prepared for the true
ent of that liberty, the Advent ich, Divine Providence, in the es of the times," indicates must ary; whatever the selfishness of ave dealer may say to the concluding these remarks, pere, Mr. Editor, to request you, to every judicatory of every ch of the church of Christ, which unhappily be located under this cloud, to impress upon its mem-
the duty of so far educating aves and servants, as that they be enabled to read the word of Knox.

The editor chooses to leave the
ks of Knox without comment,
or than to say, that he most cor-approves the most of them; and he knows not how any judicaof the Presbyterian church, from rch session to the General As-y, can acquit itself of aggravated in the sight of God, if any proper be neglected to make the slaves
its bounds acquainted with ly scriptures as speedily as le; and to exterminate slavery,
s soon as it can be done with-jury either to the slave or to aster. And the editor believes this might be done in a few
, if all concerned were honestly heartily disposed to co-operate ecting this important object.)

ERS FROM A MOTHER TO A DAUGH-
R, ON THE SUBJECT OF EARLY UCATION.

(Continued from p. 158.)

LETTER VII.

A——, Dec. —, 1824.

dear Mary—I do not know
you, or your brothers had any confidential friends beside your parents. Intimacy with you was sometimes sought by the idle and frivoous, either to preserve the appearance of a good reputation, or to seduce
you into their own follies and vices.
But we scarcely gave them an opportunity of forming an acquaintance with you. You remember when they called, how quickly you were employed elsewhere than in their company; and that the intruder was left to converse with your parents, to be silent, or to retire. We gave no cause of complaint, for we were ceremonious and civil; but it was not our society that was called for, and the visit was not often repeated.
Our plan was soon discovered, and they came no more: and your brothers were strictly forbidden to visit their haunts, or their houses—however exalted might be their family,
or their rank.

You know that your brothers did not always cheerfully acquiesce in these restrictions. They were sometimes silent, but manifestly displeased; and sometimes they intiated that they "knew not why we were so uncharitable—knew not why young gentlemen, who were so affable and pleasant, were always to be avoided." But they had not lived the days of our years; nor had they the strength of mental vision to "look to the end." They had confidence in their own strength
and resolution to resist temptation;
but happily for them, we had not the same confidence; for many, as moral as themselves, from wanting their restraint, have "fallen down
—wounded and slain."

Give your children no opportunity to learn the art of deceiving. I pity the mother whose child can boldly step forth, and without a blush utter a falsehood. "Rather let my child lose her right arm than that look of innocence," said a fond mistaken parent, whose child had that moment, with an assumed look of assurance, told him a palpable falsehood. The parent is indeed to be pitied, whose want of discernment, or blind partiality, leads him to work the wo of his child, by converting crimes into virtues. If you understand not human nature better than this, resign your charge into the hands of one who does.

Know you not, dear Mary, that modesty is the natural attendant of merit and virtue. A proficient in the art of deception, with a brazen and unblushing front, may come forward and assert a falsehood; while the child of real candour, but of overpowering diffidence, may approach with downcast eye, and a face suffused in crimson, and tell you the whole truth; for the very fear, which suspicion excites, may destroy his confidence.—Here is room for discriminating judgment. If you are at a loss, dismiss the child for the present; but spare no pains, till by evidence, sought from every quarter, you learn the exact truth of the matter, and act accordingly.

One rule for the detection of guilt, will not answer all cases. Let me illustrate this by a short tale. Four individuals were apprehended and brought before a magistrate, on suspicion of having been concerned in setting fire to a house, which had recently been burned. When the first was examined, one of the bystanders remarked, “this man is certainly guilty, for he is as pale as ashes.” When the second was examined, another by-stander said,—“it undoubtedly was this fellow, for he is as red as fire.” The remark made on the third was,—“this surely must be the culprit, for his guilt is so great, that he cannot hold up his head.” On the fourth, the sentence pronounced by a spectator, was,—“assuredly that man is guilty, for see how brazen and impudent he looks.” Now it turned out at last, that it was neither the pale, nor the red; it was neither the bashful man nor the bold;—it was a black man who was convicted of the crime.

I have known some in the highest ranks of life, who made themselves contemptible by the practice of lying. Where was their mother’s shame, who allowed them to grow up in the habit of a vice so mean? I would not have a liar among my children, for all the wealth of the Indies. If a child grows up with this character, the mother must have connived at the wickedness. Children detected in almost any other fault, may be forgiven at discretion; but let a lie never pass without severe correction: This rule once established in a family, and strictly adhered to, will effectually prevent the crime,—at least it will never become habitual.

I do not know that your daughter can be called a beauty; and this may save you some trouble. But should she be persuaded by servile flatterers to think herself a beauty, it would be no less dangerous than if she really was one. A mistake of this kind, is certainly not unfrequent. Have you never seen a young lady, even of plain features, labouring under a misapprehension of this kind, and rendering herself truly disgusting, by attempting to assume all the airs which a confessed and finished beauty sometimes thinks herself authorized to take? On the other hand, I suppose it not necessary to persuade Ellen to think herself ugly, that she may remain humble. Rather teach her the worthlessness of mere beauty. Show her what Solomon says, when he compares “the fair woman, who is without discretion, to a jewel of gold in a swine’s snout.” Good sense, an amiable disposition, a well-cultivated mind, joined with modesty, may all be expressed by a set of features not perfectly regular, and by a complexion not wholly combined of the lily and the rose; while a face, in which these latter qualities are united, may express
Letters from a Mother to a Daughter.

At every evil passion. And an expression does, in fact, too accompany beauty.

We have more than once seen sisters—the one an acknowledgment—beauty—the other plain in her presence. The former we have entirely satisfied without any qualification; believing she claims to the admiration and estimation of all around her, simply to the score of her beauty; and such pride, malice, envy, and such evil passions, to take deep root in her heart. We have seen her acting idle, extravagant, and dissipated; and, in a word, living not cultivating, or appearing to for the esteem of any one. Shaid an inexperienced young man to her as his wife? Let him repurchase a beautiful picture from his house. This may afford him negative comfort; but heedlessly the animated beauty, if he in his, will drive all comfort from his dwelling. On the other hand, the sister with less attractive features and complexion, has more remedied the deficiency, by diligently enriching her mind with knowledge; cultivating the esteem of her acquaintance by offices; and what is infinitely better, by seeking immortal youth from external beauty, in regenerating. But at the age of twenty or thirty, if a comely appearance alone was regarded, has not the early life exhibited the fewest charms? Often has; for a long continued prudence of mind, together with the presence of bad passions, has a tendency to destroy the finest set features; and idleness, with constant ill-health, necessarily destroys the fairest complexion.

It was for the mother to have prevented all these sad effects of beauty; for such evils are not necessarily connected with it. No, it is not necessary that she be homely in appearance, that she may become meek and humble in disposition. The possessor of the most perfect face and form may heighten every personal charm, by adding to exterior gracefulness, mental accomplishments and useful qualifications. We will even admit that beauty is valuable, when not too highly valued by the possessor—when she does not rest satisfied with the decaying flower, which when it fades leaves nothing truly valuable behind.

Many suppose that learning, to any considerable extent, cannot be acquired by a lady, in consistency with her being fully acquainted with the arts of housekeeping and good management; as if knowledge would cause her to despise duty. Of all that knowledge, which would indeed have this effect, keep your children forever ignorant. But, Mary, are those females, within the circle of your acquaintance, the most domestic, the most faithful wives, and the best managers, whose minds are the most void of good information. Some there are among the ignorant and rude, who perhaps can perform more manual labour. But place one of these at the head of a gentleman's family; let her assume the management of his house, and the education of his children; and he would blush to introduce a stranger of his own rank there, although his mansion were ever so superb, and his furniture ever so costly. What is his fortune worth to such a man, if it makes him neither comfortable nor respected. Let it be your care to prove by economy of time and money, that it is cheaper to support a well-educated female, than to gratify the vain desires of one whose mind is destitute of learning. Reward the cares of the husband and the father, who so kindly and liberally provides for you, by rendering his home a sweet retreat from every ill. Let him see his children early taught to love him; to meet with joy his glad return;
early to lip his name with the fondest affection; and in confidence to tell him all their little tales of joy, or wo. Above all, let him see them, under your tuition, preparing for future usefulness. With conscientious fidelity perform every duty of your station. Let your strict attention to his comfort and to the welfare of his family, induce him to love that book, from which you derive all your rules of faith and practice. Let this be a powerful motive with you for keeping your house in order: And let neatness, and elegance of taste, be its principal ornaments. Never tease your husband for expensive articles of dress, or furniture, or equipage. The intelligent matron knows that these are only the playthings of youth—the hobby of the vacant mind. Your own experience with respect to these, may have taught you that Solomon truly said, "Va

In this age of Christian benevolence and exertion, plainness and simplicity are happily becoming fashionable. Is the costly lace, the superb picture, or expensive drapery with which "the window is o'er-hung," any real ornament, so long as "the house of God lieth waste;" or when the family of your minister needs the comforts of life; or when you have nothing left to cast into the treasury of the Lord? Let no fashionable follies—no silly fancies of any kind whatever, prove that you want consistency of character; or that you are regardless of the peace of your husband. Let it appear by early rising, diligence and activity, that you redeem all the time which is devoted to books. Let your books be well chosen; and make application, in common life, of the maxims which they contain. The female pedant who thinks herself exalted by her superior attainments above the common duties of life, is, by the admission of all, truly despicable. (To be continued.)
the stern. Fortunately we were out only twenty hours, including the whole of a night, however, during which it rained.

On reaching home, I found our dear H. and Charlie, both much indisposed, in which state they remained for a fortnight. For many days of that time, not only they but all the family, were shut up entirely, on account of the weather; first, by a storm of wind and rain from the south, so violent as to oblige us to close every window and door, and to resort to candles for light, in order to escape the heaviest of the gale, which still swept through the thatch of our huts; and afterwards by a powerful trade wind from the north, which rushed on us from the Morokoi channel, and made our situation almost equally unpleasant and uncomfortable.

The rain was more uninterrupted and of longer continuance than any we have yet experienced at Lahaina, and the air cooler than we had yet known it: during one or two nights the mercury in Fahrenheit's thermometer, stood at 64° and 66°, and did not rise in the daytime higher than 70° and 72°.

The state of the people has been progressively interesting. I brought one thousand spelling books with me from Honolulu—five hundred for this station, and five hundred for Kairua; but so importunate was the demand for them, from the moment they were known to be in our possession, that we were obliged to appropriate the whole number to the new schools established here; and before the end of the first week there was not one hundred left in the depository.

The solitude of our situation, as respects civilized and Christian society, was pleasantly interrupted last week, by a visit of a few days from the brig Col. Young, of Calcutta, on a voyage from South America to Bengal. The master, captain Potter, and Mr. Dowell, an English merchant of the East Indies, a passenger in the vessel, were both agreeable and gentlemanly men—especially the latter, who to an apparent acquaintance with "men and manners," added much of the polish of high life. They visited us frequently while they remained at anchor, and we dined with them on Christmas. After many kind and polite attentions they took leave of us, and proceeded on their voyage, on the afternoon of the 26th instant.

Thus, my beloved M. you have a hasty outline of the last six weeks with us: and to the present date, when we all enter on another of the larger divisions of time. Not one word of all that has befallen you and yours, during the whole year just past, has reached us—though, doubtless, much has taken place within your own walls, and the circle of our immediate family friends, of deeper interest to us, than any thing we have transmitted or can transmit from the loneliness and almost unchanging sameness of these dreary abodes.

We hope, however, before the return of the spring, to be favoured with accounts from you, at least as minute and as the details with which now, for more than two years, we have troubled you.

I have just had a more serious debate in my own mind, than at any former time, as to the advantage of continuing to write to you in the form I have thus far done, or not. I have thrown so little that can interest into my past journals—all that I have said of the scenery and natural productions of the islands—of the people—their general appearance—manners, habits, &c. &c. has been so very incidental and common-place, that I am almost discouraged, lest you should think such communications on nothing, a loss of time to both of us. I have been led to continue them thus for a time, only from the hope that they might become more worthy your attention in these respects; but experience teaches me to fear, that my duties as a missionary will compel me to write to you hereafter, even in a more hasty manner than I have yet done; and necess sarily cause all that I say to be of the same desultory and imperfect
character as the past.

You must remember, that the situation I am in, and the various and constant calls on my time and attention, place me in very different circumstances from the visitor of a few months, or a year, at the islands, or of the voyager who comes only to explore them. These have nothing to confine them day after day, and month after month, to the narrow limits of a single settlement or village,
but are at liberty both in body and mind, to scour the country through valley and over mountain, till they have filled their note books with observations, and their portfolios with drawings—whereas we are so situ-at ed in a variety of respects, as to make an excursion of a day, a matter of consultation and considerable preavious arrangement. For instance, we do not think it proper that Mr. Richards and myself, should both be absent from the mission houses at the same time, except for an hour or two:
the duties of the mission almost daily
call one of us away more or less, and the other, of course, feels it necessary
to remain near the premises.

Impediments of this kind are so various and almost constant, that I have never yet had a convenient opportunity of visiting even the mountains that rise within three miles of the sea side, and whose winding glens, dark forests and towering summits, as seen from our enclosure, promise a rich compensation to the lover
of nature, for the toil that would accompany a visit to them. This would not have been the case, however,
were a walk of an hour or two, or of an afternoon or morning, sufficient for the excursion. A long day, at least, would be necessary to enable one to ascend the nearest of the mountains, and reach home again before night. In going, there must also be a choice of time, for it very frequently rains on the tops of the mountains, at all times of the year,
and nine times out of ten, they are covered with clouds. A guide would be necessary, and persons to carry water, &c. &c. so that you must not decommn me for a want of curiosity and taste, in having lived for eighteen months in full sight of some of the most picturesque and lofty mountains
of the Pacific, without visiting them,
till you have taken into consideration the preparations necessary for the undertaking; besides the want of leisure and the difficulty of leaving home, even for a day in continuance.

Every deep valley, and every elevated peak, about "the sources of the Susquehanna," can testify to my love of rambling, and were it equally accessible, the finest scenery of my adopted country should bear witness to my love of "the sublime and beautiful:" but were I again with you, I could cross and recross one half the hills that encircle your lovely lake, at less time and with less fatigue, than I could pass up the nearest ravine, or ascend the lowest of the mountains
in our vicinity.

Should we live, Mr. Richards and myself design, in the course of a few months to make the tour of Maui; in which case, I may have it in my power to give you a full description of it, with a variety of other matter. It has also been proposed that I should make the tour of Oahu,
in company with Mr. Bingham, during my anticipated visit this winter, which will also afford matter for the pen and pencil: in both cases we have a double object in view—observations on the islands, and the preaching of the everlasting gospel to their numerous population.

In keeping a journal for you, my dear sister, I have better evidence than in many cases in which I am more desirous of discovering it, that the principle of action is "doing to others as I would have them to do to me:" and selfishness, if nothing else, prompts me to extend the principle to the matter and manner, as well as to the simple act. You will indulge me, therefore, in introducing that kind of information of ourselves,
which we are most solicitous to learn of you and yours. We feel the deep-interest in knowing, not only the more important events which would reach us through others, were you not to write at all, but home scenes also, which none but your own hand, or that of one of the family, can pourtray. We wish the outline of your daily pursuits and ordinary engagements—what books you are reading, with your critique on them—what correspondents you have—what company you entertain—sketches of your excursions from home to Schenectady and Troy—to the city—the springs, &c. &c.; in fine, a brief record of your life.

Something of this character, though from our situation necessarily less various and interesting, we will continue to transmit; not, however, without the sure expectation of receiving from yourself and our fair cousins, (to whom it will be an improving, and, if on no other account, because so great a happiness to us, pleasant exercise) a return in kind.

The blessings of a new year meet us in circumstances of more than ordinaryquietude and regularity, and the order of our little cabin, is more systematic than it has been since our establishment on the islands. We would count it among the highest of our joys, were the distance to which we are removed, such, as to allow of an occasional visit from you; but this can never be, and we must be satisfied with giving you from time to time, a glance at us as we are day by day, through the only medium of intercourse now left to us.

The sketch of a day at present will give you the regular engagements of a month; and in its peaceful progress, I can assure you, we find no inconsiderable degree of contentment and happiness. We generally rise with the sun, and spend the first hour in religious and devotional reading—breakfast at eight o'clock, (a frugal meal, as we are entirely out of butter, sugar and coffee) and immediately after, we have family worship, consisting of a hymn or chapter in the Bible in order (at present one of the psalms) and prayer. The hours from 9 to 12, Mr. Richards and myself devote to the study of the native language, and to the preparation of exercises for some one of the native religious meetings. At 10 o'clock in the morning, Kekanonohe, the youngest queen of Rihorihoe, and one of her favourite female friends, an interesting and intelligent girl of fifteen, come with their retinue to study, under the direction of Mrs. Stewart; while the young princess and another scholar visit Mrs. Richards, for a like purpose, at the same hours.

After dinner we devote an hour to miscellaneous reading, of which the periodical publications, &c. sent from America, and our united libraries, form a tolerable collection. I have begun the year with Mason on Self Knowledge—a work well suited to the season, and worthy, at least the annual perusal, of all who would improve their time to the best advantage, and exercise their powers to the highest good of themselves and their fellows. I then visit some of the schools, of which there are several in spirited operation, under well qualified native teachers,—call on some of the chiefs, and afterwards take a walk for exercise, generally to our garden, about a half mile from the beach, on the plantation given us by Karaimoku, on our first arrival at Lahaina. In these walks I am sometimes accompanied by H. and Charlie, while Betsey is engaged in a fine school kept by her every afternoon, in the chapel adjoinig our yard.

As to our evenings, though it is now our winter, they are ushered in with little of that luxury of comfort, which the Christian's poet must often have felt, before he could so sweetly have sung,

Now stir the fire, and close the shutters fast, Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round, And, while the bubbling and loud hissing uru Throws up a steamy column, and the cups That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each, So let us welcome peaceful evening in;
—and the rich enjoyment of which I myself have so often known at your own cheerful fireside—still they are the pleasantest portion of the day. Our yard is no longer crowded by noisy natives, whose chiefs are lounging about our writing desks and worktable. Charlie forgets his mischief and his play, in the sweetness of infantile sleep—all out-doors is silent except the restless surf, and we are left without interruption, renewedly to apply ourselves to this unformed language, that we may be qualified for more extensive usefulness in the stations we occupy. At 9 o'clock, we turn to the Bible, which we are studying with Scott and Henry's Commentaries, and after an hour spent in reading, and in passing an examination on the portion which occupied our attention on the preceding night, we again have family worship, and retire to rest usually between 10 and 11 o'clock.

Our regular public duties with the natives are, two sermons on the Sabbath; a weekly lecture every Wednesday afternoon; a meeting for conversation and prayer every Friday afternoon, and the monthly concert on the first Monday of each month. We have worship in English every Sabbath, but only read a sermon, unless there are ships at the anchorage. Such, my dear sister, is the employment of our time in this heathen land, and such the routine of duty which our little cottage in a greater or less degree daily witnesses; and had we, in addition to our present sources of happiness, only a ready, were it but an occasional, access to the society of those precious friends, around whom, far as they are from us, our warm affections are daily hovering, I could most sincerely exclaim,

"O blest seclusion from a jarring world Which we, thus occupied, enjoy!—
Had we the choice of sublunary good, What could we wish that we possess not here?
Health, leisure, means t' improve it, friendship, peace,
And constant occupation without care."

I have already prolonged this (I fear) tedious commencement of another communication, far beyond my intention when I took my seat—still I must add one word about our dear boy. He seems to have partaken of the spirit of good resolutions, with which we all wish to enter on a new year. To-day, in the middle of the afternoon, he came to my desk with a Bible and Psalm book in his arms, saying "Holy Bible—father pray"—and this evening the moment he was seated in his chair at the table, he turned to his mother and said, "Mrs. Stewart (the only name by which he has ever addressed her) be still—Charlie pray," and placing his hands over his face, leaned his head in silence on the table the ordinary period of asking a blessing. He cannot yet join us in our studies, &c. (unless it be to repeat the alphabet, most of the letters of which he has known for some weeks past) but is indeed a precious addition to our little society.

---

Reviews.

The following Review, extracted from the London "Congregational Magazine," for July, 1825, is from the pen of a distinguished Christian scholar. We republish it, because it illustrates truths and facts which go to establish, most conclusively, the verity of the sacred records, in opposition to the speculations of infidels. So far is it from being a fact that mankind have, according to the infidel theory, gradually advanced to refinement, from the savage state—from a state in which Lord Monboddo maintained that they had tails, like monkeys—the truth is, that man was furnished with a fund of knowledge by his Maker at his first creation; that this original stock of knowledge was improved to a certain extent by the antediluvians; the postdiluvians, retained a small portion of this knowledge, which could be preserved by a sin-family; and that this pittance of science and information formed a fountain, in the land of Shinar, whence all the streams of knowledge and civilization issued to the world. Those who dwelt far from these streams, distant and solitary regions, gradually lost the knowledge possessed by their progenitors, and fell into a state of absolute barbarism. Nor is it true that e who have once sunk into this state, do ever rise from it by their own unaided efforts, or without excessive assistance. To assert that e, do, is a mere gratuitous assumption, unsupported, we believe, by a single fact in the history of the world. All experience shows that it requires the most patient and long continued efforts, to introduce civilization and refinement among savages. Indeed we may safely assert, this effect has, in modern times, never been produced, to any considerable extent, without the powerful assistance of religion, joined with other means which have been used in the pursuit. Christians and intelligent philosophers are directly at issue on this point; and in no instance is Christianity entitled to claim a decided victory, than in the controversy which relates to this subject. The cause of missions too, depends itself with this subject. In modern times, philosophers sometimes profess a deep interest in the extension of civilization, knowledge, and religion. Then let them be advocates for Christian missions; or let them, in opposing those missions, allege something better than a reasonings a priori. Let them find us to some facts, to one fact, to show that a nation or tribe of savages has been civilized without the aid of religion. We do not believe that such a fact can be produced. The consequence that follows obviously is, that every man whose benevolence prompts him to desire the melioration of the condition of a barbarous people, ought to befriend and aid Christian missions—for we think it will not be made a question whether another system of religion may not be better calculated to produce the effect contemplated, than that which is contained in the Bible.

We much wish that the work of which the following short review is given, may be reprinted in this country.

The Advancement of Society is Knowledge and Religion. By James Douglas, Esq. 8vo. 9s.

The intellectual history of the human race, treated in close and unbroken reference to the prominent land-marks which revelation affords, and displaying the pointings which begin to appear, of an improvement more general and higher than has yet been known in the best periods, or the choicest spots, is a work of no ordinary enterprise and difficulty. Doubtless some sections of the undertaking might be filled up without great labour or unusual talent, but the connexion of the multifarious parts, the succession of the many stages, the discrimination of the chief causes, and the judicious display and contrast of the light and shade which are in almost constant play over the whole scene, require a mind of no ordinary comprehension and no common acquirements. Indeed it is a task that can be accomplished thoroughly by no one hand: the field is too vast, and the qualities requisite for its analysis so various, that little more can be done by an individual, than either to execute a single section, or present a mere sketchy or outline exhibition.
of the whole. Yet the attempt is magnanimous and noble; and to have displayed but the general
bearings, though with many imperfec tions and breaks, is a work of high merit and of intense interest.
For if the advancement of terrestrial geography is important, and he who contributes but the soundings of a single new bay, or the outline of a single coast, is counted a benefactor to the human race and to true science; what honour shall be adequate to his merit, who can map
the moral and intellectual geography of the various nations and ages
of the world, and give us in a single chart, all the descending and ascending stages of human society,
from the creation to the consummation of the globe. This is, indeed, to furnish nothing short of a historical exposition of that fine saying of Plato, Μην έπειτα ορθίως ποιήσαι το
Μυαλόν του ουρανοῦ και γῆς.
Mind is king of heaven and earth.

Whether the ancients generally entertained the doctrine of the super-macy of the mind, as was maintained by Macrobius and Porphyry, or not, is scarcely worth a dispute; but assuredly the history of the human race supplies much to illustrate and render plausible the Platonic philosophy, and to lessen the degree of our astonishment that such principles should have received the approval and support of men so eminently endowed. In the absence of a purer light, and a more authoritative judge, it is rather surprising that the Grecian philosophers attained so exalted a conception, than that they rose no higher.
Their philosophy, like their navigation, was bold, considering the principles which it had to depend upon; but both being destitute of the infallible and the universal,
dealt rather in expediends than in laws; while the greatest proficient never rose in the one above the character of coasters, nor in the other above that of speculators.
They touched on all shores, but left the seas untouched; they treated upon all questions but settled
none: they had as little notion of a hand that could guide them across the mazes and the gulfs of their philosophy, as of an instrument that should mark a sure path to the navigator in the absence of light,
and on the surface of a limitless
ocean. Hence their philosophy, like their navigation, was feeble and inefficient; yet the notion of Anax-agoras,* that mind, or intellect, being an autocrat, and unmingled with any other power, orders and pervades all things, contains in it a sublime notion, the germ of the present
interesting volume, and the principle which yet remains to be more amply developed in the upward
march of intellect to virtue, hap-niness, and God.

Without stumbling upon the indistinct and ill-assorted notions of pagan philosophers, upon the nature, capabilities, and relations of human intellect, and without santioning the far less sober and pre-found views of modern perfection-ists, a theory may be maintained to which all the facts of universal history shall respond, and with which may be linked the brightest anticipations of the philanthropist, and
the fairest visions of the reformer.
That which in the past has perplexed and shipwrecked the speculations of infidel philosophers, and that in the present, which has so often made them desperate and frantic, falls into its place in the true theory, links on with all the other parts of the mundane history and system, answers to the inspired record, word for word, fact to fact,
principle to principle, and leaves
that sacred authority in full possession of the right to unfold to the eye of hope fairer visions than the pencil of poetry ever drew, and as real as any that the pen of history

* Ανακαταταιράμενοι γεγονότα
μετά τις μεγάλης πόλεως προμηθαι μετα
επί το πρωτότοκο, ην πειθομένον εἰνα Πλάτων, Κρατιλον.
The Advancement of Society, &c. 271

recorced. Monboddo, Hume, most of inferior imitators have failed to speculate upon the ogy of human history, but we all proved themselves not in variance with the decisive

eral testimonies of revelation with the admitted facts of ature and profane history. refused to steer their course as ascertained soundings and ys, and the result was, they either lost in an ocean of per-

, or made a blind voyage the misty island of their own

, and then gave themselves as circumnavigators of the

The Germans have subse-

indulged their moody gen-

endless speculations upon the departments of this vast

, and in some general theo-

both historical and prophetic;

are most of the speculations of

al philosophers of France and England, who had preceded their theories have been as dreams as void of truth, and ignorant to an enlarged induc-

facts as to the testimonies of opiehies of revelation.

Douglas is a philosopher of a nt school, and under the gui-

of a heavenly star he has per-

ayed a voyage of greater extent,

re accuracy, and of infinitely promise than any or all his essors. The title of the vo-ontains no adequate idea of

ent and variety of the mat-

of the difficulty and com-

of the subjects discussed.

an outline of the intellectual

of the human race, contain-

n delineation of all the prin-

of social advancement, and lay of those present circum-

which appear pregnant with

and hope, in reference to oral and religious advance-of the whole race.

describing a treatise of so cated a character, it is much

easy to present an analysis,

afford an adequate view of the research which every page exhib-

bits, and of the ability with which the whole is executed. We cannot express the admiration we feel of the general design and plan of the author. The principles which he has adopted, and the lights which he follows, command our highest eration; and if, in the subordi-

ate parts, we find the execution not minutely accurate, or the fillings-

up not so perfect and well executed as the more general sketch, it is neither to be wondered at nor severely censured. There is room in so vast a subject for considerable diversity of opinion, and it was hardly to be expected that the same hand which drew the masterly outline, should execute all the drapery, colouring, and detail with equal ability; or that the first describer

of the theory of the whole orb

should succeed equally in the interior delineations of every country

and every coast, or in the history

and description of every tribe.

The work consists of five parts,

or distinct treatises, each adequarely subdivided. The First traces the past advancement of society

from the earliest condition of mankind down to their modern state.

The Second is denominated the Future. The Third treats of the Advancement of Religion at Home,

which includes a view of those hopeful agencies which are now at work, and which the author conceives will continue progressively to advance religion at home. The Fourth is devoted to the Advancement of Religion abroad; and the Fifth to the Tendency of Age.

The first of these lectures will, it is obvious, require the largest share of information, discrimination, and acuteness, to execute well. And,

at the same time, it would be by far

the most interesting and instructive

part of the discussion, supposing it adequately treated. That the hand-of a master is visible in every part of this section, we are persuaded,

all our readers will admit, when we shall have submitted some passages to their attention; at the same time we must premise, that, in such a work, the separation of a passage from its connexion, subjects it to great disadvantages—the previous views and reasonings being often essential to support, or render intelligible, the succeeding. We shall, however, endeavour to guard, as much as possible, against this evil. After some introductory paragraphs, he treats, first, of the early Condition of Mankind; then of the first Monarchies; then of the Grecian Republics. The following citation contains the author's views of the early condition of mankind.
The Advancement of Society, &c.

"The Mosaic records secure us from an error into which philosophers, who trust more to their own conjectures than to the Bible, have generally failed. It is requisite for, clearness and precision, to reduce every thing to its simplest elements, and from its least modified state, to enumerate the changes it undergoes, and the additions it receives; but what is allowable in a work of which the sole aim is simplicity, may be very erroneous when considered as matter of fact; and though, in a treatise which accommodates itself to an arbitrary method, and not to the truth of events, mankind may be represented as passing from the occupation of hunters to that of shepherds, and then from pasturage to tillage, and a life in cities, yet, the error is great, if we mistake the process of our own minds for progress of the human race, and imagine that men must first have existed as savages, because the savage state stands at the head of our own artificial system.

"And yet this misapprehension is the sole support of a theory which is alike refuted by the evidence of revelation, and by the situation of the ancient world; from the sea of China to the German Ocean, tribes, too rude to have tamed the wild animals for their own use, were in possession of domestic cattle, and beyond the bounds of civilization the pastoral state alike prevailed in Asia, Africa, and Europe. The only exceptions strengthen the general rule: some hunters, scattered over ranges of mountains; some fishers, amid the intersecting lakes, or some tribes deprived of their cattle by the severity of the climate towards the Icy Sea. In this respect, the New World is contrasted with the Old, and in this very contrast affords an additional proof that the pastoral state has preceded the savage, since its savage inhabitants, a strong marks of their Scythian will be generally allowed to have from a race in possession of the herds, and the only assignable the difference between the head of America and their pastoral ane

"The appearances of society both the old and the new conti nently tally with the effects which have resulted from the dispersion kind, as described by Moses; a kind which took place after a common for a length of years, in a country capable for the increase of their flock of shepherds, and of the Barbarian, who had mentioned the Patriarchs. Then the more deeply, according to their from the parent seats of mankind difficulties of their journey.

"It is from this one fount of light that the first vestiges of thought and arrangement, derived, which a common to all nations and language which have been assigned, even del philosophers, to one primitive stock whence the many families earth have sprung; who have left the resemblance of the remotest languages, and record however disguised by fable and ity, which refer to a period when the earth had one common history a rest.

"Thus the time which elapsed the deluge and the dispersion of the kind, must be looked upon as a period of civilization. No doubt to the early invention of arts and of descendants of Cain, and the lost antediluvians, so favourable cultivation of science; great a would be made, and commanding of knowledge, would be reached, in and judged as like The tust, that nature had denied the length of days for cultivating their which she bestowed upon many in animals; but it is not by knowledge that existed before the, but by the grace that were put in the ark, that after times have been affected and benefitted. To form a conception of the change which science would undergo in the bad the post diluvians, we may imagine..."
would be the fate of a varied and copious language, which, after abounding in works of every character, came to exist only in the speech of a few individuals; how the additions by which it had been enriched would fall into disuse, and the language itself would return to its first rudiments and primitive simplicity, while the derivatives would occasionally remain, and the roots from which they had sprung be forgotten; the same would it fare with science, reduced to the same circumstances, the higher and more speculative parts would be forgotten, the application might be retained without the principle, and the elements might rest behind as witnesses of the perfection to which knowledge had been brought, and of the advanced state of the sciences from which they had been separated.

Possessed of the relics of ancient language and of ancient knowledge, a new population rapidly multiplied in the land where nature planted the olive and Noah
the vine, and wandered, with their in-crerating flocks, beneath that serene sky
where the stars were first classed into constellations, without fixed habitation in the country of their transient pilgrimage,
previous to their spreading anew the tide of life over the depopulated earth, and resting in the wilderness once more the dwellings of men.

"It is this period of universal inter-community which has given an indissoluble bond of connexion to the far scattered family of man, and irresistibly carries back whatever holds of high antiquity to the common origin of the species. Among the remotest races, discoverèd by vast ages, and unavenged oceans, fragments of language, tradition, and opinion are found, which piece in together, and when united with every remnant, from every distant region, almost recompose that body of transmitted recollections, which, surviving an earlier civilization, and an almost universal catastrophe, was separated and dispersed over the earth, by the separation and dispersion of mankind."—
pp. 10—15.

Of the general accuracy of these observations there can remain little doubt, though some notice might properly have been taken of other opposing accounts of the early condition of mankind, and something more formidable might have been alleged against the speculations of infidels. But we are indisposed to point out defects amidst so much that is excellent. After treating of the first monarchies he approaches the Grecian and Roman eras, and here, as we expected, the author is both more copious and more eloquent, though, at the same time, from the very nature of his subject, he is more open to objection. It is no easy task to give our readers a fair specimen of the maner in which the author has executed this part of his undertaking,

but we shall select a paragraph or two as a specimen of the whole.

"An influence, highly favourable to the Grecian States, consisted in their interna-tionality. Greece, indented and mountainous, was severed into many states, but all peopled by one primitive race, speaking the same primitive language. In its many states advancing together in the career of civilization, it resembled modern Europe; but the intercommunion between them was far more intimate and ef-factual, from their lying within a smaller compass; and from their speaking the same language; yet not merely one language,
but rather many dialects, which had each
its peculiar excellence, and left untouched
the originality of the rest. A faint example of the advantage of this may be found in the Scotch verses of Burns, which had all the freshness of youth when the contemporary English writings bore strong marks of the decay of age. This variety of dialects not only gave a freshness and originality to the poetry of the different states of Greece, but allowed the riches of all to be transfused into each without the strangeness of thoughts,
which, when translated, are seldom more than half naturalized, and exempt from the loss which a difference of idiom inevitably occasions. From these multiplied sources of abundance arose the copiousness of Grecian genius and literature;
and hence proceeded many of the advantages which Homer possessed over other poets. The seeds of poetry are the events of dark ages, increased by tradition, and expanding with the growing imagination of men, who are passing from obscurity into light. These traditions, af-after receiving the colour of the popular fancy, in their second stage, are moulded by the imagination of the earliest and often forgotten bards; and after this comes the season favourable for the appearance of a great genius, who has every thing
prepared for his advent in the workings of the popular mind, and in the efforts of his ruder predecessors; and who, by giving to the materials already existing their third and finished form, appropri-ses them for ever, and perpetuates his own work. Such was H. Nett, who, like his own Ulysses surveying many men.
and many cities, was enabled to collect the popular poetry of his country—poetry more varied from the moral situation of Greece than ever existed before or after,
and filled the inexhausted stream of his inspiration from a hundred springs. It is not wonderful that works which were enriched from such various sources, should in their turn be a fresh source of endless variety, and that the diversified forms of poetry should be traced to Homer, as all the prismatic colours are refracted from the light of the sun."—pp. 32—34.

Beautiful and eloquent as is the principal part of this extract, the illustration of the peculiar excellence of the Grecian dialects from the Scotch verses of Burns, is one of the least appropriate, and most objectionable parallels the author could have found. For neither is it true that Burns's verse had, on account of the Scottish dialect, the freshness
of youth—nor did the contempo-ary English writings bear the strong marks of the decay of age. The charm of Burns's muse to Scotchmen was rather the revival of a dying dialect, and to Englishmen his dialect had no charm, either as a youthful or an aged one; since it was utterly unintelligible without the aid of a translation, and interested partly on the ground of the novelty of such barbarisms, shaped
and pared into harmonious verse,
and, partly, because such novelties
were connected with a genius altogether enchanting and rare. The dialect in which his muse sang, instead of having the freshness of youth, and charming all readers,
when the contemporary English writers bore strong marks of the decay of age, was the temporary revival of an uncouth phraseology, and an artificial resurrection of antiquated
idioms, which, even to Scotchmen,
were not half intelligible; which no genius but that of Burns would have attempted to revive, and which no one, since his day, has dreamt of renovating—though they will live
in his writings, and in them alone,
as a bright and sparry incrustation formed upon decaying relics of antiquity, or upon the vile fragments of straw and stones, and such like rubbish.

A SERMON ON THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY. By E. Cornelius, Pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Salem.—Published by request of the Church.

After a careful perusal of this sermon, we determined not only to give an analysis of it, but to extract from it largely. The want of space at our present number, forbids us to execute our purpose—Our notice of it must be very short and summary—

The text of the discourse is Ephes.
ii. 18. "For through him we must have access by one Spirit unto the Father." From these words, after a pertinent introduction, the preacher proposes to show—"I. What the doctrine of the Trinity is. II. The proof of it. III. The practical importance of it." These particulars are severally treated, in a brief, clear and masterly manner. We cannot say that any new views of the subject are unfolded, or that any new proofs of the all-important doctrine of the Trinity are adduced—This indeed was not to be expected. But we do say, that never before have we seen right views of the subject,
and a clear and impressive statement of the old proofs, brought within the same compass. Nor has this been effected by a dry and unconnected
statement of facts and positions.
The discourse is altogether an interesting one. We earnestly recommend its perusal to our readers; and take the liberty to suggest that a cheap edition, in the form of a tract,
should be published and widely distributed.
Temple of Diana.—The temple of Diana at Ephesus, after having risen with increasing splendour from seven repeated misfortunes, was finally burnt by the Goths in their third naval invasion. The arts of Greece, and the wealth of Asia, had conspired to erect that magnificent structure. It was supported by an hundred and twenty-seven marble columns of the Ionic order. They were the gifts of devout monarchs, and each was sixty feet high. The altar was adorned with the masterly sculptures of Praxiteles, who had, perhaps, selected from the favourite legends of the place, the birth of the children of Latona, the concealment of Apollo after the slaughter of the Cyclops, and the clemency of Bacchus to the vanquished Amazons. Yet the length of the temple of Ephesus was only four hundred and twenty-five feet, about two-thirds of the measure of the church of St. Peter’s at Rome. In the other dimensions, it was still more inferior to that sublime production of modern architecture.

In Westminster, (London) the aggregate number of suicides, from the year 1812 to 1816, inclusive, was one hundred and twenty-nine, being an annual average of 25.4-5ths; and, from the year 1816 to 1824 inclusive, one hundred and twenty-nine, making an average of 20.1-8th a year. The number of men who committed suicide exceeded that of the other sex in the proportion of five to two; and the disposition of juries to assume insanity as the cause of self-destruction, is strikingly illustrated by the circumstance that, out of the whole number of suicides above mentioned, there are only five cases in which a verdict of felo de se was returned.

Arctic Expedition.—The New York Albian states, that despatches were on Thursday last received in New York from captain Franklin, by way of Canada, and forwarded to England. It is not known what are the contents of the despatches, or where they were written, but it is supposed that they were forwarded from the shore of the Great Bear Lake, in 65° N. 119° W. where captain Franklin was expected to take up his winter quarters. The last previous accounts from him were dated on the Athabasco Lake, on the 25th of July last, when it was his intention to leave the Great Bear Lake in the spring of 1826, for Mackenzie’s River, and the Polar Sea.

The celebrated Orientalist, Professor Vater, died at Halle, on the 16th of March.

Among his esteemed works are the continuation of Adelung’s Histories, a Hebrew Grammar, a Russian Grammar, Tabelle’s Ecclesiastical History, &c.

In July last, the Pollux, Dutch sloop of war, captain Eeg, discovered a new and well peopled island in the Pacific, to which the name of Nederlandsch Island was given. Its latitude and longitude laid down at 7° 19’ S. and 177° 39’ 16” E. from Greenwich. The natives were athletick and fierce, great thieves, and from showing no symptoms of fear when muskets were discharged, evidently unacquainted with fire-arms.

Preservation of Lemon or Lime Juice.—Lemon or lime juice, according to the experiments of Capt. Bagnold, may be preserved without the addition of rum, spirit, or any other substance, by the process, well known and practised, for the preserving of green gooseberries and other fruits for domestic purposes. Lime juice was expressed from the fruit in Jamaica, in September 1823, strained, put into quart bottles and carefully corked; these being put into a pan of cold water, were gradually raised to the boiling point; they were retained at that point for half an hour, and then allowed to cool. A bottle opened in April 1824, was found to contain the juice in the state of a whitish turbid liquor, with the acidity and much of the flavour of the lime, nor did it appear to have undergone any alteration. The same juice again bottled and heated, was set aside till March 1825, when, upon examination, it was found in good condition, retaining much of the flavour of the recent juice.—Trans. of Soc. Arts.

Alabama Salt.—It is stated in a late Mobile paper, that the “Alabama Salt Manufacturing Company” have commenced the manufacture of this important staple commodity. The works of this company were nearly completed, and, it was supposed, would answer the most sanguine expectations of the individuals interested. The Alabama salt is white and beautiful, and holds a middle quality between the Liverpool blown and ground salt. Sufficient quantities have been already manufactured to test fully the experiment, and no doubt is entertained but that the enterprise of the company will be crowned with success, and that they will be able to supply the whole State with this article, at a reasonable price.

Interesting to Farmers.—We have seen this morning a lamb from a stock, originally of Carman, in Asia Minor, called the camblet woolled sheep, only three months and a half old, with wool, from three to five inches in length, covering his whole body. We are no judges of sheep and wool, but we are told by those who are, that this breed is well worthy of the attention of farmers.—New York Evening Post.

From the Sag Harbour Corrector.—On heaving-out the ship Thames, now repairing in this port, part of the sword of a fish was found in her keel. We have been particular in gaining all the information we could of this curious fact.

It appears that the fish struck his sword between the main and false keel, forcing the one from the other, upwards of two inches, although secured together by seven eight-inch copper bolts, and not over thirteen inches apart, and very near one, the heads of which were drawn into the false keel, which was of sound oak 12 by 44 inches, which was completely broken in two—the sword left an orifice of nearly three inches in diameter, was much shivered in passing through, and the extreme part broke off and lost.

Boston Schools.—By official returns recently made, Boston contains 10,236 pupils, of which 7044 are in public and 3292 in private schools. Number of schools 215—annual expense $152,722—of which individuals pay $97,305; and the city $55,417, exclusive of large sums annually expended in the erection and repairs of school-houses.

Connecticut School Fund.—The Report of the School Fund to the Legislature now in session, states that the Funds consist in Bonds, Stock, Lands and Cash. The principal of these is $1,719,434—The interest due is $116,288. The number of persons between 4 and 16 years old in Connecticut is about 85,000. There are 208 school societies, and 85 cents is the dividend for the schooling of each person. More than 6000 dollars of interest remains on hand.

The expedition with which passengers are conveyed, by steamboats and post-coaches, from one end of this continent to the other, is truly astonishing: A gentleman left New-York on the 22d April, and arrived in New Orleans, via Louisville, on the morning of the 8th of May, having been only fifteen days in performing the journey, a distance of 1500 miles. The U. States Mail is 28 days travelling the same distance.

Religious Intelligence.

DOMESTICK.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States met, agreeably to appointment, on the 18th of last month, in the First Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, and was opened with a sermon by the Moderator of the last year, the Rev. Dr. Stephen N. Rowan, of New York. The sessions of the Assembly were continued till the 1st instant, late in the evening. Much important business was transacted, as will appear in the minutes, which, as heretofore, we shall publish in detail, as fast as our space will permit. For the present month we give the narrative of the state of religion, and the report of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary.

During the sitting of the Assembly, the anniversary of the American Sunday School Union was celebrated in the First Presbyterian Church. The report which was read, and the speeches delivered on the occasion, were in a high degree interesting. We cannot give the details; but must express the high gratification which we feel, in common with our Christian brethren of various denominations, in perceiving the rapid increase, great extent, and most beneficial influence, of Sabbath school institutions and operations. We confidently believe that these institutions and operations are among the most efficient means, by which the happy period is to be introduced, when the knowledge and the love of God shall cover the earth as the waters do the seas—Missions, Bible societies, Tract societies, and Sabbath schools, seem to be the four great engines, by which, under the Divine influence and blessing, the beadw of the powers of darkness throughout the world are to be demolished, and the triumphs of Immanuel to be spread from the rising to the setting sun.

NARRATIVE ON THE STATE OF RELIGION.

The General Assembly having received reports on the state of religion from 70 Presbyteries, and from the Churches with which it holds correspondence, presents the following condensed abstract of intelligence, to the churches under its care.

Every year brings tidings of the enlargement of our territory, and the increase of our ecclesiastical family. God grant that as our cords lengthen, our stakes may be also strengthened, and the bonds of our union be drawn closer and closer. Harmony in doctrine and discipline generally prevails. Differences of a minor sort exist among us, which may occasionally prevent all that fellowship which exists among the spirits of the just made perfect; but we bless the Great Head of the church, that no department of his kingdom on earth, of so large an extent, appears to live in more harmony and brotherly love. Whatever variety of phraseology on doctrinal subjects, or discrepancy of views in government and discipline, may be found existing between individuals or sections of our church, we have yet reason to rejoice that the doctrines of the Bible, as echoed by our Confession of Faith, are substantially taught, and the letter as well as spirit of our ecclesiastical standards generally maintained.

In less than 40 years, through the blessing of the Most High we have increased from 1 to 16 synods, and from 6 to 86 Presbyteries—5 having been added to our number during the past year.

To enter into minute details, or even to glance at the intelligence received from every Presbytery, would extend this narrative to an unedifying length. A hasty sketch of the prominent features of the church in the respective synods must suffice.

Beginning at the South, in the Synod of South Carolina and Georgia, the state of religion appears on the whole to be favourable. Though a large portion of her territory is yet mournfully destitute of ministers, churches, and even of the Bible—though in 20 counties within the bounds of the Presbytery of Hopewell, only 2 ministers of our denomination can be found—though the Presbytery of South Carolina appeal to the General Assembly for missionary help, and call for 20 active and zealous ministers, to supply as many organized and waiting congregations—yet we rejoice that a special blessing has been poured out on the means already enjoyed. In the Presbytery of Charleston Union, several congregations have received a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Prayer meetings are multiplying, Sabbath schools are recommended in the Presbytery of Alabama, to all her churches; and what is especially interesting, the coloured population are receiving an increase of religious privileges, and the means used for their spiritual edification have been crowned with a visible blessing. Upwards of 30 auxiliary Bible Societies have been formed within the bounds of Hopewell Presbytery, during the last winter. The necessity of educating pious youth for the gospel ministry, is extensively felt; a plan of a Literary and Theological Seminary has been formed, and more than 30,000 dollars have already been subscribed to its funds.

From the Synod of North Carolina, nothing of very special interest has been communicated. We hear of good outward attention to the means of grace, but accompanied with much lukewarmness and conformity to the spirit and fashions of the world. That instruction in Bible classes and Sabbath schools is enjoyed extensively by the rising generation—that the walk of many Christians is uncommonly exemplary—that benevolent societies are receiving more liberal patronage than in former years—and that the standards of our church are stated to be steadfastly maintained, are matters of encouragement and consolation.

From the Synod of Virginia, we have heard mingled sounds of joy and lamentation. Three of their congregations have been specially revived, and in several other churches, an unusual attention to divine things has appeared. But on the whole, this part of the vineyard, so often refreshed, seems to languish. Fashionable amusements are seducing professors of religion, and contentions are creeping into some of the churches. No wonder these things should make the friends of Zion mourn! A dearth of spiritual instruction is one ground of their complaint; and measures are in active operation, by the support of the Theological Seminary at Hampden Sydney, to bring forward more labourers into the Lord's vineyard. 25,000 dollars, in addition to former benevolations, have been lately subscribed for the support of that Seminary; and more is now doing for the education of poor and pious youth than ever before.

The Bible Society and Domestic Mission. ary Society within the bounds of this Synod, are in a very flourishing state. Yet they mourn the absence of the Comforter; and blessed are they that mourn.

Mississippi is the only Presbytery out of 5, within the bounds of the Synod of Tennessee, from which the Assembly have been permitted to hear. From this Presbytery no revival of religion is reported. The land is a scene of spiritual desolation.

The inhabitants are rapidly increasing, and the ministers of our denomination are to the population as 12 to 250,000! Loud are the calls of our brethren for help. Shall they call in vain? The enemy is overrunning the land and fortifying himself against any future attack; and double the labour will soon be necessary to conquer and obtain possession, that would now be necessary to take and keep possession of this field. There is no time for delay. New Orleans favours the reception of the gospel. Large congregations assemble there on the Sabbath, and a church for mariners is in contemplation.

The Synod of Kentucky, includes that state, a large part of the state of Indiana, and half the state of Illinois. From this region also the reports are very defective. The cause of Christ, however, appears to be advancing. Truth is prevailing over error, and light is dispersing darkness. The scarcity of faithful preachers is greatly lamented; nearly half the churches being destitute of a stated ministry. Error has still an extensive prevalence, and Christians are not yet united as they ought to be, for the support and spread of the gospel. Great efforts, however, have of late been made for the education of their precious youth; and we rejoice to hear that after many struggles they have at last, at Danville in Kentucky, a literary seminary of their own. Revivals of religion have been witnessed in three congregations of Ebenezer Presbytery, in two of which 30 were added to the church.

From the Synod of Ohio no very good news have reached our ears. Complaints of coldness in professors, fondness for fashionable amusements, the increase of error, and general declension in religion, form the burden of their narrative. "Give us ministers," is the cry of many congregations, and is in fact the cry of all the western country.

The Synod of the Western Reserve reports no general revival of religion. Several congregations, it appears, however, have been specially visited from on high. The congregations in that section of country are generally weak, and though better supplied than many of our Western settlements, are yet deplorably destitute of a stated ministry. In 30 townships, within the Presbytery of Portage, there are only 20 churches, and 10 Presbyterian ministers, while there are many propagators of error. Strenuous efforts, however, are making by our brethren for the increase of the ministry and extension of the means of grace. In the midst of this wilderness we are happy to learn that our brethren live in peace and walk in the order of the gospel, that family worship is extensively observed, and Sabbath schools and Bible classes receive increasing attention.

The state of religion in the Synod of Pittsburgh is reported, as on the whole, improving. Many churches, however, have none to break them the bread of life, and "there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed." Six churches are stated to have been revived, to one of which were added 60 persons, to another 77. Other congregations are in a favorable state, but in the majority of their churches, great coldness and forgetfulness of their vows are charged upon the children of God. Vice in some places is on the increase. Good attention, in general, is paid to external means; the standards of our church are stated to be vigilantly maintained, and both ministers and people are active in support of missions, theological seminaries, and in other labours of love.

The loud calls for an increase, of ministers in the west, the distance from Princeton, and the inconvenience and expense of an attendance at that institution, have induced the assembly to take measures to establish a Theological Seminary west of the mountains. May the gracious smiles of the Great Head of the church attend these measures, and give the hearts and the prayers of those engaged in this great and important concern the desired success. Soon may it be prosperously founded, long may it flourish, and abundant be the blessings it shall receive and communicate. May this school of the prophets nourish many a young Elijah, Elijah, and Samuel, to oppose wickedness in high places. Every member of the church will grant to this contemplated Seminary an interest in his prayers.

Within the bounds of the Synod of Philadelphia, nothing of special importance has occurred. In a few instances the spirit of the Lord has been poured out, and considerable additions made to the church. In the Presbytery of Lehigh, the churches appear to be routing, after a long slumber, and an unusual blessing accompanies the means of grace; and throughout the other Presbyteries, a good attention to outward ordinances is remarked. But the special influence of the Holy Spirit seems to have been wid-
Religious Intelligence.

held from most of the churches in this Synod, during the past year. The mariner's church in Philadelphia, under the labours of the Rev. Joseph Eastburn, is in a flourishing condition.

In the Synod of New Jersey, the Spirit of the Lord, as in former years, has "come down as the rain upon the mown grass, and as showers that water the earth." In the Presbyteries of Elizabeth-town, Newark, and Saugeenhans, copious effusions of the Spirit have descended on no less than 17 congregations, while unusual ingatherings of souls have given joy to many others. The revival at Elizabeth-town, and in some other places, is still going forward with great power. Not less than 450 persons in Elizabeth-town alone, are said, by their attendance at the meetings for inquiry, to manifest an exciting concern for their salvation. In the Presbytery of Gloucester, much good has been accomplished with little expense. The Synod, though not particular excitement on the subject of religion exists, the state of morals is generally good.

In the Synod of New York, the Lord has been seen by his people, though in less stately and triumphant goings than in some of the synods which are yet to be named. Large additions have been made to some churches, and an unusual awakening exists in a few congregations; but the Synod have to regret that the revivals of former years have not been repeated.

But the brightest manifestation of redeeming power which we are permitted to record, has been made in the Synod of Albany. In the Presbyteries of Oswego, Ogdensburg, and particularly in the Presbytery of Oneida, has the glory of the Lord been revealed, to the joy of his friends and confusion of his foes. In the still and solemn voice, in the whirlwind, and in the earthquake, souls have been arrested, overwhelmed and shaken by this new creation; and the things, which might be shaken, have been overthrown, that the things which cannot be shaken might remain. In consequence of this display of Divine power, the theatre has been deserted, the tavern sanctified; blasphemy has been silenced, and infidelity confounded. The wise have become fools for Christ's sake, the mighty have been brought low, and the Lord exalted. Twenty-five congregations are reported as sharing more or less liberally these heavenly influences. Indeed, we are told, that not a town in the county of Oneida has been wholly passed by in this visitation of reviving love. In this heavenly work, slumbering professors have been roused; distracted churches have united in peace; Universalists, so far from hoping the salvation of all, have trembled for their own; Deists have forsaken their refuges of lies; Papists have sought absolution from the High Priest above, and little children have filled the temple with Hosannas to the Son of David. The work continues, and long may it continue, till all the dross of error and of sin shall be consumed in the purifying fire of the Holy Ghost.

The Spirit of the Lord has descended also, though in a less copious manner, within the Synod of Genesee, 10 of whose congregations have, during the past year, experienced his extraordinary operations on the heart. In the Presbytery of Genesee, 500 were the last year added to the church, and in the Presbytery of Bath, the churches have been increased by the addition of 200 more. This Synod, also, complains of a dearth of ministers in the southern parts of its bounds; but rejoices on the whole, that the chariot of the Lord is rolling forward.

It remains to notice the Synod of Genesee.

Such is the feeble state of the churches in the Presbytery of Niagara, that but one in all their bounds is able of itself to support the gospel. In the Presbytery of Genesee, there are appearances of revivals in two or three congregations; and in the Presbytery of Ontario, a special blessing has been poured out on one. In the Presbytery of Rochester, an example has been set of Christian activity, which all the church would do well to imitate. The Bible Society have provided 2700 Bibles and Testaments, and determined that every family in the county of Monroe, (which forms the bounds of that Presbytery,) shall possess a copy of the word of God. 6000 tracts, entitled "Thy every Mother in Monroe county," on the duty of praying for her children, have also been distributed. Every town in the county has a minister, either of the Presbyterian or Congregational order. In one of their congregations, a revival has lately added 40 to the church.

From various parts of the country, we have heard, as usual, the lamentations of our brethren, over the ruinous vices of profane swearing, intemperance, and Sabbath breaking. Particularly from the state of New York, have we heard complaints of the breach of the holy Sabbath, by travelling in stages and steam boats, and on the grand canal. And, what was especially grievous, it was stated, that this pernicious example had sometimes been set by ministers of the gospel. Against all these things, the Assembly would lift up its warning voice.

We have thus glanced at the history of the year, from which it evidently appears, that the Lord has not withdrawn from us the tokens of his favour, but is still waiting to be gracious. The whole number of congregations, reported as enjoying a revival of religion, since the last Assembly, is 81; while more than usual blessings appear to have descended upon many more.

Nurseries ever lie near a parent's heart. As such, our Theological Seminary lies near the heart of the Assembly. The Institution at Princeton, still enjoys the smiles of the Great Head of the Church. In her bosom have been nourished, during the past year, 118 of our candidates; about two-thirds of whom, have been, either wholly or in part, supported by the bounties of the church. Two new Scholarships have been endowed, making the whole number of Scholarships 16. Still, however, her treasury is comparatively empty; her wants increase faster than her supplies. When will the church, as a body, come up to her help! How long shall we “charge them that are rich, not to trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God; to do good, to be ready to communicate, and thus lay up a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.” From the seminaries of Auburn and Hampden Sydney, we rejoice to hear that their friends continue to increase, and that their influence is likely to be widely extended. Under the care of our Presbyteries, we have about 200 students, on whom are expended not far from 14,000 dollars. While, however, there is such a call for ministers, the efforts in the cause of education are far too limited.

We lament the apathy of our churches, in regard to Domestic Missions, and particularly the want of united and vigorous efforts to supply the waste places of the west and south: considerable has indeed been done to cultivate and sanctify those regions, but more, much more, must be attempted and accomplished, or millions of our countrymen will sit in darkness and their children grow up in ignorance and vice. There is a loud call from Heaven, for a union of hearts and of hands in this mighty work.

From the Associations, with which we as a body hold Christian correspondence, much has been received to gladden our hearts.

From the General Association of Connecticut, we learn, that more than 20 congregations within their bounds, have enjoyed, during the past year, or are enjoying at this time, an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Their churches are generally well supplied with pastors, and their Domestic Missionary Society still flourishes.

From the General Association of Massachusetts, we rejoice to learn, that there probably never was a period in the history of Maine and Massachusetts, in which the presence of God was more signally manifested to his churches. The cause of error is declining. In Williams' College, there is a powerful revival of religion; and in Amherst, according to latest information, there are hopeful appearances of a similar work. In the 10 colleges of New England, among 1400 students, 300 are hopefully pious, and 200 belonging to Massachusetts, are in different stages of preparation for the ministry. All their Benevolent Societies are in a prosperous condition, and 23 towns in Massachusetts, and 20 in Maine, are at this time under the influence of revivals, in which are already numbered, according to the report of the delegates, more than 1200 converts. The Seminary at Andover, is in a flourishing condition. Its number of students is 122.

From New Hampshire we learn, that there is a revival of religion in Dartmouth College, in which, about 50 of the students have become hopeful subjects of grace; and in 7 or 8 towns in that state, the people are enjoying a refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

In Vermont, during the year 1825, we are informed, there were outpourings of the Spirit upon 20 towns, in which about 900, in the estimation of Christian charity, were introduced into the kingdom of Christ. At this time, there is said to be a great work of grace in 30 or 32 towns, of that state, which is increasing rapidly. Unusual numbers of the young are subjects of this work. And we here remark it as a favourable sign of the times, that the grace of God, in nearly all the revivals which have been reported to the Assembly, have been received by the rising generation. The special blessing of God, has unquestionably rested on the means of instruction, used with the young in Bible classes and Sabbath schools. In more than one instance, when a revival of religion was reported, was it stated, that every member of a Bible class, who had attended regularly, became a hopeful subject of grace. And the unusual number of teachers and pupils in Sabbath schools, which has the last year been added to the church, seems to set the seal of heaven to these blessed institutions.

From the Reformed Dutch Church, and from the German Reformed Churches, communications were also received, from which it appeared, that with them, religion is evidently gaining ground. Their Theological Seminaries receive the liberal patronage of their churches.

As in former years, death has invaded our ranks, and removed some of our dear fathers and brethren from the imperfect service of this lower sanctuary, as we trust, to a higher, holier, and happier service in the heavens. Their names we have record, but we hope they have a better record in the book of life."

In conclusion; from all these details, dear brethren, let us learn a lesson of praise and gratitude to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that our Israel has lived another year before him; that in the midst of merited wrath, he has remembered mercy; and while Paul has planted and Apollos watered, has not left us without a goodly increase.

Let us go forward with cheerfulness and courage in our future work, seeing God is with us. His Spirit accompanies our labours, and difficulties shall vanish before us;—the mountains shall sink, the valleys shall rise, to prepare the way of the Lord, not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

And, finally, let us learn to be fervent and importunate in prayer, giving the Hearer of prayer no rest, until the sprinklings of grace on some part of our land, shall become one universal shower,—until the springs that now rise and waver some sections of our Zion, shall swell to rivers, yes, to seas, and the knowledge of the Lord spread over our land, as the waters cover the great deep. Amen.

Published by order of the General Assembly.

Ezra Stiles Elly, Stated Clerk.

* Comfort Williams, of the Presbytery of Rochester.
  James G. Crane, of the Presbytery of Niagara.
  Elbridge A. Wood, of the Presbytery of Albany.
  Joshua Spaulding, of the Presbytery of North-River.
  Joseph Rue, of the Presbytery of New Brunswick.
  Asa Dunham, of the Presbytery of Northumberland.
  Francis G. Ballentine, of the Presbytery of Philadelphia.
  Samuel Porter, of the Presbytery of Redstone.
  John B. Hoge, of the Presbytery of Hanover.
  John Lyale, of the Presbytery of Ebenzer.
  John Howe, of the Presbytery of Transylvania.
  Daniel Smith, of the Presbytery of Fayetteville.
  James Gilleland, of the Presbytery of Mississippi.
  William P. Watts, of the Presbytery of Concord.

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary present the following Report to the General Assembly.

At the date of the last report, the number of students in the Institution was one hundred and five.

During the summer session, eight new students were received, viz.
  Ezra D. Kinne, graduate of Middlebury College, Ver.
  John Nott, Union, N. Y.
  Hector Moffat, do.
  Erskine Mason, Dickinson, Penn.
  John K. Cunningham, Jefferson, Penn.
  William S. Plumer, Washington, Vir.
  David R. Preston, Transylvania University, Ken.
  James W. Moore, candidate of Pres. of Northumberland.
  During the winter session, thirty-five additional students were received, viz.
  Anson Hood, graduate of Middlebury College, Ver.
  Herman Hooker, do.
  Isaac N. Cande, Union, N. Y.
  Chauncey E. Goodrich, do.
  Aaron W. Lyon, do.
  Russel Whiting, do.
  James C. Magraw, do.
  John F. McLaren, do.
  William P. Alrichs, Nassau Hall, N. J.
  Peter J. Gulick, do.
  James D. Pickands, do.
  George A. Lyon, jun. Dickinson, Penn.
  John W. McGlough, do.
  William B. McLain, do.
  Moses Williamson, do.
  John G. Morris, (Luth. Ch.) do.
  James Campbell, Jefferson, Penn.
  John F. Cowan, do.
  William Coxe, do.
  John D. Hughes, do.
  Watson Hughes, do.
  David H. Riddle, do.
  John McClusky, do.
  William G. Campbell, Washington, Vir.
  Samuel M'Furren, do. do.
  William S. Potts, candidate of Presbytery of Philadelphia.
  John P. Robinson, Baltimore.
  Theodore S. Wright, (coloured man) Albany.
  William Hill, Newcastle.
  John Pope Trotter, West Lexington.
  James Hawthorn, Louisville.
Mr. Thomas W. Irwin, one of the students of the second class, departed this life in the month of February last.

The highest number of students in the Seminary at one time through the year, has been one hundred and eighteen. The number still remaining in connexion with it, is one hundred and fourteen.

At the close of the summer session, certificates that they had completed the whole course prescribed in the Plan, were given to the following six young men, viz. Lewis Bond, William Brearly, Edward N. Kirk, Samuel V. Marshall, Amos Savage, and McKnight Williamson.

The Board are constrained to repeat the regret, that they have frequently had occasion to express in former reports, that so few of the students continue in the Seminary the time prescribed in the Plan to complete the full course of study.

While on this subject the Board beg leave to lay before the Assembly the following extract, from the minutes of their late meeting at Princeton, viz.

"In the opinion of the Board, it would contribute to the future usefulness of the students, as well as to the reputation of the Seminary, if all could be induced to enter so as to begin at the commencement of the course of instruction, and continue their studies under the direction of the Professors for three years, that they might become entitled to certificates of approbation. They think also that the practice which has too frequently prevailed, of young men entering the Seminary, and then after spending not more than a year, or six, or three months, going away into the churches with the name of students of the Theological Seminary of Princeton, is very injurious to its reputation."

On this subject the Board have adopted the following resolutions:

"1. That the certificates of approbation awarded to students, who, after having remained three years, shall have sustained a satisfactory examination, be formally and publickly delivered to them, in the oratory, by the acting president of the Board, immediately after the address made at the close of the session.

"2. That the General Assembly be requested to renew their recommendation, that the pupils should avail themselves of the great advantage to be derived from attending upon a full course of theological instruction in this Seminary; and that the Assembly adopt any additional means, which to their wisdom may appear proper, to secure to the youth of the Seminary the benefit of attending on a full course of the instruction communicated in the Institution."

The semi-annual examinations of the students have been as heretofore entirely satisfactory to the Board.

On the subject of benefactions for the assistance of necessitous students, the Professors have reported the following sums, viz.

Female Benevolent Society of Lebanon, S. C. - $37.00
Female Society of Elizabeth Town, N. J. - 40.00
Anonymous for a student - 15.00
Benevolent friend for a particular student - 50.00
Female Society of Newtown, L. I. - 38.00
Female Benevolent Society of Morristown, N. J. - 23.31
Phoebean Society of Philadelphia - 41.00
Ladies' Society of Princeton, N. J. - 67.00
A student formerly aided by this fund - 20.00
Cong. of Louisville, Ky. by the Rev. Dr. Blackburn, for a particular student - 20.00
From three ladies of New York - 16.00
Presented by the Rev. Dr. Matthew Brown - 20.00
Female Society of Woodbridge, N. J. for a particular student, 25.00
Do. do. for another student 10.00
From a clergyman, paid him for supplying a pulpit - 10.00
From do. do. - 20.00
A widow's mite - 5.00
Female Society of Lexington, Ky. for a particular student, 50.00
Female Society of Allentown, N. J. - 6.30
Female Society of Scotch Town, Orange county, N. Y. - 10.00
Ladies at the Falls of St. Mary's outlet of Lake Superior - 15.00
Anonymous - 82.200.00
Female Society of Jamaica, L. I. - 27.00
Female Society of Cedar street Church, New York - 136.00
Paid by students, interest on Scholarships - 26.00
Female Benevolent Society of Deer Park, Orange county, N. Y. - 35.13
Female Cent Society of Florida, N. Y. - 21.00
Female Praying Society of the First Presb. Church, Albany, paid to a particular student by themselves - 85.00
Female Cent Society, First Presb. Church, Albany, paid to another student - 100.00

The Professors have also reported the receipt of the following articles for the use of the Seminary.
The Dorcas Society of the city of some ladies in Brooklyn, N. Y.
and 13 cravats.

A student leaving the Seminary,
bed, 2 pillows, and 1 quilt.

Another student, 1 feather bed, 2
pair of sheets, 1 comfortable, 1
r of blankets, and 1 pillow case.

Adies of Perth Amboy, N. J. 3 pair of pantaloons, and 1 coat.

W. B. 2 pair of sheets, 1 pair of bes, 1 pair of towels, and 1 table.

A lady in Princeton, 1 comfortacoverlet.

A student, 2 pair of sheets, 1 bed-
11 table.

A lady in Snowhill, Maryland, 4
ocks, 1 pair of pillow cases, and 1
wels.

An unknown source, 6 pair of cot-

Adies of Lyon's Farms, Elizabeth
. J. for the use of a particular bheets, 1 pair of pillow cases, 1
one pair of blankets.

Elizabeth Town, N. J. 10 cravats,
4 pillow cases, 1 handkerchief,
6 suspenders.

Lyon's Farms, Elizabeth Town,
quilt, pieced by William Scott and Robert Bond, aged six and ars each.

A lady of Lawrenceville, N. J. 1
ockings.

A friend in Allentown, N. J. 16
assimere.

Adies of Lawrenceville, N. J. 2

A student, 1 mattress, 1 pair of es, 1 pair of sheets, and 3 chair.
Adies in Hanover, Morris county,
etquilt, 1 comfortable, and 1
illow cases.

Ladies in Wilmington, Del. 10
and 6 cravats.*

This report was made to the As-
and published, the editor has uested to insert in his miscellany,
ing statement of donations made
inary within the last six months,
no information had been rey the Board of Directors or by ertary, when the Report was following articles were given to ological Seminary, at Princeton,

dies of Newtown and Salsbur-tions, Bucks County, Pennyl-ollen stockings; 3 shirts; 2
2 brass candlesticks; 2 towels;
2 pair pillow cases; 2 pillows;
-John McCutcheon.

ceived an addition of 76 volumes—24 of these volumes were presented by sundry persons; and the remaining 52 were purchased.

The Board have the pleasure to inform the Assembly, that since the meeting of the last Assembly, two new scholarshi-
s have been reported to the Board.

Mr. Othniel Smith, of Jamaica, Long land, who lately deceased, bequeathed
in his will the sum of $2500, to found a scholarship. The whole of this sum has already been paid to the Treasurer of the Trustee of the General Assembly. Mr.
Smith has in his will, vested the right of naming the student who may have the befit of his scholarship, in the Rev. Henry R. Weed of Albany, during his life, and after his decease, in the Professors of the Seminary.

Miss H. Smith of Carmel, near Natchez, Mississippi, lately deceased, has also left
in her will the sum of $5000, to endow a scholarship. This bequest the Board were informed will shortly be paid. The surviving relatives of Miss Smith request that the right of nominating the student, who may have the benefit of this endowment,
may be vested in the Presbytery of Mississippi.

The Board would further report, that they have received from the founders of the Augusta Female Scholarship, the fol-owing official communication.

"At a meeting of the founders of the Augusta Female Scholarship, held in the city of Augusta, (Georgia) on the 6th of March, 1826; the Rev. Samuel S. Davis, having resigned the right vested in him,
of nominating the beneficiaries of this fund—it was resolved, that this right be vested forever in the Professors of the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church at Princeton, (N. J.) subject however to the following restrictions, viz.:
That whenever a vacancy in this Scholarship is to be filled, the preference shall always be given to a candidate from the state of Georgia, if at the time there shall be applications from that state; and in the absence of such, then to a candidate from some other southern section of the church."

Signed by order of the Board.

Asa Hel Green, President.

John McDowell, Secretary.

Philadelphia, May 23, 1826.

The Professors of the Seminary are—

Rev. Archibald Alexander, D. D. Pro-
essor of Didactic and Polemic Theology.

Rev. Samuel Miller, D. D. Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Church Government.

Rev. Charles Hodge, Professor of Oriental and Biblical Literature.
Sixteen Scholarships have been founded, viz—

2. The Banger Scholarship, founded by Robert Lenox, Esq. of New York.
3. The Lenox Scholarship, founded by John Whitehead, Esq. of Burke County, Georgia.
4. The Charleston Female Scholarship, founded by the Congregational and Presbyterian Female Association of Charleston, S. C. for assisting in the education of pious youth for the Gospel Ministry.
5. The Scott Scholarship, founded by Mrs. Hannah Woodhull, of Brooklyn, New York.
6. The Augusta Female Scholarship, founded by the Ladies of Augusta, Georgia.
7. The Keighley Scholarship, founded by Mrs. Jane Keith, of Charleston, S. C.

The Officers of the Board of Directors are—

Aubert Green, D. D. President.
Jacob J. Janeway, D. D. 1st Vice Pres't.
Samuel Bayard, Esq. 2d Vice President.
John McDowell, D. D. Secretary.

The present Directors of the Seminary are—

The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of May last, viz.

Of Rev. Dr. John Chester, from Nathaniel Davis, Esq. Treasurer of Albany Presbytery, for the Contingent Fund $68.06
Of Mr. John McMullin, Sixth Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, for do. 15.00
Of Rev. Dr. Samuel Miller, from Rev. Joseph Sanford, the congregational collection in the First Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, Long Island, for do. 40.00
Of Rev. Reuben Post, from the First Presbyterian Church in Washington City, for do. 5.00
And from Cabin John, for do. 2.00
Of Rev. George Potts, from Mississippi Presbytery, for do. 5.00
Of Benjamin Strong, Esq. from Rev. Mr. Patton, collection in Central Church, New York, for do. 10.00
Of Mrs. Mary Green, treasurer of the Female Benevolent Association of Lawrenceville, N. J. per Rev. Isaac V. Brown, for do. 24.00
Of Rev. George Pomroy, from Cooper's Town, Otsego Presbytery, for do. 7.00
Of Rev. Henry R. Wilson, from Sunday School teachers in Piney Creek Church, for do. 5.00
Of Rev. Robert McCarter, from Canal Street Church, in New York, for do. 20.00
Of Rev. George Chandler, First Presbyterian Church in Kensington, Philadelphia Presbytery, for do. 4.00
Of Z. Lewis, Esq. a donation from a lady in New York, for do. 20.00
Of Rev. Wm. W. Phillips and Archibald Falconer, Esq. commissioners of the late Associate Reformed Synod, per Rev. Joseph McElroy, the balance of their account in full, for do. 30.00
Of Samuel Bayard, Esq. the collection in Princeton Church, for do. 18.80

Amount received for the Contingent Fund $254.15
Of Rev. Dr. John McDowell, collected in New York by Rev. Alexander McClelland, principal and interest for four years, for the Professorship which the Synods of New York and New Jersey have resolved to endow 347 20
Of Rev. George Stebbins, Hudson Presbytery, for do. 40 00
Of Rev. John Goldsmith, from the executors of Thomas Lawrence, Esq. deceased, late of Newtown, Long Island, his bequest in aid of do. 500 00
Of Rev. David Comfort, from Kingston Church, New Brunswick Presbytery, for do. 36 00
Of Rev. John Johnston, North River Presbytery, collected by Rev. Jacob Green, for do. 18 00
Of Rev. Charles Webster, per Elizalet Wickes, Esq. his annual donation to do. 10 00
Of Solomon Allen, Esq. his third instalment of $1000 each, in full of his subscription for the Professorship to be endowed by the Synod of Philadelphia 1000 00
Of Rev. Jos. Barr, per Rev. Wm. Ashmead, from Leacock Church, for do. 11 00
Of Alexander Henry, Esq. from the Rev. Dr. Thomas Henry, the balance due from the Female Education Society, of the Second Presbyterian Church, in Charleston, S. C. for their subscription of $250, to the endowment of the Southern Professorship 100 00
Of Rev. Colin Miller, per Mr. Anthony Finley, for do. 63 50 viz: from Philadelphia, Bethel, Lumber Bridge and St. Paul’s 18 50
Bibb, Barabanc, Aversawburg and Tirza 16 50
And from Pine Tree and Sandy Run 28 50
Of Rev. Reynolds Bascom, from Rev. Dr. Benjamin M. Palmer, of Charleston, S. C. from the estate of , for do. 200 00
Of Rev. Henry Reid, for do. 165 00 viz: in part of Rev. James Gamble’s subscription 135 00
In full of Rev. Hugh Dickson’s do. 23 00
And from Greenville Congregation 7 00
Of Rev. John Coular, Salem, Black River, S. C. for do. 55 00
Being a part of the second subscription taken by Rev. Samuel S. Davis, collected from the following persons, viz:
Thomas Rose, Esq. of Midway Congregation 320 00
John J. McFaddin, do. do. 5 00
George McCauley, of Brimpton 10 00
Isaac Bagual do. do. 5 00
James Montgomery do. do. 5 00
John M’Call do. do. 5 00
And Robert White do. do. 5 00
Of Elizalet Wickes, Esq. “a legacy left by Othniel Smith, Esq. late of Jamaica, L. I. deceased, to endow a Scholarship in the Theological Seminary at Princeton 2500 00
Of the Female Benevolent Society of Chester, N. J. per Rev. W. B. Barton, in part of Rev. Abm. Williamson’s subscription to the Eumenian Society’s Scholarship 12 25
And from Mr. Williamson 2 75 15 00
Of Rev. Andrew Todd, per Rev. Samuel Taylor, in full of his subscription for the same Scholarship 30 00
Of Rev. Samuel Taylor, “in part of his subscription for Senior Class 1824 Scholarship, conditionally in aid of the Oriental and Biblical Literature Professorship.” 50 00
Of Rev. William Nevins, in part of his subscription to the Senior Class 1819 Scholarship 50 00
Of Rev. John Knox, per Rev. Dr. A. Alexander, towards the principal and interest of his subscription to the Senior Class 1823 Scholarship 115 00
Of Rev. George S. Woodhull, per Rev. Isaac V. Brown, for Senior Class 1820 Scholarship 43 00
Of Rev. Benjamin B. Wisner, the principal of his subscription for do. 150 00
Of Rev. Amzi Babbit, in part of his do. for Senior Class Scholarship 1819 10 00
Of Z. Lewis, Esq. half a year’s allowance for the Le Roy and Banyer Scholarship 175 00
Of Benjamin Strong, Esq. treasurer of the Presbytery of New York, for aiding the education of students in the Theological Seminary at Princeton 55 88

Total $3594 13
EUROPE.

BRITAIN.—By an arrival at New York, London papers to the evening of the 27th of April have been received. Parliament was still in session, but was expected to adjourn in the latter part of May. The commercial distress throughout the kingdom continued, and in some places was extreme. It had been imputed by some, at least in part, to the removal of the former restrictions on trade. The ministers of the crown had denied the justness of this imputation, and refused to abandon any of those measures which have for their ultimate object, the entire freedom of trade; and in this determination they were borne out by large majorities in both houses of Parliament. The two great monopolies of corn and sugar had not yet been touched; but there were clamours against both. The friends to the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, were urging with great force the unreasonableness and injustice of taxing England for the production of sugar by slave labour, when it was manifestly the wish of the nation that slavery should no longer exist; and when, if the duties were removed from East India sugar, it might be sold cheaper than the sugar of the West Indies—It appears that the legislatures and local authorities of the British West Indies are likely to have certain measures proposed to them, for mitigating the condition of the slaves. If they will promptly make arrangements for carrying these measures into effect, they will have the privilege of doing it—if not, the mother country will coerce them—not, probably, by force of arms, but by repealing protecting duties, which will render their slaves and other property of very little value. It is not quite certain as yet, what will be the steps taken in this delicate business; but the voice of the nation was being too loudly to be long disregarded, for something to be done in which should be effectual and decisive. The Health of the British monarch is said to be restored.

FRANCE—has afforded no news of importance, during the last month. There seems some reason to believe, that measures are in train to suppress the reproachful slave trade, which French vessels have notoriously been carrying on of late on the coast of Africa. The minister of marine has also publicly stated, that France, so far from helping the Turks against the Greeks by sea, has in fact saved the lives of some thousands of Greeks, by allowing them to take refuge on board of French vessels, and then conveying them to a place of safety. The statements of the court party, and of the opposition to that party, in the French chambers, are directly contradictory in relation to this subject. What the truth is, we are unable to determine.

SPAIN.—It appears that some fresh disturbances have occurred in Spain. It is said that a conspiracy to revolutionize the government, which had its origin in secret societies, has recently been discovered; and that by the confessions of one of the conspirators, it was made known that there was in London a directing revolutionary committee, of which Mina was president.

PORTUGAL.—The regency appointed by the late king during his last illness, is said to be fully established, and that tranquillity prevails in the capital and throughout the kingdom. The British minister, in an audience had with the head of the regency, the Infanta Isabel Maria, gave assurance of the same support to her administration, which Britain had pledged to her deceased father. A large British squadron remained in the Tagus.

GREECE.—In the early part of last month, we had such particular and detailed accounts of the capture by the Turks of the fortress of Missolonghi, that we had not a doubt that this strong hold, which the Greeks had so long and so heroically defended, had at last fallen into the hands of their ferocious invaders; and we are not yet without serious fears that the accounts to which we have referred will prove true. They are, however, directly contradicted, by intelligence coming from different quarters, which seems to be of a later date than that which announced the taking of the fortress. On the 20th of April the Earl of Liverpool stated, in the British House of Lords, that he believed the report that Missolonghi had fallen was not true. In addition to this, it is said that the small fortress of Anatolico was taken by the Turks, at a date which corresponds with that at which Missolonghi was said to have fallen; and hence it is supposed that the capture of the former has been mistaken or substituted for that of the latter. It is also said that a Greek fleet of 60 sail arrived before Missolonghi on the 20th of March. A short time will disclose the truth; meanwhile all accounts agree that the Greeks were greatly pressed on all sides, so that without the interference of other powers in their behalf, their cause was supposed to be nearly desperate. Reports and rumours abound that some of the great European powers have actually interfered—that England, France, Prussia, and Russia have gone the Grand Signior to understand that he must desist from all attempts to subdue the Greeks—that Mr. Canning has entered into negotiations with the Divan—that Sir Frederick Adam, governor of the Ionian islands, has, in the name of England, proposed a truce of three months between the Greeks and Turks; and that on the refusal of this proposal by Ibrahim Pacha, he was informed that if necessary a compliance would be compelled. But we see nothing in the last accounts from Europe.
which authorizes a reliance on any of these statements; and yet we cannot but hope, from the prevalence of the opinion in England and France that the cruel warfare of the Turks was to be terminated by the interposition of the Christian powers, that something of this kind is in serious contemplation—But at present all is conjecture, except that the Greeks are in a most perilous situation. Our hope for them is in God. If he intends their deliverance, as we still think he does, he will, in his own best time and way, provide the means and the instruments for the execution of his purpose.

Turkey.—If we are to credit an article in the _Paris Constitutionnel_, the present reigning Sultan is one of the most blood-thirsty wretches that ever disgraced the form of a man; indeed he has heretofore given demonstrative evidence of this, by ordering the throats of 25,000 Christians to be cut at Chios. It is said that he has given positive orders to Ibrahim Pacha to allow no quarters to the inhabitants of Missolonghi—no matter what their age, or sex, or condition may be; that he has declared that there are 11,000 individuals shut up in that fortress, and that he has need of that number of heads. It is stated that 900 heads have lately been exposed on the gate of the Seraglio, and that of these 600 were the heads of women, and 30 of priests. If this monster has not so outraged all the rights of humanity as not only to warrant, but imperiously to demand, the interference of neighbouring nations, to put a stop to his barbarities, then is our knowledge of the law of nature and nations much more defective than we have hitherto supposed it to be.

Russia.—The coronation of the emperor Nicholas is to take place at Moscow on the 7th of July next, when his majesty will enter the 31st year of his age. All the great European powers will be represented by their ambassadors on the occasion. The duke of Devonshire, from Britain, and the duke of Ragusa, (Marmont) from France, are already on their way to Russia; and there is to be a rivalry of splendour between these two ambassadors. The expense of this rivalry—this empty pageant—would probably suffice to send Bibles and missionaries to half the unevangelized world!—It is said the emperor has armed with suspicion and alarm by the presentation of his minister to the representatives of the Russian church. On the 31st of March, he reviewed the regiments of guards, consisting of about 40,000 men. That was the anniversary of the day when the allied troops entered Paris; and on the preceding evening, according to the will of the late emperor, each of the soldiers who entered the French metropolis received a silver medal, with a portrait of the emperor Alexander. From present appearances, it would seem as if there was good reason to apprehend that the Russian army may ere long resemble the prussian guards in the decline of the Roman empire.

Asia.

Since the publication of our last number, information has been received in this country, direct from India, that the Burmese war had been terminated advantageously to the British. The conditions of peace to which the Burmese are said to have assented, are given with much particularity; but appear to be in general much like those which were more recently stipulated by Sir Archibald Campbell, and refused by the Burman emperor—namely, a large sum of money and the cession of a considerable territory. It appears that information relative to this pacification had not reached Britain at the date of the last intelligence from thence; yet there seems sufficient reason to believe it authentic.

Africa.

Recent accounts from the American colony at Liberia, represent it as in a very prosperous state. The colonists are in all respects doing well. Having become too formidable to be attacked by their uncivilized neighbours, they are now cultivating friendship with them; and doing something towards breaking up the detestable slave trade in the region which adjoins the colony. We earnestly hope that this colony will shortly receive, what it certainly merits, national patronage. We observe with pleasure, that the representatives of various religious denominations are promised commemorative of the anniversary of our nation's birth, the dispensation of liberal contributions will then be made to the funds of a society that with such commendable and persevering zeal has founded, and hitherto supported, this promising colony—destined, as we hope, to be a chief instrument in delivering our country from the curse of slavery, and of spreading the gospel of Christ our Saviour over one quarter of the earth.

America.

Colombia.—The late vice president of Colombia, General Santander has, to the regret of many, retired from office; and in an address to the people of Colombia he assigns as his principal reason—"the danger to liberty, resulting from the prolonged continuance in power of one, and that a military man." We know not whether this resignation of the vice president had, or had not, any connexion with a revolution which broke out at the town, or city of Valencia, about 16 miles S. W. of Caracas, on the 29th of April. The cause of this revolution is not fully known. That superseding in his com. mand of General Paez, a popular favourite, seems to have had a considerable influence in the unhappy occurrence—unhappy, we think, on a variety of accounts. Paez, it appears, was, on the 12th of May, declared by the Cabildo of Valencia, in conjunction with deputies from Caracas, Civil and Military Chief of Venezuela, until the return of General Bolivar. But few lives have as yet been lost—in consequence, as it would seem, of the revolution having met with no formidable opposition. A mission was to proceed without delay to General Bolivar, to request his immediate return. We hope his return will be the means of restoring peace and order; of the importance of which, new republics are usually not sufficiently sensible. We think it not improbable that some part of the coast of Colombia will receive a visit from the Spanish fleet now at the Havanna.

Panama.—The war between these states continues, but as yet without any thing very decisive on either side. On the 27th of February, Admiral Brown, the commander of the Patriot squadron, summoned the commander of Monte Video to surrender; and on his refusal, a cannonade was opened on the fort, and on the Brazilian fleet, for four hours. It appears that there was hard fighting on both sides. The Patriots claim to have had the advantage in the conflict; and arrangements were making, at the date of the last accounts, for a new attack, both by land and water. Don Pedro I has, it appears, returned to his capital.

Panama.—We know not why the Congress appointed to meet at this place, is so long delayed. Some representatives, it is said, arrived in the months of March and April last; and it is stated that both Britain and France have ambassadors on their way to this place. Yet the last accounts intimate that the Congress will not be formed till autumn. We believe that our own commissioners have not yet left their homes.

United States.—The Congress of the United States adjourned on Monday, the 22d of May—The adjournment, or close of the session, was unhappily much of a piece with the disorders that had preceded it. Saturday, it is stated, was the last day of the session, on which, according to an established rule, any bill could pass either house. Yet both houses sat till daylight, on the morning of the Sabbath; and notwithstanding this profanation of the day of sacred rest, and violation, as it would seem, of their own rule, the National Intelligencer states that more than sixty bills, which had passed the House of Representatives, and more than forty, which had passed the Senate, were "irretrievably lost," for the want of a little time to complete their passage. Nay, it is made a question whether a bill which actually received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, when a quorum of the members was not present to witness the signature, is not, by that circumstance, rendered null and void. We must leave our readers to make their own remarks on these doings of their own representatives, and to consult their own consciences, in regard to the voices which they will give at the next election of members of Congress.

It appears that the Indian delegation of the Creek nation, which ultimately assented to the new treaty relative to the cession of all their lands in the State of Georgia, is considered of a large sum of money to be paid by the United States, had agreed on a division of that money among themselves, and expected to receive it on the spot. The government, very properly we think, refused to accede to this arrangement; but ordered the larger part of the sum to be reserved, and disposed of agreeably to a decision to be made in a national council of the Indians, to be called as speedily as practicable.

For more than a month past, our country has been suffering by one of the severest droughts that it has ever experienced at this season of the year. Vegetation of every kind has languished, and the Indian corn, wheat and grass, have been greatly injured. In consequence of the drought, likewise, the most extensive and destructive fires have broken out, and raged through the forests of many parts of our country, destroying property to a very large amount. Within a few days past, there have been refreshing showers in some places; but the rain has not been general, nor sufficient, we believe, in any place, to supply the earth with the needed moisture. While thus the inhabitants of our highly favoured land are taught their absolute dependence on the God of Providence, it behoves us humbly to receive instruction and correction, to turn to Him that chastises us, and to beseech Him to turn his displeasure from us.

Errata in our last number.

Page 198, col. 1, line 12 from top, for warm read warmed.

205, 1, 9 bot. for 22d read 24th.

207, 1, 4 bot. for our very bodily frame, read our bodily frame itself.

208, 1, 4 bot. for redemption read adoption.

210, 1, 29 top, dele Heridas.

227, 2, 4 top, between the words and to, insert of such importance, so as to read and of such importance to, etc.

235, 1, 18 bot. for makes read made.
THE

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

JULY, 1826.

Religious Communications.

URES ON THE SHORTER CATECHISM OF THE WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES—ADDRESSED YOUTH.

LECTURE XXIII.

(Continued from p. 244.)

ere are now to consider more particularly, that our Lord, in his human nature, had "a true body and a reasonable soul."

ese words in the catechism, evelled against certain errors chiefly prevailed in remote parts of the church. "Marcion, Iles, Valentinus, and many heretics, denied Christ's humanity, as some have done since. that Christ had a true human body, and not a mere human shape, body that was not real flesh, very evident from the scriptures. He ate, drank, slept, worked, and was weary, roamed, bled and died on the earth. It is also as evident that he had our whole nature, soul as well as body. If he had not, he had not been capable of that amazement, and sorrow unto death, and all those other acts of knowledge, feeling, rejoicing, and the ascribed to him." In simple language there is no sin. Without the least stain of moral pollution, fore, our Lord might and did hold all the innocent infirmities and weaknesses of our nature—"He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."

You will now distinctly remark, that it was with this sinless human nature, that the eternal Son of God united himself; so as to constitute one person. This union commenced at the instant when the human soul and body of our Lord were joined together; so that the same moment in which the soul was united to the body, both soul and body subsisted in personal union with the Son of God. This is not mere theory or conjecture. It is taught in the declaration of the angel to the virgin mother of our blessed Lord, and it was written for our learning—"That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Christ Jesus, then, from his very birth, was the Son of God; that is, the divine was then perfectly united with the human nature, so as to make but one person. Hence it is that he is called "Immanuel, God with us"—God united with our nature.

Great care was taken by the ancient Christians, and it is also taken in our catechism, not to confound the two natures which met in Christ; and yet to assert with equal care, that they were one person. The Eutychians of old maintained, that the two natures were mixed and blended, so as to make but one nature. To guard against this, our catechism says—"two distinct na-

Buck's Theological Dictionary.

IV.—Ch. Adv.
lures." But, on the other hand, the Nestorians maintained, that each nature was a person, or that he had two persons. To preclude this error, our catechism says he had but "one person," and that this he will have "forever." He had it on earth; he has it in heaven; he will have it to eternity. He was, is, and will be, God and man, in two distinct natures, and one person.

It is worthy of your careful observation and remembrance, that as there is but one person, although two natures, any act proper to either nature, may be attributed to the whole person. This affords an easy and natural explanation of that remarkable passage in the Acts—"Feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." In this text there is attributed to the divine nature of Christ, what, in strictness, belonged only to his human nature; but as both natures were in one person, the blood of Christ is expressly called the blood of God—A text, by the way, which those who deny the divinity of Christ, can never explain or plausibly colour. Remember then, my dear children, that all that Christ did, or suffered, or continues to do as Mediator, must be considered as the personal acts of a being who was God and man united in one person; and that from this they derive their value and efficacy.

The way is now prepared for closing the doctrinal discussion of the answers before us, by stating, as was promised in the foregoing part of this lecture, the necessity which existed, for this union of the divine with the human nature, so as to make but one person, in Christ Jesus our blessed Lord. Here I shall be again indebted to the author already quoted,* and yet shall not confine myself to his ideas and language.

* Buck in his Theol. Dict.

It was necessary that the Mediator should be man, 1. That he might be related to those in behalf of whom he was to fulfil the offices of Mediator and Redeemer; that he might be our "kinsman," and we as it were be rendered one with him—"members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones."—2. That reconciliation might be made for sin in the same nature which had sinned. "For as much then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself, likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil."—3. It was proper that the Mediator should be capable of obeying the law of God broken by the sin of man; and a person exclusively divine could not be subject to a law made for man, and yield obedience to it only—"God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—4. It was necessary that the Mediator should be man that he might both suffer and die; for as God he could neither suffer nor die; and "without shedding of blood there was no remission."—5. It was fit that the Mediator should be man, that he might be qualified to sympathize with his people, under all their distresses, temptations and trials—"For we have not a high priest who cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities; but was in all points like as we are, yet without sin—For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted."—6. It was indispensable that he should be a perfectly holy and righteous man, free from all sin, original and actual; that being in no respect a transgressor himself, he might be qualified and prepared to "offer himself without spot to God," take away the sins of those in whose behalf he made himself "a sin-offering," and be wards an advocate for them the Father—"For such a priest became us, who is holy, ess, undefiled, separate from rs, and made higher than the ns; who needeth not daily, ose high priests, to offer up ice, first for his own sins, and for the people; for this he nce when he offered up him-ll, it was not enough for the ator to be merely a man, al- h perfectly innocent and holy behaved him to be more than y; yet to be the very "God with -For 1. No mere man could, such a footing as was proper the case required, enter into ant with God, and mediate en him and sinful man. For a being of a higher order than was essentially requisite; a who should be duly qual to go between both parties— ding man and his offended ator; "a day's-man betwixt us, might lay his hand upon us. —Now a Mediator is not a ator of one, but God is one."— was requisite that he should be that the divine might support human nature, under the infi-load of wrath and suffering he had to sustain, when he in the sinner's place; and his divine nature might also an infinite value and efficacy at was to be done and endured a human nature; and thus, "he who knew no sin, being sin for us, we might be made righteousness of God in him."— was necessary for the Mediator to be God, because, in the eco man's redemption, all di-gits and graces were to be ured up in him, and by him, hgh the agency of the Holy t, to be dispensed to his peo- of whom he was to be the ector, ever present friend, final e, and prevalent intercessor; with reference to whom, he order all things in the world both of nature and of grace—"Lo," said he, "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world"— "For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily—The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory—hath set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places; far above all principality and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world but in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him. that filleth all in-all—And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. The Father judgeth no man, but hath given all judgment to the Son—We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

Thus have I shown you briefly, in a detail of particulars, each supported by a quotation from the unerring oracles, that it behoved the Lord Jesus Christ, as the Mediator of the new covenant, to be both God and man—Being thus God-man, he is, in every view, a perfect Mediator. Were he God and not man, we could not approach him but with fear and dread—Nay, we could not approach him at all; for "God is a consuming fire" to the wicked. And were he man and not God, neither his obedience nor sufferings could be of any avail to recommend us to God; and we should be guilty of idolatry, if we either worshipped Him, or put our whole trust in him. But being what he is, he is exactly suited to all our wants. In the person of Jesus Christ, the object of our trust is, so to speak, brought near to ourselves. Those well known tender affections which belong to human nature, and which are only in the way of illustration ascribed to the Deity, are in our great Mediator literally realized. Hence it appears that the plan of salvation by him, is the most suitable to human beings that can possibly be conceived. And on the part of God it is not less suitable—By the obedience unto death of his only begotten and well beloved Son, the honours of his law have been completely restored, and all its demands most fully satisfied; so that he can now be just and the justifier of every one that believeth in Jesus; and so also that his glory is not only in all respects secured, but is displayed and made to shine, more illustriously than in all his other works. In a word, here it is that the declaration is verified—"Mercy and truth have met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

Having now seen the perfect mediatorial character of Christ, it only remains to make an additional remark on a clause in one of the answers we consider, which has already been noticed in another view.

Observe then, that when it is said that the Lord Jesus Christ is, "the only Redeemer of God's elect"—the words may be considered as expressing the same idea that is contained in the declaration of the Apostle Paul, where he says—"There is one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus." As there is but "one Mediator" between God and man, you will readily perceive that any attempt to divide his mediatorial functions, and to give a part to saints or angels, as is constantly done in the Romish church, derogates from our blessed Saviour's honour and office; and justly subjects those who do it to the charge of impiety and idolatry. It is also to be remarked, that Christ Jesus mediates only "between God and man." The fallen angels have no Mediator. They are left in a state of hopeless perdition—without a Saviour, and without the possibility of acceptance with God.

The result of all is, that through Jesus Christ, as God-man, Mediator, we have free access to the mercy seat of Jehovah. We have an atoning sacrifice, a powerful and prevalent intercessor, and God is reconcilable to us. Every hindrance is taken out of the way; he can honourably receive us; and the very chief of sinners is welcome and invited to return to the Father of mercies. His own people too, may, at all times, approach him with a holy boldness, and lay all their wants and desires before him, assured of a gracious audience and acceptance, through the intervention of their covenant and kinsman Redeemer.

Meditate, my young friends, on the doctrinal discussion of the important answers of our catechism, to which your attention has now been drawn—Meditate on what you have heard, not merely as a matter of speculation; but in the way of humble faith and devotion. In the former way, the meditation will do you little good; in the latter, it will be replete with the richest benefits—it will be found full of sweetness and comfort. Think

1. Of the wonderful nature of the facts to which these answers direct you. In speaking on the subjects of these answers, a pious writer asks—"What is the greatest wonder that the world ever saw? Answer—the incarnation of the Son of God: 'The Word was made flesh and dwelt amongst us'—Two natures infinitely distant are united in one person. Astonishing, glorious, mysterious fact! Well might the inspired apostle in contemplating it exclaim—Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.'"

2. Think on the honour put upon our nature by Christ, and on the hopes which it inspires. "The ete-
Lectures on the Shorter Catechism.

and bright, the evidence of this vital union, by the exercise of a lively faith, producing in them all the fruits of holy living; and then they will be entitled to rejoice with "a joy which is exceeding great and full of glory"—a joy which will in a measure antedate heaven while they dwell on earth; and which shall, ere long, be consummated in the unutterable and inconceivable bliss of which they will partake, when they shall see their Saviour face to face, in the mansions which he has gone to prepare for them.

3. The wonderful preparation and provision which is made for the salvation of men, by the mediatorial character and work of Christ, should urge all those to whom this "great salvation" is made known, to seek it with the utmost earnestness and perseverance. How will any of you escape, my dear youth, if you neglect it? I know that, in regard to many of you, the character of the Saviour, and what he did and endured for your salvation, and the infinite importance of your obtaining a personal and saving interest in Him and his glorious work, were lessons taught to you, and inculcated on you, by your pious parents and friends, from the very time that your minds were capable of understanding these interesting topics. You have often, very often since, heard them proclaimed, and enforced in the preaching of the gospel. This evening you have been hearing of them again—And are there any of you, who, amidst all these unspeakable privileges and advantages, have, to this hour, remained unprofited by the Saviour's mediatorial work? Ah! recollect, I beseech you, the high and awful responsibility which rests upon you. If you are not raised to heaven by a saving knowledge of Christ, the intellectual knowledge you possess, will sink you to the lowest hell. This tremendous truth it is my affecting duty to declare to you plainly: and I do it in hope, that under the divine blessing, it may urge you to speed your flight to the Saviour, before the door of mercy shall be forever closed. Avail yourselves, then, while yet you may, of the gracious promise held forth to the young, in the Scriptures of truth—"they that seek me early shall find me." Amen.

ON THE ATONEMENT.

No. V.

Dear Brother,—The doctrines of the two schools in relation to the atonement, have now been compared in three particulars. It has been shown, I trust, that in regard to its extent, in regard to a free and unfettered preaching of the gospel, and in regard to the riches of Divine grace displayed in our salvation, the views of the new school have no superiority over those of the old; and that the latter present the riches of Divine grace in by far the strongest light.

Let us now proceed to institute a contrast between these conflicting views, in several other particulars; in which, I think, it will clearly appear that ours have a most decided advantage.

1. Let us compare the nature of the atonement as explained and advocated by the two schools respectively, and see whose views and representations accord best with scriptural truth. The nature of the atonement is not a subject on which human philosophy should speculate. It is matter of pure revelation; and nothing farther can be known of it than God has been pleased to reveal. The Bible is our teacher; and those views which accord with the instructions of inspired writers must be true, while those which disagree or depart from them must be false.

The advocates of the indefinite scheme, differ in their views of the nature of the atonement. Some say, it consists in making a display of the evil of sin, and an exhibition of Divine justice. Others represent it as consisting in a satisfaction to publick justice for sin in general; but they deny that a proper, real satisfaction for the sins of believers was made to Divine justice, so that they can, on legal principles, be set free from the curse of the law. They admit that Christ's sufferings are a substitute for our punishment; but they deny that He was the substitute of his people, and that, charged with their sins, he endured the penalty of the law, and thus made a real satisfaction for them, and paid a real price for their redemption. They all speak of the atonement as merely opening the door, and removing the obstacle in the way of the exercise of mercy. Let me cite a few quotations from a recent publication—"The atonement consists, not in cancelling the demands of the law for one or all men, but in opening the door of hope, in rendering the pardon of sinners consistent with the character, law and universe of God."* Again: "This atonement merely opened the door of mercy; it prepared the way for the offer and the exercise of pardon."† Again: "The atonement does not of itself save a single soul. It barely opens the door for the accomplishment of this object by free and sovereign grace."‡

Now, these views are, in my opinion, repugnant to plain and decided testimonies of holy scripture, and tend to destroy the very nature of the atonement.

The sacred writers speak of the death and righteousness of Christ, in more exalted terms than our brethren bestow on them. They teach us to attribute to his divine sacrifice, much more than the bare honour of opening a door of hope and mercy to sinners. They tell us that the Saviour, by his sufferings, became the "author of eternal re
On the Atonement.

v. 9. They tell us that on round of his sacrifice and in-sion, Christ "is able to save the uttermost them that come to God by him." Heb. vii. 24—They assure us that his blood eth from all sin; and that it is the "conscience from dead to serve the living God." It has been shown, in a former, that forgiveness, reconciliation, justification, sanctification, and eternal life, are all atted to the sacrifice and rightness of our divine Redeemer, their meritorious and procuring; and consequently that grace reigns in our salvation, reigns through righteousness eternal life. We therefore see no dishonouring to the invalutation of our Lord Jesus Christ, which the holy scripture renits as being the spring of blessing of salvation, to speak is merely opening a door of and mercy. The Bible speaks of sacrifice in sublimer strains of love—"Unto him that loved us, washed us from our sins in his blood, and hath made us and priests unto God and his people; unto him be glory and dominion for ever and ever—Amen." Rev. v. 9, 10.

The atonement consisted, as the brethren affirm, in a display of the evil of sin and of Divine justice; a法兰西 might reasonably be expect that the inspired writers would have stated the fact. But in what 9 is it stated? Frequently, and the death of Christ is called upation or purging away of a propitiation, a ransom, a reconciliation; but no where only denominate it a display of evil of sin and of Divine justice. That there was such a display, and that in the highest degree, is readily admitted. This, however, we are not expressly taught; we are left to infer it from the mysterious transaction on the cross, viewed in connexion with its causes and its effects. In no passage of scripture that I can recollect, is the death of Christ spoken of as exhibiting the evil of sin and the justice of God. I am not ignorant that our opponents will immediately refer to a passage in Rom. iii. 25, 26, as furnishing a proof that we are taught to regard the Redeemer's death as an illustrious display of Divine justice. But, I apprehend, the righteousness there mentioned means, not an attribute of the Godhead, but that glorious righteousness of Christ, of which the sacred writer had spoken in the preceding verses; and of which he treats throughout this epistle, as the ground of a sinner's justification; and through the medium of which Jehovah can, consistently with his own glory, bestow salvation on every one who believes in Christ, and thus appear a just God, while he assumes the character of a Saviour.

Now, this profound silence of scripture on the point, furnishes conclusive proof that the atonement does not consist in a display of the evil of sin and of Divine justice. The fact is, this display is the result of the atonement, and not the atonement itself; just as the glorious sight or appearances which our eyes behold, when the sun pours his beams upon heaven and earth, are the effect of his light, and not the light itself.

Besides, if a display of the evil of sin and of Divine justice were all that was required to constitute an atonement, it might be asked, where was the necessity for the sufferings of the great Immanuel? Has not such a display been made in the sufferings and death both of rational and of irrational creatures? Is not such a display made, and will it not be eternally made, in the torments of the damned? Was all this insufficient? Was a more awful spectacle required, a sacrifice of greater value, in order to produce a stronger impression on the minds of the intelligent universe? Should this be admitted, it would furnish no reason why the sufferings of the present and the future world should not be regarded as forming constituent parts of the atonement. But how opposite would this be to the language of holy scripture, which every where attributes the great work of propitiating an offended Sovereign to Christ alone, exclusive of the agency of any creature either in heaven or on earth!

In a subsequent letter it will be shown, that, on the principles adopted by our opponents, there is really no display of the evil of sin and of Divine justice. I now proceed to explain and vindicate the views which the advocates of a definite atonement entertain of its nature.

They believe that Jesus Christ, in accomplishing the salvation of his people, acted as their legal substitute; that he was charged with their sins; that he bare the penalty of the law, or endured the punishment due to them; and thus made a complete satisfaction for their guilt to Divine justice, and paid the price of their redemption. Such are their views of this mysterious transaction, exhibited in the life and death of the Son of God. If these views can be shown to be scriptural, then it will follow, as a necessary consequence, that the opposite views of our brethren must be unscriptural. Let us examine the subject carefully.

1. Christ acted as the substitute of his people.

Substitution is evidently conveyed in the meaning of the preposition ἐπί, for, when it is applied to the death of Christ. That this is its import in Rom. v. 6—8, can hardly be denied. When Paul says, "Scarcely for a righteous man would one die, yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die," he clearly means dying in the room and stead of a good man, in order to save his life; and consequently when he speaks of the superior love of Christ, in dying for us, he must mean his dying, as our substitute, in our room and stead. "Raphaelius" (Not. ex Xen. in v. 8.) says Doddridge, "has abundantly demonstrated, that ἐπὶ ἡμῖν ἀνέστη signifies, he died in our room and stead; nor can I find, that ἐπί οἴκου, ἐπὶ τειχίον has ever any other signification than that of rescuing the life of another at the expense of our own; and the very next verse shows, independent of any other authority, how evidently it bears that sense here; as one can hardly imagine any one would die for a good man, unless it were to redeem his life by giving up his own."

The Redeemer is expressly called a surety; that is, one who stands engaged to become the substitute of another, to fulfil his obligations, and pay his debts. "By so much," says the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, "was Jesus made a surety of a better testament." Ch. 7. xxii. With this writer accords Peter, in exhibiting the Saviour as a substitute for sinners: "For Christ," says he, "hath suffered for sins; the just for the unjust" —the just person in the room and stead of unjust persons, "that he might bring us to God." The Redeemer himself teaches the same doctrine; for he tells us, "The Son of man came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Now in these texts we are taught, not merely that the sufferings of Christ come in place of our sufferings, but that He took our place, and endured the punish-that we should have endured, aid down his life to save our

is no new doctrine in the sh of Christ. By the institu-of Moses, the Jews had be-familiar with the idea of sub-

Through a long course yes they had seen, by Divine entment, an animal substituted e place of a human offender, he life of the animal destroyed re his life. And why this ap-ment of heaven? Could the of a dumb animal save a ram-creature from deserved ven-

e? "It was not possible," the apostle, "that the blood

ls and goats should take away" Heb. x. 4. Why then did ar at Jerusalem continuall with blood? Doubtless to Him who was the LAMB

from the foundation of the ; the LAMB of God that tak-

way the sin of the world; to r "the offering of the body of

once for all?" that "one of

;" by which "he hath perfect-

ever them that were sancti-

Animal sacrifices did in what Christ did in reality were typical substitutes; he real true substitute. "Christ

assover is sacrificed (νασοῦ) for

1 Cor. v. 7. The blood of and of goats sanctified to the ring of the flesh; but the blood

briest purges the conscience
dead works to serve the living

He offered up himself, his

d not daily, as those high

s, to offer up sacrifice, first for

ins, and then for the peo-

for this he did once, when ered up Himself." Heb. vii.

He himself was our substitute. being the surety and substitute ; people, the Redeemer was

ed with their sins.

ey were imputed to him, and came responsible for the satis-

demanded by Divine jus-

"It is for ever impossible,

JV.—Ch. Adv.

in the very nature of things," says a sermon writer, "that Christ should be liable to suffer that punishmet which the law denounced against the transgressor."* And again: "But this idea involves a literal transfer of character. On this scheme Christ, and not man, is the sinner. But Christ and man cannot exchange characters, because sin and holiness are personal, and cannot be transferred from one moral being to another. The sinful or holy acts of one person, may, in a thousand ways, affect another —exert an influence upon his hap-

iness or misery—but it can never be so transferred as to become his sinful or holy act." Such are the assertions of a writer, who a little before had said, "We do by no means intend to deny the doctrines of substitution and imputation:" of consequence, we are to understand him as affirming that the advocates of a definite atonement teach, by their doctrine of the imputation of sins to Christ, that there is such a transfer of moral character in this divine transaction, that it is no longer true that the sins which were actually committed by the sinner were actually committed by him; but were actually committed by Christ, who actually did not commit them.

That they do not teach an absurdity so extravagant, need not be told to any acquainted with their writings. Nor does it follow as a fair and legitimate consequence of their doctrine. In that admirable Epistle of Paul to Philemon in favour of Onesimus, he says—"If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee

ought, put that to mine account,"

(τούτο ἐμὴ ἐλλογι) charge this to me, impute this to me. "I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it." Now here the apostle offers to become responsible for any debt that Onesimus might owe to his master, and vequests Philemon to impute, or reckon on the debts to him, and look to him for the payment. But according to the writer to whom we refer, this transaction was impossible; because it would involve such a transfer of character, that Paul would become the original contractor of the debt and not Onesimus. A benevolent man sees a poor debtor forced along the street by an officer of justice to prison; he is touched with compassion; he goes to the unfeeling creditor, and says to him, I will be surety for your debtor; charge the debt to me; I will pay it. But he is met by the writer, who rises up and says—"The thing is impossible. Such a transaction would imply that you, and not the debtor, had contracted the debt. His act is personal, and it cannot become your personal act."

Now, from the imputation of Onesimus' debts to Paul, and the reckoning of a debt contracted by another man to his surety, these absurd consequences follow, with just as much certainty as they do from the imputation of sin to Christ, as we hold the doctrine; that is, with none at all. Who does not see that, in the case of Paul, when Onesimus' debt was charged to him, it still remained true that the debt was originally contracted by Onesimus, and not by Paul? And who does not see, in relation to a surety, that, after a man has become responsible for the payment of another person's debt, it still remains true that the debt was originally contracted by this person, and not by his generous friend? Why then should any intelligent individual impute such absurdities to our doctrine? or how is it that the minds of some are so blinded by prejudice, that they cannot understand a divine transaction, which can be so aptly illustrated by familiar and daily occurring examples in human affairs? When we say that our sins were charged to Christ, our brethren certainly ought to know we do not mean that our sins were taken from us, and infused into Christ, so that we became innocent and Christ actually the sinner: and I may add, our statements are so far from implying any thing of the kind, that it seems difficult to account for such erroneous conceptions, unless we attribute them to a wish to substitute misrepresentation for argument. By the charging of our sins to the Redeemer, we simply mean, they were so imputed, or reckoned to him, that he became responsible to Divine justice for their penal consequences. Our opponents may affirm this to be impossible; but, if we search the scriptures, we shall find, that, in the judgment of inspired writers, it was not only possible, but a glorious fact.*

This important truth was exhibited in the sacrifices under the ancient economy. Having brought the animal to the appointed place, the worshipper was required to put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering. The victim being then slain, the blood was sprinkled round about upon the altar. Lev. i. 3—5. The imposition of the offerer's hand, it is believed, was generally accompanied with a confession of his sins: at least the act denoted his wish to have his guilt imputed to the animal, that, being slain in his place, he might escape deserved punishment. Certain it is, that, on the great day of atonement, the imposition of the high priest's hands was accompanied with a confession of the sins of the people; and the whole transaction exhibited, in the clearest manner, the imputation of sin to the animal. "And Aaron shall lay both his hands on the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him

* See Outram on Sacrifices.
by the hand of a fit man into wilderness: and the goat shall upon him all their iniquities a land not inhabited: and he let go the goat into the wil-ness." 1 Lev. xvi. 21, 22.
is not denied by the advocates indefinite atonement, that these were designed to prefigure Redeemer and his work. This plainly taught in scripture. Christ our passover is sacrificed s." 1 Cor. v. 7. “Christ hath us, and given himself for us, offering and a sacrifice to God, a sweet smelling savour,” es. v. 2. In the epistle to the rews, the inspired writer teachthat the tabernacle or temple a figure, and that the law and sacrifices were shadows of good to come. chap. ix. 9, x. 1. also assures us of the superior acacy of the Redeemer’s offering, the efficacy of the Levitical of-gs: “For if,” says he, “the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, stith to the purifying of the;
how much more shall the l of Christ, who, through the al Spirit, offered himself without to God, purge your con-ence from dead works to serve ing God?” chap. ix. 13, 14. ow, the type being the shadow, the antitype the substance, what prefigured by the byer must and in the latter. It will fol-then, that as the victims under aw stood figuratively charged the sins of those for whom were offered, so the great victo whom they all pointed, stood y charged with the sins of all whom he was offered.
ith this fact the language of New Testament plainly and accords. "He," says Paul, uth made him to be sin for us, knew no sin, that we might be e the righteousness of God in " 2 Cor. v. 21. Made him to sin — A figurative expression, our brethren; and we reply, doubtless it is a figurative expression. Christ was not literally made sin: for sin is an act or quality of a rational creature; and no person can be so absurd as to believe Christ was converted into sin, any more than to believe the paschal lamb was converted into the angel’s act of passing over the houses of the Israelites, because it was called the passover. But what is the meaning of the expression? Does the apostle intend to teach us that Christ was stained with sin? Certainly not; for he bears his testimony that “he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sin-ers.” What then is his meaning? The phrase was well chosen and selected, to convey a very important truth. There is a manifest antithesis between the two parts of the text; and it is reasonable to conclude that just as we are made the righteousness of God in Christ, so he was made sin for us. As we are made the righteousness of God in Christ by the imputation of the Redeemer’s righteousness—according to the explanation of the author of the text, in other parts of his writings, when speaking on the subject, (Rom. iii. 22.) “Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all that believe;” and again (ch. iv. 6), “Even as David describeth the blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works”—so Christ was made sin for us, by having our sins imputed to him, that he might justly bear the punishment of them.

But suppose we adopt the construction put on the phrase by some able commentators, that Christ was made a sin-offering, because sin-offerings under the law were called sin: yet the result will be the same. For a question arises, Why were sin-offerings denominated sin? There certainly was a good and sufficient reason for this denomination, or the Old Testament writers would not have given it to the legal offerings: and no other reason can be assigned than the fact, that sin was imputed to the victim, and the victim was slain in place of the offerer, whose iniquities it bore. In like manner our Redeemer became a sin-offering, by having the sins of his people imputed to him, and dying as their substitute. Peter was crucified; Paul was beheaded; thousands of martyrs shed their blood; and all suffered in consequence of sin; but neither Peter, nor Paul, nor any martyr ever became a sin-offering; nor is it ever in scripture said of any mere man that he was made sin for us. And the reason is that, although the prophets, and apostles, and martyrs suffered much, and in consequence of sin, yet none but Christ was ever charged with our sins, and died as our substitute, to make expiation for them.

In entire harmony with Paul, Peter inculcates the same important truth: “Who his own self bare our sins, in his own body on the tree, that we being dead unto sin, might live unto righteousness.”

1 Pet. ii. 24. Bare our sins. How? Sins were not a tangible mass that could be taken from us as a burden, and placed on the Saviour. Nor could they be infused into him, so as to render him inherently polluted by them. In what way then could he bear them? In no other than by having them imputed, charged to him, so as to be made responsible for their penal consequences. Or will any prefer saying the Redeemer bore the punishment of our sins? That this idea is included in the apostle’s meaning we shall readily admit: but, if he bore the punishment of our sins, it will follow, that they were previously charged to his account; because this imputation was necessary to render him responsible for them, and make it just to inflict on him the punishment due to them.

“Abigail, when mediating between David and Nabal, when the former was provoked to wrath against the latter, and had determined to destroy him, (1 Sam. xxv. 24.) fell at David’s feet and said, ‘Upon me let this iniquity be, and let thy handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thy audience, and hear the voice of thy handmaid.’ And in verse 28 she calls Nabal’s iniquity her iniquity. By this it appears, that a mediator putting himself in the stead of the offender, so that the offended party should impute the offence to him, and look on the mediator as having taken it upon him, and looking on him as the debtor for what satisfaction should be required and expected, was, in those days, no strange notion, or considered as a thing in itself absurd and inconsistent with men’s natural notion of things.” President Edwards, vol. viii. p. 515.

Again, observes this profound theologian in the same page: “The word translated here in Isaiah liii. 4 and 12, is שׂדָר: the same word and the same phrase of bearing sin and bearing iniquity, is often used concerning things which are the types of Christ’s priesthood and sacrifice, viz. the Levitical priests and sacrifices. It was no uncommon phrase, but usual, and well understood among the Jews; and we find it very often used in other cases and applied to others besides either Christ or the types of him. And when it is so, it is plain, that the general meaning of the phrase is lying under the guilt of sin, having it imputed and charged upon the person, as obnoxious to the punishment of it, or obliged to answer and make satisfaction for it; or liable to the calamities and miseries to which it exposes. In such a manner it seems always to be used, unless in some few places it signifies to take away sin by forgiveness.”

In my next I shall proceed to Causes which retard the Progress of the Christian, &c.

that Christ bore the penalty of the law, or endured the punishment due to our sins.

Affectionately yours.

the London Congregational Magazine for August, 1825.

ES WHICH RETARD THE PROGRESS OF THE CHRISTIAN IN HIS COURSE.

Then a man has entered the right gate, and the narrow way which leadeth unto life, and the difficulties have been surmounted; he is too apt to calculate upon a smooth and unobstructed path. It is a mistake, which it is of importance to remove. Not we should give a gloomy and desponding view of personal piety, it is the only spring of genuine peace and happiness; but from the point of man and of the world, obstacles and hindrances must be expected, through the whole course he has to pursue. He who sets his face towards Zion, and lifts his heart to the New Jerusalem, should be aware of imbibing a party spirit. Social sympathies of nature are strong; and when any one for the influence of conscience is broken away from the connexions of a dissolute and corrupt circle, and begins to adhere to a distinct body of religionists, his passion is often engendered, and, if analyzed, may be found to have more of power in it than of reason. Attachment to his new friends, quickly identifies him with their interests, opinions, aims, objects. But party spirit, what promptitude and activity it produce in one direction, has undeniable tendency to cramp the mind with reference to the grand realities and paramount concerns of the kingdom of Christ. It supplies a pungent stimulus, which quickens certain elements of the inner man, but weakens and impairs its general habit of spiritual health and prosperity.

Another cause which retards the progress of the Christian in his course, is the entanglement of worldly cares. We are far from thinking the duties of religion, and the ordinary pursuits of agriculture, trade, or commerce, inconsistent with each other. Perhaps there is no condition exposed to more temptations, than a state of leisure and independence. But while a Christian is commanded to be diligent in business, as well as fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, he ought to take heed that he be not absorbed in the cares of the world. One successful project or undertaking opens the way to another, till engagements multiply and thicken, so as to perplex and harass the mind, and encroach upon that time which has been devoted to God. Yet he who makes it a point of conscience to abstain from the light and frivolous amusements of the gay and fashionable, is not equally alive to the danger which the sober plodding drudges of the world incur. By his very exemption from the former, he is the more liable to be, unawares, involved in the latter.

Nor is the advancement of a good man in his Christian course a little checked, strange as the assertion may appear, by taking a too prominent and engrossing part in those valuable institutions, which are designed to enlighten and meliorate mankind. It may sound like a paradox to say, that a person may be actively employed in promoting the religion of others, and losing the power and savour of it himself, at the same time; but facts have frequently demonstrated, that this is sometimes the case. When the bustle and business of public meetings draw us into the focus of splendid patronage, warm admiration and marked notoriety, and detach us from the necessary and all-important duties of the family and the
The Antediluvian Age. July, closet, the mournful consequences may be confidently predicted. All the healthful movements of the divine life are impeded; all the enjoyments of devotion are blighted and soon wither away. He who has said, “Them that honour me, will I honour,” withdraws the light of his countenance, and the grace of his good Spirit, and then inward darkness and death-like torpor pervade and oppress the soul. Another cause which retards the Christian in his course, is the turning of that anxiety to ascertain the evidence of his state, which ought to be directed to its advancement.

“Some,” says Archbishop Leight-ton, “are employed almost entirely on considering whether they are in the right way, or in childishly telling their steps. They would know, at every pace, whether they ad-advance or not; and how much they advance; and thus spend the time of action, the time of making progress, in questions and doubts.
Would it not be a far more wise
and comfortable course, to be pressing forwards, and if we make little progress, at least to desire and labour to make more; to be praying and striving for this purpose, not satisfied with anything
we have already attained, but yet not discouraged, but rather excited by the view of our defects, to proceed with fresh vigour? So it was with St. Paul. Forgetting the things which were behind, and reaching forth unto the things which were before, he pressed forward, as if nothing had yet been done; and as one who runs in a race, does not look back to see how much he has already run, but forward to the ground he has yet to pass, and to the mark and end of the race.”

But it is an easier matter to point out the obstacles of our way, than to remove them, to describe incumbrances, than to shake them off.
The Christian is called to lay aside every weight, every pressing load of care, every besetting sin, that he may so run as to obtain the prize before him. While he seeks and estems the fellowship of the saints,
let him not wear the fetters of party-spirit; while he sets an example of industry in business,—let him not submit to the trammels and shackles of the world. And when he takes his part in aiding the public institutions, which spread the knowledge and grace of God among men, let him beware that he do not neglect the sacred duties of home.

The grand secret of soul-prosperity, is intimate fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. He that is much with God, shall receive much from God.
He lives a life of faith, of prayer,
of peace. The light of heaven shines upon his path, and he runs without weariness, and walks without fainting. As there is a fulness of joy in reserve for him, there is a foretaste of that joy given as he journeys towards it. He is permitted to eat of the hidden manna,
to draw water from the wells of salvation, to triumph in the savour
of the knowledge of Christ, to sing
the ways of Zion, and to look with ardent desire and confident hope to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away,
reserved in heaven for him.

Amicus B.

Miscellaneous.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Antediluvian Age.

The restless mind of the enthu-
iast of learning is ever looking forward to a period when the human intellect shall have reached the acme of perfection, and have attained the full gratification of its
The Antediluvian Age

Men who have lived in the ages since the flood, have not been able to form a just idea of the height to which the powers of the mind might be raised, if their course were not so speedily arrested by the impotence of age and the summons of death. Since that desolation swept our earth, the average duration of human life has dwindled to less than one-twentieth of its former longevity: and if the thirty or forty years which now limit the activity of the most comprehensive and elastic minds, afford time enough to produce such intellectual achievements as have often been witnessed, how shall we calculate the measure of the attainments of nine hundred years of progressive learning and experience, if not of uninterrupted mental vigour? The adolescence of the antediluvians was longer than it has been since; but it appears that they attained bodily maturity at the age of sixty, or sixty-five at farthest; and the difference is scarcely large enough to be regarded in the calculation of the proportion of improvable time. Nor can it be maintained that after this slower progress to manhood, they were more speedily subject to the infirmities of senility—the contrary is by far the more reasonable deduction.

In the longest and most diligent life which is now observed, we do not find that the mind receives its fill: there is no proof that it has a certain capacity which cannot be exceeded—We can discern no mental plethora. All experience, on the contrary, goes to prove that whilst the mind is able to acquire, it is indefatigable in its researches after more knowledge. What has appeared in some instances to be repetition, was in truth but the first symptom of the waning of life into decrepitude; the harbinger of mental as well as bodily dissolution—The appetite was lost, not satiated—The goal was not reached, but the adventurer was stopped in the course.

desires. Redeunt saturnia
is still the confident consolation of baffled philosophy, which ex-

then to revel in the glory of limited knowledge and consum-

experience—with its various harmonizing into one great
m of uncontroverted truth. It be presumptuous utterly to enm this, as one of the airy uations with which insatiate
attempts to pacify the crav-

for its curiosity, which at pre-finds so little of certainty to fy its desires; but it may be as
and no less agreeable, to ima-

that the glorious epoch has

that the time has existed and away, when there remained ystery of mind or matter, no
na in metaphysics or philoso-

when man's understanding ely knew an obstacle, or felt ubt; and that having reached climacteric, its pride was at swpt away, and no vestige of mitted to survive; excepting a dim facts, implied, rather than

ed by ambiguous history.
that such was the sad office of Noachian deluge, is perhaps
ed on more substantial ground visionary conjecture. That excessive depravity of the inha-nts of the antediluvian earth
the immediate cause of that whelming visitation, cannot be without impeaching the creity of Divine revelation: but it reasonably be imagined, that of the Divine intention in this
ity was to destroy the mighty om of man, which was raising
 to a perfection in knowledge,
seemed to flatter him with a ment of the promise of the eter—"Ye shall be as Gods."
scarc a remnant of life or nawas left by the devastations of lood, so we may suppose it was Divine will that man should
a large share of that intellec-
trength, which had fortified
 in his self-dependence and unity.

The advantages of antediluvian longevity—the opportunity which it afforded for the mature cultivation of each branch of knowledge, we shall not find it easy to calculate—It seems to warrant an almost unlimited stretch of fancy. A very great proportion of the perplexities which now involve all science, are attributable to the comparative blindness and incapacity of its votaries, and not to the natural imperviousness of the subject of study. Most of these perplexities consist of crude, obscure notions, which, had their authors enjoyed full time to try them in, would have been dispelled or made clear, by their own reason and research. To this uncertainty, antediluvian learning was not liable. Every theorist had several centuries in his own existence, to put his system to the test: he did not die in the glory of its novelty, before he was himself confirmed in it by adequate trial, or before it could be sufficiently understood by his contemporaries; nor would he be likely to hazard a theory taken up on short investigation, when he foresaw that there was every probability that he might survive its fall.

"He sat not down and dreamed Romantic schemes, defended by the din
Of specious words, and tyranny of names;
But, biding his amazing mind attend,
And with heroic patience years on years
Deep-searching, saw at last the system dawn,
And shine, of all his race, on him alone."

Hence we may conclude that the knowledge which then existed was simpler, and better settled, than at present; and that not only its common principles were established, but that their whole connexion, bearing and consequences, were familiar to their philosophy. Whole lives are now spent in producing and elucidating what were probably among the elements of antediluvian knowledge: and all the results which the tedious labour of posterior ages has produced, and those which are still in process, may have been parts of the alphabet of their literature.

All those advantages of emulation and association, to which we rightly attribute the rapid enlargement of the limits of science, were then equally enjoyed. The generations of Adam spread over the earth: the protraction of their lives must have increased the growth of population in a ratio of at least five to one, in comparison with succeeding ages; death was in the same proportion, and for the same reason less devastating. So that these circumstances readily make up for the disparity of time between the creation and the deluge, and the period which has since elapsed; and lead us to the conclusion that not improbably the flood, in the days of Noah, overwhelmed eight hundred millions of sinners.

The earth was tenanted before the flood by the immediate descendants of the first parents of mankind, who were endowed with intellects of the greatest strength and refinement at their miraculous creation. They did not reach either their corporeal or intellectual maturity by slow degrees. Adam particularly, came from his Creator in mental as well as bodily manhood. His life was the immediate inspiration of the Deity; his faculties were all simultaneously bestowed, not only in a manner, but in a degree of magnitude, which we have reason to believe was never again to be approached. No barrier of depravity interposed between his mighty powers and the attainment of knowledge; no sensual grossness debased his soul to the level of mere mortality, and incapacitated him for the highest intellectual excellence; no passions disturbed the pure serenity of his mind; no unholy wandering led astray his judgment; all the circumstances which surrounded him in Eden were such as could only elevate, not depress or distract his mind. The discord of nature which
The Antediluvian Age.

Convulses earth, was unknown
radise: universal tranquility its hallowed influence over all on: In a word, the blessing
sova rested on him, as on untainted world; he was the work of the Almighty’s hand;
nd in absolute perfection “in
m image;” he was the object express and constant regard;
de high converse and commu-
on with Heaven: the universe
visioned for him, and its mag-cace corresponded to the sub-
of his nature and destiny.
were the first inhabitants of arth, before their sin reversed
elicit.
spirits—yet to heavenly spirits
ncelior; whom my thoughts pursue onder, and could love; so lively
a divine resemblance.”

a state of exaltation is not comprehensible to the degenef their descendants. Corrupt-as worked every thing that is is, into that nature which the air received from the hand ounsel of God. The curse of ome Power that raised Adam h sublimity, threw him from ince, and involved his pos-
in the consequences of his
The curse of heaven! who weigh its terror or calculate cts? The immediate blessing ven! where is the innocence se it? Adam alone
tell—for he alone had expe-
d both. The purity of Eden ceeded by guilt; and from postacy of our race is to be the incalculable debasement
the human powers. Even the of the changes in the eco-
of the brute and vegetable
on, consequent on that event, turnish a terrible idea of the version it effected. The id tribes which came with un-ious sagacity and harmless-be named by Adam, or gam-

IV.—Ch. Adv.

now the terror of the race that then divided with them the bounties of ature; or are made subservient
only by art and long protracted discipline. The fruits of the ground, which then sprung spontaneous
from the soil, offering their delicious nourishment, are now the scanty rewards of anxious, unceasing toil.
The immediate effect of the curse
was felt by our great progenitor,
not only in the calamity of expulsion from the garden, but especially in the withdrawing of that favour,
support, inspiration, which had shed lustre on his mind. And the very change of his outward condition, was, of itself, sufficient to dim the original brightness of his intellect.
But we cannot suppose that the fall utterly dispossessed him of his superiority: it doubtless enervated his intellectual might—but even thus clouded, he must have retained
a greatness, which, however sunk it might have seemed in his eyes,
would be to us a genius, towering above all present competition. And he doubtless infused his knowledge into his children, with whom he lived more than eight hundred years; extending to the ninth generation of his descendants—aft-
the birth of the last of whom, (La-mech) he lived fifty-six years. All this time, and on all these generations, was his intellectual lustre re-lected—the last glimmering of which, before he suffered the execution of the sentence, “dust thou art and to dust shalt thou return,” may have been more splendid than the united brilliancy of all the new d earth’s wisdom. Besides the direct transmission of his knowledge from Adam to his descendants, they themselves, both in his life-time
and after his death, communicated it to all the existing world. Seth lived nine hundred and twelve years, and his son Enos enjoyed the instruction of his ancestors for eight hundred and seven years: and he again inculcated it on Caiman, during the eight hundred and fifteen years which he lived after his birth. And so it continued to descend and spread through the lives of successive descendants: for Cainan lived to the age of nine hundred and ten; Mahaleel to eight hundred and ninety-five; Jared to nine hundred and sixty-two; Methuselah to nine hundred and sixty-nine (reaching until within a few years, if not to the very day, of the deluge); Lamech to seven hundred and seventy-seven, &c. From the creation to the deluge, was one thousand six hundred and fifty years, not more than the ordinary ages of two antediluvians: so that all the wisdom which was left to Adam, after his transgression, could be easily transmitted, without diminution or loss, or rather with constant accumulation and improvement, throughout those sixteen centuries, to Noah himself.

Moses makes no attempt in his history, to furnish any account of the state of knowledge, and his incidental mention of several arts, is to be taken as implying the existence of many more. Imagination is left to its full range on this subject; and where would the ardent mind wish to find limits, in such a field for its enthusiasm? Without giving up all rein to fancy, the circumstances noticed may be allowed their fair weight of implication, whilst the absolute record of the existence of arts, in a state of considerable refinement, authorizes a reasonable range of conjecture.

The very process of creation is scientifically narrated; and as there is no record of the rise of learning, during the few centuries from Noah to Moses, that circumstance adds to the probability that the principles of science which it discovers, were the relics of antediluvian learning. That narrative includes what may properly be denominated a philosophical account of the creation of the element of light, and the full accomplishment of its purpose by means of the solar system; of the distinction of day and night; the expansion of the firmament; the elevation of the earth by which “the waters were gathered into one place;” vegetation, from the blade of grass to the fruit tree; the means of animal sustenance; the method of irrigation before the earth was watered by rain; the appointment of the heavenly bodies as chronological standards; and the various grades of animated nature. Again; Adam divided all animals into species, and named them according to their characteristics: exemplifying a more distinct knowledge of natural history than the most diligent studies since have effected. He intuitively recognised the social and conjugal compact. He must have been perfectly intimate with horticulture and botany, to have been able to “dress the garden and keep it,” stocked as it was with the luxurious products of the East. The separation of the employments of husbandry was early. Abel was a shepherd; Cain ploughed; Noah (though after the deluge, yet he was too an antediluvian) planted a vineyard: Cain built the city of Enoch: the harp and the organ were invented by Jubal: Tubal Cain was an artificer in metals. Coming down to the flood, the structure of the ark defies the imitation of modern architecture. Though suggested by the Deity, Noah must have understated the instructions, and have employed builders of adequate skill: and what may we not suppose to have been their proficiency in the arts of building, if not of navigation, when we consider the dimensions of that vessel which sheltered the remnant of living nature for more than a year? The ark was more than 480 feet in length, 81 in breadth, and 43 in height, and its capacity was at least 42,000 tons. The dates, ages and seasons, which are particularly mentioned, prove skill in chronology, which learned calculation alone could attain.
The Antediluvian Age.

Noah was the connecting link between the old and new worlds, and his name terminated antediluvian priority. The arrangement of evidence directly supported the notion of rendering the new d inferior to the old. For Noah's were not born until he was five hundred years of age, which is the of the announcement of the mighty's threat to punish human: the deluge commenced he was upwards of six hun-, and the intermediate century robation was fully occupied by in constructing the ark, and in warning his fellow men of their per. He had no grand-children after the flood, which he sur- l three hundred and fifty s; during which time his sons, hom the whole earth was peo-. most probably settled away him with their families, for had children two years after flood—At all events, they had shorter and more interrupted course with their father, than predecessors of the drowned d. Shem died at the age of six hundred; Ham and Japhet were uger, and had still more limited leges. What they received their parent, must have been so small. The population and re-cultivation of earth after such a revolution, ed cares too pressing to al-time to receive much instruct- or to improve what they had ived; and the three and a half uries which Noah spent with in such circumstances, at the of a busy and protracted life, ins: insufficient to admit of any like a complete traditionary ation. The mad project of: building a tower, "whose top might h to heaven," does not argue they were much addicted to ance, during the century subse- it to the flood. And until the patriarch Abraham, sent from Ha- to Canaan, A.M. 2078, mere than four hundred years after the flood, we find no distinguished name, or any proof that the postdi- luviens inherited the genius or many of the improvements of their ancestors; and yet all the knowl- edge which there was in the world for several ages, appears to have been derived from them.

Eidolon.

Editorial Remarks.

That the intellectual as well as moral powers of our first parents suffered by the fall, and that their posterity have shared with them in this, as in every other consequence of their apostasy, we have no reason to doubt. It is likewise manifest from sacred scripture, that Adam was created in knowledge, as well as in holiness; and the Mosaic account of the antediluvian world, brief and summary as it is, shows that several of the arts were then in use. All this we take to be un- deniable fact. On these facts our correspondent has ingeniously specu- lated. Our own impression is, that it is not probable that the antediluvians were altogether such su- perior and erudite beings as he supposes they were. Yet we be- lieve there is much truth, as well as somewhat too much of fancy, in his discussion. That the wreck of science which remained after the flood, furnished the materials of all the knowledge of the immediate descendants of Noah, and of their posterity for many generations, we had occasion to remark in our last number. We shall take this oppo- portunity to acknowledge our indebtedness for much useful information on this, and several related subjects, to "Goguet's Origin of Laws, Arts and Sciences;" and to recommend to our young readers, and especially to Theological stu- dents, the careful perusal of that excellent work.
LETTERS TO MOTHER TO A DAUGHTER, ON THE SUBJECT OF EARLY EDUCATION.

LETTER VIII.

(Continued from p. 264.)

My dear Mary—Miss More's well drawn and most perfect characters, although in the higher ranks of life, all excelled in domestic qualifications. But we have a still higher authority. In Solomon's epitome of female excellence, a wife is represented as "not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with scarlet. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness." In our land of liberty and equality, can a female be found in a station so high, that it would detract from her dignity to superintend the domestic concerns of her family? Surely no one can be so learned as justly to consider herself above such business. A mistake in this matter must arise either from the most criminal pride, or from ignorance of her proper duties, in her who mistakes; because genuine knowledge must have a directly contrary effect. And let it be remembered, that no earthly rank or distinction can ever exempt us from our obligations to obey the commands of God: And we find it written, "if any would not work, neither should they eat."

I know you will not fear to give your daughter the best education which your circumstances may admit. Be diligent to effect this, and think a good education no less necessary for her than for Charles. They will be proper and suitable companions for each other, in the acquisition of knowledge. She may now, at the age of four years, attend an approved lady's school, if there is one conveniently situated; but I would not continue her at such a school after the age of seven, or eight; because I cannot think she will obtain as correct an education there, as under the tuition of one who possesses the advantages of a classical education. It is true that the ladies who teach at the present day are much better qualified than female teachers formerly were. But let me ask, if you suppose your son could spend his time, as profitable there, as at a publick academy? The design of this question you will readily perceive.

You must not send Ellen to school to learn needle-work; for it is your province to teach her that. Let her school hours be devoted to the acquisition of literature. The opportunity for acquiring this will soon be over. In performing the duties of her station, she will ever be improving at her needle. As for drawing, unless she has a peculiar taste for it, she may spend her time much better than in acquiring the art. But of music and drawing, I propose to say more hereafter.

I know not why she may not to advantage pursue the same studies as Charles, and the same plan recommended for his improvement, with the exception of learning Greek. You will perhaps say, "And why not except Latin too?" I answer; It is becoming customary in this age, to teach daughters the elements at least of the Latin language; and with all the advantages which you have to bestow, I can conceive no reason, why this may not be interwoven with Ellen's early studies, since it is the surest way of attaining a perfect knowledge of our own language. Yet this, I admit, is far less necessary for her than it is for Charles: and it must be the reward of early industry and application—the saving of that time which might otherwise be lost.

I should consider a knowledge of languages, far more valuable than the arts of music and painting. Any pursuit which shall add to intellect, cannot but be valuable. Do not, I repeat, fear that too much knowledge will make her a pedant;
for ignorance is the real ground of pedantry. Our beloved Miss More says,—“Those are not in danger of becoming proud of their learning, who cannot remember when they were ignorant.”

You will not forget that even now, early domestic habits must be formed. Let your daughter, between school hours, learn to set your tables with care—to brush your hearth—to dust your furniture, &c. This will teach her early to feel the importance of neatness. I have seen a well-dressed, and not very learned young lady, who seemed unable to perceive that the room, in which she was sitting idle and expecting company, was in great disorder; while her indulgent mother was necessarily occupied in another part of the house. Teach Ellen to take the charge of her own clothes; and to see that they are not scattered and lost. She must not depend on her mother or the servants to do this; for should she be so indulged, habits of inattention and sloth will be formed, the evils of which she will feel all her days; and her friends will be likely often to “wish her mother had taught her better.”

Teach her lessons of diligence so effectually that she can never feel at ease when she is idle. Convince her that an idle, a slow, and inactive young lady, can never appear engaging. Give her some objects to excite her activity—an hour of recreation; a walk; or liberty to amuse herself with a favourite little story book. The management of a play-house, is not an unprofitable amusement for a little girl. Give her a doll, and teach her to make its dress; to furnish its house: and you may with much propriety assist her with some hints, as to neatness and arrangement. I do not know but she might thus be beguiled into a taste for domestic management. It should ever be our endeavour to make even the amusements of children profitable. I am sure your will not allow your daughter to engage in boisterous sport, or trifling plays; or to walk the streets, or make calls without your approbation.

The books which your children read, must be of your own selecting. The present generation is highly favoured, in the excellent variety of little books now extant, peculiarly adapted to the capacity of children. The productions of Mrs. Sherwood’s pen, are not the least valuable. There is also much trash in the world, and a single page may contain poison enough to destroy the soul.

You will esteem it your privilege to have, not your daughters only, but your sons also, to be “keepers at home.” Therefore use every proper method to render home agreeable—particularly let the evenings be made a season of social enjoyment and instruction; such as Cowper so charmingly describes. When you go out, which I trust will not be often, assign them their tasks, and appoint their amusements; and when you return, exact a faithful account of their conduct. The little disputes and quarrels which arise among children, generally happen in the absence of a parent; if either party, rather than avenge himself, shall appeal to you, let it not be in vain. If it should, he will very probably not appeal on another occasion, but seek to avenge himself: and thus an endless maze of contention may begin. But by your settling the little disputes of your children equitably, and by timely correction, you may restore, preserve, and perpetuate peace and harmony; and have the unspeakable satisfaction of seeing your children grow up in the cultivation of the sincerest affection for one another, as well as for their parents.

The editor of the Christian Advocate cannot but be deeply sensible of the kindness of his brethren of the Presbytery of Lewes, in the expression of their favourable opinion of this Miscellany, as contained in the subjoined minute: and as he can state with perfect truth, that he has used no solicitation or influence, either direct or indirect, to obtain the expression of this opinion; he trusts that none will deem it improper that he should comply with the request of the Presbytery, that their minute should be inserted in the work which it commends—It may be proper to add, as “an early insertion” was requested, that the copy of the minute was not received by the editor, nor had he the least knowledge of its existence, till the 23d of the last month.

—

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Lewes, at Snow Hill, April 28th 1826, the following preamble, resolution and request were adopted in regard to the Christian Advocate—

“Whereas, effects the most beneficial have resulted, as well to religion as to literature and science, from the diffusion of knowledge by means of newspapers and magazines—

“And because the Christian Advocate, published in the city of Philadelphia, is the able advocate of the interests of religion generally, but especially of the interests of the Presbyterian Church, in the United States: and because it is recommended, as well by its judicious selections, the taste, and severe discrimination of its literature and criticism, as by the inflexible orthodoxy of its venerable editor—Therefore resolved, that each member of this Presbytery, will endeavour to aid the circulation of that magazine; and that the stated clerk forward a copy of this minute, accompanied with a request, that it may have an early insertion in that work.—A true extract from the Minutes.

Thos. Kennedy, Stated Clerk.

THE REV. MR. STEWART’S PRIVATE JOURNAL.

(Continued from p. 298.)

Sabbath evening, January 2d. Though I wrote so fully yesterday, I would not, my dear M., pass over the present day without at least one word of notice. Like the first Sabbath of the last year, this has been distinguished to us, by the administration of both the sacraments of the Christian church. The exercises of the morning were divided between Mr. Richards and myself, by his preaching the sermon, and my baptizing the infant daughter of Tana, our Tahitian assistant, and afterwards distributing the elements of the Lord’s Supper to the little company of disciples, who, in the seclusion and darkness of this island, are from time to time, permitted to eat bread and drink wine, in remembrance of their crucified Redeemer. About 300 of the natives, chiefs and people, were present, and formed a most orderly and attentive audience. The exhibition of the broken body and shed blood of Jesus Christ, was uncommonly solemn and affecting, and drew tears, not only from those who had a part in it, but from the eyes of many who were only spectators of the scene. Several of the chiefs, Puaiiti, the blind man, and a young English sailor present, wept—the last almost convulsively. We have seldom had so interesting a season; many followed us into our yard with much solemnity; and some of the chiefs and others, went with Stephen Papahi into one of our houses, to converse on what they had seen. Among others was the young queen Kakano-nohi: she said to him, “we have been weeping—for what (or why) did the foreigners weep? I myself wept; but I do not know for what? why did they weep?”—before Stephen could answer her, many suggestions were started, as to the cause, when Pakiti, who was present, came forward and said in his earnest manner, “I think why they wept—it was because their hearts are so wicked, and because Jesus Christ is so good!" An answer that spoke volumes for the Christian knowledge and experience of one, who but of late was more blind in spirit than his sightless eyes—balls now are. Stephen seemed fully sensible of this; and when relating the circumstance to us, added in his distorted English, "Pux-it, him one very good man—him know every ting—him one perfect—me tink so."

The exercises of spirit manifested at this service, in our humble chapel—the tenderness, the solemnity, the peaceful enjoyment, evident in those, who in attempting to trust themselves beneath "the shadow of the wings of the Almighty, drank from the rivers of his pleasure, and were satisfied with the fatness of his house;" the seriousness, the attention, the tears of those who witnessed the affecting ordinance—all combined to make it to our souls a happy beginning of the Sabbaths of another year; a beginning well calculated to strengthen our faith, to excite our hope, and influence our zeal in the discharge of the duties which crowd upon us, in this region of darkness and of the shadow of death.

January 7th. We cannot write even at this season, my dear M. from these mild latitudes, of "nipping frosts" and drifting snow: still, even here winter comes "to rule the varied year,

Sullen and sad, with all her rising train,
Of vapours, clouds and storms."

During the summer season, scarce a cloud ever floats in the brightness of our glowing skies; but from October to April, (especially thus far in the present season) we have much dark and lowering weather, with occasional heavy rains. For several days, all within doors has been exceedingly gloomy; and when I first looked out this morning, while a green and chilling surf was tumbling and foaming the whole distance between the reef and shore, such impenetrable thickness was spread over the whole sea, that I could not have distinguished a vessel a dozen yards, beyond the first appearance of the breakers.

January 9th. Sabbath night. Last evening Harriet, after a day of more than ordinary fatigue, was suddenly seized with a fainting fit, which alarmed us for a short time. She is less unwell to-day than we feared she might be; but Charlie is seriously affected with symptoms of the croup. The weather for the last week, has been very unfavourable to the health of those living in such frail habitations as ours are; for the most part, it has been cool (for this country) bustling and rainy, and altogether unlike the weather we have generally experienced at Lahaina. The mercury has not risen higher than 74° today, and then only for an hour or two in the middle of the afternoon; most of the time it has stood at 70°. The natives have an excessive dislike to the wet and cold of times like the present; still the chapel has been well filled at both services to-day; much more so than I have seen many a Christian temple in America, at less inclement seasons: and for order, sobriety and lively attention, I think the present has surpassed every Sabbath we have yet attempted to sanctify with the heathen. Oh, my sister, how much do I wish, that the friends and supporters, and the enemies and scoffers, of missions to the Pagan world, could be present at such scenes as we are permitted weekly and almost daily to witness. How would the first rejoice; how would the last blush at the sight. Many, very many of the hundreds, who crowded to the worship of God, seemed, at least by their actions, to say "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" And the decency and order of their behaviour, the motionless posture, the fixed eye, and in some cases the glittering tear, as they hung on the lips of the speaker, as if to catch the words of eternal life, must have touched the sensibility of the man, whilst they would have melted the heart of the Christian. The love and gratitude too, find both the foundation and the boundaries of all secondary means of religious improvement."

"That the ministry of the gospel ought to be exercised under the immediate direction of the great Head of the Church, is a principle which will probably be allowed by many pious Christians; yet we are not to forget, that when that ministry is most spiritual in its origin, it is still found to dwell on the declarations of Scripture. The purest gifts of the Spirit, as they are now administered, are almost exclusively directed to the application of those materials which originated in a higher and more plenary operation of the same Divine influence. Thus, also, the sentiments which chiefly edify in the writings of modern Christians, are precisely those sentiments which, in their original form, have been expressed by prophets and apostles. It is Divine truth, as applied to the heart of man by the Spirit of God, which converts, sanctifies, and edifies; and of this Divine truth, the only authorized record—a record at once original and complete—is the Bible." pp. 108, 9.

If this be Quakerism, we are happy to assure Mr. Gurney, that, on this point at least, we are Friends. To a disregard of the Scriptural connexion between the operations of the Holy Spirit and the instrumental cause, that word which is Truth, almost every description of fanaticism owes its origin. The written Scriptures and the ministry of the word, separated from the agency of that Spirit which worketh all in all, are found to be alike powerless and inefficient; and those persons who ascribe an inherent efficiency of the instrument, or look for any spiritual effects independent of a Divine agency, are chargeable with an infidel fanaticism, not more reasonable than those who rely on immediate impressions, dreams, or inspirations, of which the revealed will and word of God are not the substance and the medium. On the other hand, a Popish regeneration, a sacramental grace, which, while it seems to do honour to the Spirit of God, sets aside his word as the medium of his saving and sanctifying operations, attributing to water or a wafer the moral influence of truth, and substituting a sacerdotal incantation for the work of faith, Scripture and reason alike disown. The office of the sacraments, we hold with Calvin to be "precisely the same as that of the word of God, which is to offer and present Christ to us, and in him the treasures of his heavenly grace;" while, on our part, they serve at once as a solemn confession and pledge, a vow of allegiance and a significant memorial. On these grounds, and on that of their Divine appointment, we contend for the obligation of observing them.

If we have dwelt the longer on that portion of the volume which has given us the least satisfaction, it is in the hope that our suggestions may lead the estimable author to reconsider the passages referred to. The sixth essay, which treats of the Divine nature and attributes, is a delightful specimen of genuine theology: the sentiments are strictly Scriptural, and a glow of piety is diffused over the whole, which is but too seldom preserved in theological treatises. In the subsequent essay, "on the union and distinction in the Divine nature," we have been not less charmed with the author's explicit avowal and defence of the orthodox doctrine, and his correct method of stating it, which is in entire accordance with the views we expressed in a recent article. While the primary truth, that there is no other God than Jehovah, must ever be held sacred on the authority of the holy Scriptures; "it is on the same authority," Mr. Gurney remarks, "that we admit another doctrine,—namely, that in his revealed operations, and more especially in the appointment and application of the scheme of redemption, God has manifested himself to us as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." The Divine nature of the Son of God...
ly discussed in the tenth
In reference to the per-
and deity of the Holy Spiciting numerous declara-Scripture, Mr. Gurney re-

if the inquiry be addressed to is this person of whom Christ
ostles thus bear witness; who and consoles the disciples of Je-repoves the world of sin, of ness, and of judgment; whom it nable to blaspheme, wicked
rous to tempt and to grieve;
his temple in the hearts of the
; who inspires the apostle,
y the prophet, appoints the calls forth, anoints, and directs elict; who distributes to his according to his own will, those gifts and graces by which the ified, and the cause of truth
—the fundamental principles and the whole analogy of will assuredly admit but of one his Person is God.

A Spirit. Invisible, and spiri-
ture, he fills his own works;
ues over them an unseen but fluence: he dwells and opehearts of men. Nor can we truth of the converse of such a m—notably, that the Spirit who works of Deity, who exercises
an unseen yet powerful infludwells and operates in the men, is God. ‘Now, the LORD
spirt,’ said the Apostle Paul;
e the Spirit of the Lord is,
liberty. But we all with open-ding, as in a glass, the glory of
, are changed into the same
m glory to glory, even as by
of the Lord.’” pp. 147, 8.

briefly exhibited the al evidence that the Father that the Son is God, that y Spirit is God, Mr. Gur-ceeds to take a view of the al passages in which “the
the Son, and the Holy Spideity is thus distinctive-separately indicated, are ed to our attention as the ources of the Christian’s consolidation, the united
f the Christian’s belief and ce.” The first passage John xvi. 13, 14., on which ended the following forcible

V.—Ch. Adv.

“If, then, I am asked, who is to guide the people of God into all truth? I answer, on the authority of this luminous declaration, The Spirit of Truth. If I am asked again, Whose wisdom and grace does the Spirit of Truth administer? it is on the same authority that I reply, The wisdom and grace of the Son of God.
And if, lastly, the inquiry be addressed to me, On what principle can we say that it is the wisdom and grace of the Son, which the Spirit administers? this inquiry also is fully met by the information contained in our text—namely, that all wisdom and grace are from the Father, and that whatsoever the Father hath, is the Son’s.
From whom then does the Christian derive the strength of his spiritual life and the hope of his soul’s salvation? From the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.
And to whom does he owe the tribute of gratitude and praise, and the return of a faithful and unhesitating obedience? To the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spi-

The other texts which Mr. Gurney proceeds to illustrate, are Eph.
iv. 4—6; 1 Cor. xii. 4—6; 2 Cor.
xiii. 14; Luke iii. 21, 22; and Matt. xxviii. 29, 30. In noticing the last of these, the author slightly indicates his peculiar view of the rite, by remarking that “in whatever manner we may here interpret the participle baptizing—whether we understand it as denoting merely the sign of conversion or the act of converting itself”
—the doctrine is clear, that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are in common the objects of the Christian’s faith and allegiance.
In the following paragraphs, Mr.
Gurney adverts to “the order of that relation in which they stand to each other, and the distinct offices which they are respectively described as bearing in the glorious ecomy of the Divine dispensations.” This is ground, however,
on which we fear to tread; and although we have no fault to find with Mr. Gurney’s statements on the score of orthodoxy, since they are in strict accordance with the received opinions of theologians,
yet, the stress laid on John xv. 26,
as a proof of the “subordination”
of the Spirit to the Father and the

2 S
Son,—that mysterious dogma of procession which has agitated contending churches,—we think far from judicious. On the whole, however, we have been highly gratified with this part of our author’s work, in which he has displayed not less wisdom than piety; and we cannot but anticipate the happiest results from the circulation of his clear and Scriptural statements.

The next essay, on the existence and personality of the Spiritual Adversary, is not less admirable. This subject has commonly been treated under the general head of the existence and attributes of angels, considered either as part of the works of God or as the agents of his government. The ministry of holy angels certainly claims a place among the articles of the Christian faith; but the character and agency of Satan as the author of evil, form a distinct topic, and one of such primary importance as to demand a separate consideration. In this point of view, systems of divinity are for the most part very defective; and Mr. Gurney will have rendered a great service to the Christian public, if, by his Scriptural and explicit manner of treating the subject, he should lead divines and preachers to give this topic its due place, not merely in their systems, but in their discourses. After reviewing the Scriptural evidence, Mr. Gurney expresses his astonishment, that any persons professing to regard the Scriptures as divinely inspired and laying claim to the character of fair interpreters of the sacred volume, should deny the personality of the great adversary.

"It ought ever to be remembered, that the Holy Spirit can neither err nor feign; and although there is to be found in the Bible much of poetry, and something, perhaps, of allegory, yet, as a guide to practice and to doctrine, it can be regarded only as a code of principles and a record of realities. Besides, the descriptions of Satan are to be found principally in those parts of Scripture which are not poetical, but either historical or simply didactic. Never were there plain or more unsophisticated historians—historians less disposed to indulge in fanciful imagery or oriental exaggeration—than Moses or the four evangelists, who have severally, in the course of their histories, presented to our attention the personal character and operations of Satan. To these are to be added, Paul, Peter, James, and Jude—those homely yet luminous didactic writers, who, as well as our blessed Lord himself, have all made mention of the devil, not as an allegorical figure, but as a powerful, insidious, malicious being." p. 173.

The denial of the personality and power of Satan, Mr. Gurney very justly represents to be "close ly connected with a low and inadequate view of the malignity, the depth, and the danger of sin." The essential demerit of sin is, in fact, a proposition which lies at the foundation of all theological science. In false views of this subject, the Pelagian, Socinian, and Antinomian heresies mainly originate; and unless this be admitted as a first principle clearly and necessarily deductible from the perfection of God, it will be found impossible to give either meaning or coherency to any system having the least pretension to a Scriptural character. The fall of man is thus stated by Mr. Gurney in terms which appear to us alike clear and unexceptionable.

"The Scriptures teach us, that the fall of our first Parents from a condition of natural righteousness to one of natural sinfulness,—from a condition in which he was the heir of a blessing, to one in which he was the subject of the curse,—was the immediate cause of a moral depravity, and therefore of a punishable guilt, in the whole family of his descendants." p. 209.

The practical observations with which this Essay closes, are highly striking and impressive, and serve as an excellent preparation for the subject of the ensuing essay, the character of the Saviour. Our limits will not admit of our pursuing any further an analysis of the work, but we must make room for a few Review of Gurney's Essays on Christianity.

The Father alone knoweth the Son, and the Son knoweth the Father; but of whom the Son is, the Son also knoweth him. The omniscient Father has a perfect knowledge of the Son, and the Son also知道 the Father, even as the Father knoweth the Son. The Son glorifieth the Father, and the Father glorifieth the Son. Those persons who are in a peculiar manner the Father's, are also the Father's; and those persons who, in the same sense, belong to the Father, belong also to the Father. Whatever things are, and are not, and are, and are not, all things that the Father is, are the Father's. John xvi. 15. So is the connexion—so is the abso-

We must hastily dismiss the eleventh essay, on Redemption, not as being of inferior interest, but because our limits will not admit of much further citation. It is divided into three sections: in the first, Mr. Gurney states with admirable clearness the Scripture doctrine of the Atonement; in the second, he treats of the merits and advocacy of Christ; in the third, "of the Scripture doctrine of the Spirit," he takes a view of our Lord's character as the "internal illuminator" as well as "spiritual quickener of mankind." It is with peculiar satisfaction that we receive this able, lucid, and explicit exposi-

The Father alone knoweth the Son, and the Son is, the Son alone knoweth the Father, or who the Father is. The omniscient Father has a perfect knowledge of the Son, and the Son also knows the Father, even as the Father knows the Son. The Son glorifies the Father, and the Father glorifies the Son. Those persons who are in a peculiar manner the Son's, are also the Father's; and those persons who, in the same sense, belong to the Father, belong also to the Father. Whatever things are, and are not, and are, and are not, all things that the Father is, are the Father's. John xvi. 15. So is the connexion—so is the abso-

We must hastily dismiss the eleventh essay, on Redemption, not as being of inferior interest, but because our limits will not admit of much further citation. It is divided into three sections: in the first, Mr. Gurney states with admirable clearness the Scripture doctrine of the Atonement; in the second, he treats of the merits and advocacy of Christ; in the third, "of the Scripture doctrine of the Spirit," he takes a view of our Lord's character as the "internal illuminator" as well as "spiritual quickener of mankind." It is with peculiar satisfaction that we receive this able, lucid, and explicit exposition of the cardinal doctrine of justification by faith, from the member of a community among whom there has generally been understood to prevail very indistinct if not unscriptural notions on that subject. The only statement which we hesitate to approve occurs at page 455, where Mr. Gurney represents the sacrifice of our Lord "as a price paid not only for the redemption of sinners, but for the outpouring of the Spirit." We object to this language, first, because it confounds what Mr. Gurney has taken pains to distinguish,—the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ, which was the price of our ransom or redemption, as being "the means by which the Father saw fit to provide for the satisfaction of his justice" in the pardon of the sinner,—and, the merits and advocacy of Christ, of which the outpouring of the Spirit was the first fruits. But a second and more important objection is founded on the incorrect application which is here made of the metaphor of price or purchase, to the blessings of the Gospel. It is true, that he who ransoms a captive may be said to buy his liberty; and the party accepting of the ransom may be said to sell either the person or the freedom of his prisoner or slave for an equivalent. But the mercy of God is free and unpurchased; he receives no equivalent for the blessings he bestows. It is in the character of a moral governor only that he exacts or accepts a propi-tiatory sacrifice, to declare his justice and his holiness; and in this reference, our Lord cannot be properly represented as paying a price, but as enduring a penalty. We are justified as criminals; we are redeemed as the captives of sin; we are constituted heirs of heaven as children of God's family. It is not heaven, but the church itself that is "the purchased possession." It is not our pardon, but our souls that are bought with a price. The Scriptures employ these and other metaphors to describe, under different views, man's redemption; but we must guard against running one metaphor into another. Statements substantially true, but grossly improper in their phraseology, and very liable to misconception, have originated in the disregard of those limitations beyond which figurative language ceases to be either appropriate or true; and from a confusion of ideas on this point has resulted a metaphorical patchwork bearing little more resemblance to the language of the inspired writers, than the literal translation of idiomatic expressions does to the true force of the original.

In Mr. Gurney's views of regeneration, we fully coincide; and when he remarks that "Divine grace is omnipotent," he admits all that we are disposed on that point to contend for. We rejoice too, to find him maintaining the unity of the Church.

"Christianity," he remarks, "is a social religion: its virtues are of a character at once binding and diffusive. And amidst all the fruits of the Spirit, there is none so delightful and so distinguishing as that holy love of which God in Christ is the first object, and all mankind the next, and which more especially unites in the bands of the fellowship of the gospel those persons, of whatsoever name or profession, who believe in the Lord Jesus, and are baptized 'by one Spirit into one body.' Theirs is the 'unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace'—the communion of the Holy Ghost.' And this communion extends itself from the church militant to the church triumphant. It already brings heaven and earth together, and its full perfection will be known in that glorious day when the number of God's elect shall be completed; (Matt. xxiv. 31)—when all distinctions of peculiar opinion shall be for ever lost among them; and when the universal society of saints and angels shall unite in rendering unto the Lord God and the Lamb the same eternal tribute of obedience, thanksgiving, and praise." p. 476.

Between those who believe that Jesus Christ is God, and those who regard him only as a creature, Mr. Gurney remarks, there is, plainly, an “infinite difference,” one “that admits of no compromise.” But,

“How numerous, how powerful,” he adds, “are those doctrinal points in religion which are entertained in common by the great majority of the Christian world! One principal object which, in the laborious yet interesting task of composing the present volume, I have always kept in view, has been, to develop these points of union. I have desired to show to my fellow-believers in the divinity of Jesus Christ—Roman Catholicks as well as Protestants—Calvinists as well as Arminians—dissenters as well as members of the various established churches—the strength, the breadth, and the saving efficacy of those great features of Divine truth in which they all agree. May this main agreement—an agreement which embraces every thing absolutely essential in religion—be more and more accompanied by gentleness, kindness, forbearance, and candour, and, above all, by the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.” Of this unity of the Spirit, founded as it is on an essential unity of doctrine, one principal result ought surely to be, our joint and common, or at least our corresponding and harmonious efforts to promote the salvation of the world.” p. 364.

We have passed over the twelfth essay, “On Faith and Obedience,” and must not now return to it. We had marked several other passages for extract, but further citation cannot be necessary, as few of our readers who place any confidence in our judgment, will hesitate to put themselves in possession of Mr. Gurney’s volume. On contrasting these Essays with the Treatise on Christian Doctrine that lately came under our review, one cannot fail to be struck with the immeasurable superiority of the present writer in true wisdom to our English Sophocles. Those words of holy writ have forcibly occurred to us: “The meek will He guide in judgment, the meek will He teach his way.” There is a spirit pervading Mr. Gurney’s volume, which leaves no room for doubt as to the influence under which it has been composed. But the contrast between the two works is more especially interesting as they may both be considered as reflecting in some measure the character and spirit of the times. That Quakerism has undergone some important modifications, on the one hand, since the time of Milton, Mr. Gurney will readily admit; and on the other hand, we feel persuaded that, had our great poet lived at this era, he would never have put forth opinions so crude and erroneous. Nay, we cannot help imagining that an acquaintance with John Joseph Gurney, instead of the Quaker Ellwood, might not only have had a happy influence on Milton’s religious tenets, but have led to the composition of a nobler poem than Paradise Regained.

We cannot dismiss the foregoing article, extracted from the Eclectic Review, without expressing the high gratification we have received, from observing that a writer of such talents, and such soundness in all the most important doctrines of Divine revelation as Mr. Gurney unquestionably is, has come before the publick from the Society of Friends. The ordinances of the gospel we do indeed hold to be highly important; but the reception and belief of its leading doctrines we consider as absolutely essential—essential in any system which can justly claim to be denominated Christian. These doctrines are not only correctly held by Mr. Gurney, but it appears that he possesses the power of stating them, with a perspicuity, precision, discrimination and force, seldom equalled. We trust that the volume of which the above review is given will be reprinted in this country; and that it will prove a powerful auxiliary to that portion of the religious denomination among us to which the author belongs, in their endeavours to arrest the progress of the infidel opinions so earnestly, and, we regret to say, so successfully propagated of late, by a preacher in that society.
ing this, we do not consider ourselves as departing from a rule which we have prescribed to ourselves as invariable, in editing our religious miscellany; namely, not to intermeddle with the concerns of other denominations, farther than is indispensable to the defence of our own. But it is in defence of our own—even of its very existence—when we bear our testimony against any man, by whatever name he may be called, who impugns Divine revelation, and endeavours to exalt his own weak and delusive rveries above the sacred truths which the Holy Scriptures teach and inculcate.

Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, etc.

Comets.—It is now certain that the same comet has appeared in our planetary system in the years 1758, 1795, 1801, 1805, 1818, and 1825. It appears that in its course it never passes the orbit of Jupiter. The period of its revolution (which is the shortest known) very little exceeds three years and a quarter; and its mean distance from the sun is not more than twice that of the earth. It seems to be especially connected with the system in which our globe is placed, and crosses our orbit more than sixty times in a century. M. Olbers, the celebrated astronomer of Bremen, who has bestowed much attention on this comet, has been lately occupied in calculating the possibility of its influence on the destinies of our globe. He finds that in 63,000 years, this comet will approach the earth as nearly as the moon; and that in 4,000,000 years it will come to within a distance of 7,700 geographical miles; the consequence of which will be (if its attraction be equal to that of the earth) the elevation of the waters of the ocean 15,000 feet; that is to say, above the tops of all the European mountains, except Mont-Blanc. But who expects that the earth will endure four millions of years?

Ambergris.—The origin of this substance is involved in complete obscurity. All that we know of it is, that it is most commonly found in lumps floating on the ocean, sometimes adhering to rocks, sometimes in the intestines of fish—but whence does it come? by what process is it formed? Every body knows the history of that gresy substance called adipocere—that on digging up the bodies in the cemetery of St. Innocent's at Paris, many of them were found in part converted into a substance resembling spermaceti; and that it has been since ascertained, that if the flesh of animals, instead of undergoing putrefaction in the air, undergoes the slower changes which take place under water, in a running stream, it is gradually converted into this substance. It is not an improbable conjecture, that ambergris is the flesh of dead fish which has undergone this change—that it is marine adipocere. And this conjecture is corroborated by the fact which was lately stated in one of the American newspapers. A marine animal of gigantic size has lately been discovered and dug up in the neighbourhood of New Orleans, in the groove of one of whose bones was found a matter closely resembling ambergris.

Original Habitate of the Rose.—In Travisick's Synodus Botanica, it is mentioned that the species of the genus Rosa found in Europe, have reached us from the East Indies, China, and Japan. The middle parts of the Russian empire, the districts around Caucasus and Persia, are full of roses, of which the more western are mere varieties, and which propagated themselves as such. Roses are rare in Africa; there they are met with only in the northern districts; while Europe, on the contrary, from the Uralian Mountains to the coast of Portugal, abounds with them. The roses of America have reached that continent through the Polar lands, and appear to be sprung from the Rosa Alpini, and R. Majalis. There are no roses in Australasia, nor have any species been met with in South America, indeed they scarcely occur any where to the south of the equator.

Origin of Coal.—Geologists have given great scope to their inventive faculties in endeavouring to determine the sources and origin of coal: but every thing tends to show its vegetable origin, and specimens of a regular succession of wood, little changed, and ending with coal, in which all organic traces are lost, have occurred. And even in the most perfect coal some relic is often found, some trace of vegetable texture, some fibrous remain that clearly announces its ligneous origin. In the leaves that appear in bovey coal, for instance, resin and extractive matter have been found, and also a substance uniting the properties of resin and albumen; and the same substance has been found in the principal coal-field of Staffordshire. Perhaps, therefore, essential vian timber and peat bog may have been.
the parents of our coal strata; but then it will be asked, how has this mighty change been effected? Is it merely by aqueous agency—a kind of decay and rotting down of the wood; or has fire been called into action, torrefying the vegetable matter, and the pressure under which it has operated, preventing the escape of volatile matter, caused the formation of bitumen? And are those reservoirs of compressed carburetted hydrogen, from which blowers result, to be ascribed to such a mode of formation?

The London papers mention that the coach established on the Stockton and Darlington Railway, carried lately, in one day, no less than one hundred and fifty-eight passengers, the whole of whom were drawn by two horses.

One thousand seven hundred and nineteen emigrants, going westward, have arrived at Black Rock, by canal boats, since the first of May last.

Alligators.—A Newbern, (N. C.) paper says: "Alligators of a very large size have recently shown themselves in our river, even close to the publick wharves. Some time since a large one was taken, and lately another of the great length of twelve feet six inches, whose expanded jaws seemed sufficiently capacious to receive a full grown boy."

Anglo-Chinese College of Malacca.—Among the admirable enterprises of the English, is the establishment of a college, and eight schools, in Malacca, for teaching the Chinese and Malay tongues to the English subjects, and the English language to those two sects of Asiatics. The latter is likewise a Tamil school. The leading object is to aid the mission for propagating the Christian religion to the Chinese, and other orientals: but students who can pay for their tuition, are admitted for the purpose of acquiring these modes of speech and their dialects, to qualify themselves the better to pursue commercial and other business in these populous and productive regions with which we have an increasing intercourse.

Dr. Ebel, in his account of the Canton of Appenzel, says: "In the gardens near the river Sitter, such numbers of snails are kept during the summer season, that the sound caused by their denticulated jaws, while they are eating, may be distinctly heard. Young snails are collected in the adjacent parts, and are placed in these gardens, where the owner supports them till, on the approach of winter, they enclose themselves. In addition to the food which they find on the grounds, they are supplied with leaves of lettuces, cabbages, and other vegetables, by which they grow and fatten amazingly. Some time before Lent, the owners pack up the enclosed snails in casks, and carry them for sale to the convents of Suabia, Bavaria, and Austria, and even as far as Vienna, where they are purchased as delicacies."

The once popular author of "The Pursuits of Literature," is still at Naples, where he has recently been seriously indisposed. Mr. Mathias's health, however, is now perfectly restored, and with it his ardour in pursuit of Italian poetry. He has just published a new work, which is greatly esteemed in that country.

New Method of Preparing Quills.—The following is the manner in which M. Schloz of Vienna, proceeds in the preparation of quills for writing, by means of which he renders them more durable, and even superior to the best Hamburg quills. For this purpose he makes use of a kettle, into which he pours common water, so as to occupy the fourth of its capacity; he then suspends a certain quantity of feathers perpendicularly, the barrel lowermost, and so placed, as that its extremity only may touch the surface of the water; he then covers the kettle with a lid properly adjusted, boils the water, and keeps the feathers four hours in this vapour bath. By means of this process he frees them of their fatty parts, and renders them soft and transparent. On the following day, after having scraped them with the blade, and then rubbed them with a bit of cloth, he exposes them to a moderate heat. By the day after, they are perfectly hard and transparent, without, however, having the inconvenience of splitting too easily.

Messrs. G. & C. Carvill, of New York, have printed, from the last and improved British copy, a very handsome edition, in octavo, of Dick's moral and instructive work, entitled, "The Christian Philosopher; or the Connexion of Science and Philosophy with Religion." It deserves publick patronage on every account.

Mr. David Flagg, of Gardiner, Maine, has received a patent for a Family Grist Mill, which is thus described in the northern papers. "Meal and flour of the first quality are made in it, and they may, at pleasure, be boiled by the same operation. Its principal recommendations are, its cheapness, and the small mechanical power required to give it motion. It costs only thirty dollars, and will grind two bushels an hour, requiring one man only, or even a boy at the crank. It is acknowledged to be useful, and it will undoubtedly be brought into operation, particularly where the water-mills are scarce, and water power precarious."
Religious Intelligence.

The following letter, received within the last month from the Rev. Mr. Stewart, will be found deeply interesting to the friends of missions. We do not think that it was written with a view to publication; but chiefly from a desire to satisfy the editor, that leaving Lahaina was not a matter of choice, but of a most afflictive necessity; and to recognise the goodness of God in the remarkable series of providential occurrences, by which the departure from the Sandwich Islands was favoured. And these are also our motives for laying the whole communication before our readers—with the exception only of a sentence or two at the close, of a merely personal nature.

It is due to Mr. Stewart, and to the sacred cause in which he is engaged, that it should be fully known, that he did not desert his post; but that he was most reluctantly compelled to leave it, by a marked providential dispensation, which, in the unanimous opinion of his missionary brethren, as well as of his physicians, made it his imperative duty, to endeavour to save a life justly and unspeakably dear to him, and indeed to all who have ever known his amiable wife, by an attempt to return with her to their native land.

We do not know whether the letter, (which it appears was written at sea,) was sent by a vessel met with, before the Fawn reached Britain; or by some vessel which sailed from London or Liverpool, after the arrival of the Fawn in one of those ports.

Since writing the above, we have received a note from Mr. S., dated "49 Westmoreland Place, London, May 18, 1826"—in which it is said, "Mrs. Stewart improved greatly for the first month after our arrival—She is not quite so well at present—We may probably sail the first of July from this port."

On board the Fawn, off the Western Islands, March 18th, 1826.

My very honoured and beloved Friend—Circumstances and place have greatly changed with me and mine, since I last directly addressed you. Yet I presume, by the time this reaches Philadelphia, it will be unnecessary to inform you of the particulars of either. The continuations of my journal to Mrs. B. up to the middle of July, 1825, will have fully apprized you of the afflictive dispensation with which it has pleased God to visit my family; and letters from the Mission to Mr. Everts, of which some notice will probably appear in the Missionary Herald, will have given information also of the truly unwelcome duty in which it has resulted—that of our departure from the Sandwich Islands, on the 17th of October, for the United States, by the way of England. To receive a communication from me, therefore, dated on the bosom of the North Atlantic, will create no surprise: it will rather give joy, from the assurance it will convey, that our long voyage is thus far accomplished under circumstances of peculiar mercy. Mrs. Stewart still lives, and we hope will be permitted yet to meet the embraces of her friends in America; though her state is such, that it is impossible to say what a day, much less weeks and months, with the vicissitudes of climate and seasons, still to be experienced, may bring forth. Our all is in the hands of Him, who alone is wise in knowing, and merciful in securing the highest good of his servants; and to his will it ought to be our happiness, and the happiness of all who love us, cheerfully to submit, whether it be made known in open bereavement, or in "blessings undisguised."

Your last letter of affection, of encouragement, and of counsel, dated October 5th, 1824, reached Oahu at a time to be read with deeply affecting sensations—within a day or two of our embarkation in the Fawn—immediately after it had become clearly our duty to forsake for a season, and perhaps for ever, those scenes and occupations to which you advert with so much interest, and in which we had been engaged with so much satisfaction and pleasure.

As early as during the visit of the Blonde, we had feared that, to save the life of Mrs. S., it would be necessary to leave the islands for a colder climate. By the 1st of September, that impression had become the settled conviction of every member of the mission acquainted with her case, and the professional opinion of all the medical gentlemen with whom Dr. Blatchely had consulted. We considered the point of our return, then, to rest entirely on the fact of her surviving, and remaining in a state capable of making a voyage, till an opportunity of leaving the island should offer. That we with a suitable opportunity, early period, was, however, probable. Two requisites, which we could not expect united in the same ship in the world—a physician, attachel, and accommodations sufficient for our family. In fact, our station of making a voyage, the nature of the Island, expected visit of Com. Hull, in United States—of course, ourersed with great uncertainty, might not arrive for months; me at all; and if he did, even our purpose, it might not be necessary to accommodate us with a

our attitude, when the Fawn Sahu, for refreshments, in Ockinew she had a physician on board. She was bound to London. Foreigners, a wide circuitous route little did we deem it probably could be received on board a full cargo, not originally despatched passengers at all, that assured after her arrival, with the slightest inquiry on the subject, the surgeon attached to her, never called a number of Mrs. Stewart, and expressed opinion of the necessity of a voyage to another climate, I felt it last to ask the question, thought it possible for us to go in this? To surprised to hear him answer, he and himself had already been on the subject, and he did not re was any thing to prevent it, accommodations they could answer our purpose. Both men called the next morning, invitation for me to visit the, to my further surprise, I a very fine vessel, of 450 tons, top of war, in the royal navy, the large, light, and airy cabins slid with advantages and of every kind, which not undred of the ships that visit an boast; and I could but be sted at the kindness and toipated and unhought of stranger, when Capt. Dale, and handsome manner, was would give him pleasure to one half of the cabin to Mrs. myself, and an adjoining communicating with the same the Dr. Short, at the same time, made a similar tender of such services in his profession, as Mrs. Stewart and the family might require. The answer did not rest with me—I felt it my privilege and happiness to consider the judgment of my brethren in the Mission, under God, the criterion of duty in every important measure, and I could therefore, at the time, only acknowledge myself fully sensible of the favour they were ready to confer on me.

A meeting of the members of the Mission then at Oahu, was immediately called, and the subject of our departure from the islands formally discussed, under two propositions. 1st. "Whether it was my duty, under the existing circumstances of my family, to return, at least for a time, to the United States?" and 2d. "If so, whether the kind offer of Capt. Dale, of a gratuitous passage to London should be accepted?" both of which were fully and unanimously decided in the affirmative.

Thus, my dear friend, in one hour, as it were, light shone out of darkness, and a path of duty was clearly pointed out, which we could not doubt was of God, as it was entirely the result of dispensations in his wise and gracious Providence, which no device of man could have produced. It had long been our daily and unceasing prayer, to be permitted still to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ to the Gentiles, but if that happiness was to be denied us, to have the will of God so clearly revealed, that our duty should not admit of a question. This prayer seemed now to be answered—if a shadow of doubt remained on my own mind, it originated in the possibility of Com. Hull's arrival in time to secure the end of our removal, when a still longer trial might have been made of its unavoidable necessity. But where the life of one, invaluable to myself and family, was at hazard, I did not feel at liberty to give up a certainty for an uncertainty, and thankfully accepted Capt. Dale’s offer, and prepared to embark with him, at the end of eight days.

After the first emotions of a decision, to me so solemn and so momentous, my thoughts and my affections hurried to Maui—a spot, interesting above all others, to my heart. I could not think of leaving the islands without paying it the farewell visit at least of an hour. This, through the very great kindness of a principal merchantile house, at Oahu, I was enabled to make express, in one of their smaller vessels, under the command, for the occasion, of Mr. Elwell, of Boston, a gentleman connected with the establishment, to whom I have often been indebted for similar marks of friendship. We arrived at Lahaina at midnight, and as we had been delayed three days by head

---

Dr. Short, at the same time, made a similar tender of such services in his profession, as Mrs. Stewart and the family might require. The answer did not rest with me—I felt it my privilege and happiness to consider the judgment of my brethren in the Mission, under God, the criterion of duty in every important measure, and I could therefore, at the time, only acknowledge myself fully sensible of the favour they were ready to confer on me.

A meeting of the members of the Mission then at Oahu, was immediately called, and the subject of our departure from the islands formally discussed, under two propositions. 1st. "Whether it was my duty, under the existing circumstances of my family, to return, at least for a time, to the United States?" and 2d. "If so, whether the kind offer of Capt. Dale, of a gratuitous passage to London should be accepted?" both of which were fully and unanimously decided in the affirmative.

Thus, my dear friend, in one hour, as it were, light shone out of darkness, and a path of duty was clearly pointed out, which we could not doubt was of God, as it was entirely the result of dispensations in his wise and gracious Providence, which no device of man could have produced. It had long been our daily and unceasing prayer, to be permitted still to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ to the Gentiles, but if that happiness was to be denied us, to have the will of God so clearly revealed, that our duty should not admit of a question. This prayer seemed now to be answered—if a shadow of doubt remained on my own mind, it originated in the possibility of Com. Hull’s arrival in time to secure the end of our removal, when a still longer trial might have been made of its unavoidable necessity. But where the life of one, invaluable to myself and family, was at hazard, I did not feel at liberty to give up a certainty for an uncertainty, and thankfully accepted Capt. Dale’s offer, and prepared to embark with him, at the end of eight days.

After the first emotions of a decision, to me so solemn and so momentous, my thoughts and my affections hurried to Maui—a spot, interesting above all others, to my heart. I could not think of leaving the islands without paying it the farewell visit at least of an hour. This, through the very great kindness of a principal merchantile house, at Oahu, I was enabled to make express, in one of their smaller vessels, under the command, for the occasion, of Mr. Elwell, of Boston, a gentleman connected with the establishment, to whom I have often been indebted for similar marks of friendship. We arrived at Lahaina at midnight, and as we had been delayed three days by head winds, on a passage usually made, by such vessels, in one, and no time was to be lost, in despite of the great darkness of the night, and the danger of the surf, I landed immediately. The Mission House had been removed from the place of its original location, but familiarity with every spot, enabled me easily to grope my way through the luxuriant plantations by which it is now surrounded. But how great was my astonishment, at the peculiar circumstances in which I found our inestimable and beloved friends, Mr. and Mrs. Richards. Instead of being permitted, unobserved, to come to their very bedside with the salutations of friendship, and warm affection, as I had anticipated, how was I surprised to meet, at my first approach to the house, the presented bayonet, and to hear the stern challenge of the watchful sentry—"who goes there?"—"I am a friend of your house."—When assured that it was a friend, how inexplicable to my mind was the fact of receiving the cordial embraces of my brother, not in the peaceful cottage of the missionary, but in the midst of a garrison, apparently in momentary expectation of the attack of a foe, and to find the very couch, on which was reclining one, who to us has been most emphatically a sister, surrounded by the muskets and the spears of those, known to the world only by the name of savages!

My first thoughts were that a revolt of the island, against the general government, had taken place, in which our friends had been seized, and were guarded as captives—or that some formidable party of unfriendly natives had risen with the determination of destroying them, but from whom they were protected by the higher chiefs—but as soon as an explanation could be given, I learned that their peril was from false brethren, if the outcasts of a civilized and Christian country can be designated by such terms.—The seamen of a large ship, at anchor at Lahaina, exasperated at the restrictions laid on their licentiousness, through the influence of the Mission, had carried their menaces and open acts of violence, against Mr. and Mrs. R., to such an extent, as to cause the chiefs to arm a body of men, and defend them at the hazard of life. At that very hour, three bosts' crews, amounting to near forty men, were on shore, with the sworn purpose of firing their houses, and taking their lives!—But as every thing, when I left them, was in a frame to secure their entire safety, it is unnecessary to enter further into the particulars of the subject, except to say, that the statement of these circumstances from them, with the unfolding of the character and object of my visit, on mine, made our interview most deeply affecting; and the remainder of the night was spent in thought and conversation, of unmingled sorrow at the termination which was about to take place, of that union and intercourse, which, for near three years, had been the source of some of our highest and sweetest enjoyment.

At sunrise Mr. Richards and myself visited the spacious and well built and finished chapel lately erected by the chiefs; and in the pulpit from which we had expected and fondly hoped jointly to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to the thousands of willing hearers under our common charge, we in tears and in prayer looked to God, the arbiter of our destinies, for his presence and blessing on our future divided labours in his cause. And in the course of an hour, after I had bid a hasty adieu to the chiefs and such of the people as were best known to me, we sorrowfully interchanged, perhaps, our last embraces in this world.

Never did the field of labour I had hoped to occupy for life, appear so truly desirable: and I found my heart clinging closely to every object included in it, from my invaluable associates and the thousands eagerly desirous of my instructions and preaching, to the very trees and shrubbery I had planted and nurtured in our gardens. The dispensation of our removal seemed so mysterious, that added to the struggles of strong affection in my bosom, it filled me with sadness and gloom during our passage to Oahu, and before we came to an anchor, I had almost fully determined to permit the Fawn to depart without us, and venture a still further delay till the United States should arrive. How great then was my surprise and satisfaction to hear before landing, that there had been an arrival from South America, and that a packet from Com. Hull was waiting my return at the consulate. That gentleman could know nothing of my peculiar situation.

Still I was persuaded that his communication would, in the providence of God, make my path plain, and remove every doubt then resting on it. And such was fully the case: for in the course of his letter, though utterly unaware of the importance of the information to me, he gave the most unquestioned assurance that it would be impossible for him to make the proposed voyage to the Sandwich Islands. This was all that was necessary to render our duty clear as noonday, and we prepared cheerfully to follow the path we believed pointed out of God.

Thus, my dear friend, have I traced, as the outline of the providences, both immediate and remote, which led to our embarkation for the United States:—An illness which proved itself unconquerable in a tropical climate, and threatened speedy death, unless a removal should take place—the unanimous decision of all medical advice as to the necessity of such removal—the approving judgment and authorizing vote of the mission in following that decision—and the unsought but singularly marked openings for putting in execution the measure thus satisfactorily pointed out as duty. The view of them as they stand in their series "with their proper connexion," will, I hope, give to you, as one not only deeply interested in all the important vicissitudes of my life, but more especially in the history and circumstances of missionaries and missions, the same unfeigned satisfaction that their ultimate, though gradual and painful development, did to myself.

Notwithstanding the clearness of our path, and the persuasion that in following it God our guide and Saviour would be with us, warm affection for our brethren and sisters, some of whom were in circumstances of affliction great to aggravate the sorrows of a separation—love to their work and to our work, and the highly encouraging and affecting state of the people, thousands of them delighting in our instructions, and tens of thousands perishing from a want of more labourers in a field ripe for the sickle—all caused us to bid farewell to the Sandwich Islands with feelings of the most painful depression. Rude as was the throng which covered the beach as our boats shoved off—unlike as was the whole scene, except in the murmur of sympathy and the salutations and tears of affection, to the enlightened and pious multitude, and the beautiful and classic ground on which our eyes rested, as we waved a last adieu to the American shores—it was scarce less affecting, and caused an agitation far more oppressive and afflicting than any we experienced on the 19th of November, 1822.

Mrs. Stewart was very ill about a fortnight after embarking—so much so that for several days we hourly expected her death; and we were under the sad necessity of making every arrangement for such an event. Hope, however, again sprang from despair. Contrary to our fears she lived to reach the island of Tahiti, and continued to improve after our visit there till she was able, after passing Cape Horn, to spend much of her time on deck, and to walk with assistance. But she is again entirely confined to her sofa. We hope everything from a change of air, diet, &c. &c. in England—but that hope is not unmixed with anxious apprehensions that the change may be without effect.

The time of our embarkation for America will depend alone on her state and the advice we may receive in London. It is not probable that it will be thought prudent for her to go immediately to sea again—if so, we need not be expected in the United States earlier than the middle of June, or first of July.

To think of actually meeting the embraces of our friends, and of revisiting the scenes of our former years, seems even, in imagination, almost like being restored from the dead to the living. It is an event so foreign to most of our expectations, that we can scarce yet feel that it will prove a fact. Perhaps we may be restored to many who counted us as among the dead—and perhaps we shall find many among the dead whom we have most fondly wished to meet among the living. It is now eighteen months since the date of our last letters, and my heart shrinks from the thought of the inroads of death may have made on the number of my friends within even that short period.

Yours, respectfully and sincerely,

Charles Samuel Stewart.

P.S. It would be doing great injustice to Capt. Dale, Dr. Short, and the officers of the ship, not to mention to you and our other particular friends in America, the very great obligations under which we feel ourselves to her for their unremitted kindness, and every attention during our voyage. In receiving us on board his vessel, Capt. Dale made a sacrifice of all his own personal accommodations—even to the removal of his cot for sleeping, to the open cabin, and his trunks in daily use into the steerage. His whole deportment since we have been with him, has been of a corresponding but increasingly kind character. Dr. Short, too, has been indefatigable in his exertions for the benefit of Mrs. Stewart's health, and has been most watchful and solicitous for an improvement in her state. All, indeed, on board the ship, in their respective stations, from the master to the cabin-boy, have treated us with undeviating respect and good will.

A valued correspondent in London has sent us by one of the late arrivals, the following translation of a ukase, of the Emperor Nicholas of Russia, putting a stop to the farther printing of translations of the sacred Scriptures throughout his dominions. This unhallowed work was commenced under his brother Alexander. Some hope was entertained that Nicholas would at least have left the concern, where it was left by his predecessor. But it is evident that he is determined to do anything for the gratification of his clergy which they may choose to request; for they are to be considered as the parties originally opposed, and most zealously opposed, to the free dissemination of the sacred oracles. The truth is, that a familiar acquaintance with the Bible by the people at large, would eventually and inevitably expose the gross superstitions of the Greek church, and thus diminish, if not destroy, the undue authority and influence of its clergy. This they perceive, and hence their opposition. At the same time, the emperor and nobles have come to be aware, that their vassals will not be likely to wear their chains as contentedly as they have hitherto done, if they become well acquainted with the truths and doctrines of divine revelation. In addition to all, the Pope no doubt has used all his influence—and of late it has been much greater than formerly in the Greek church—to give activity to this formidable hostility to the Bible cause. But "great is the truth and it will prevail." In despite of the wishes and efforts of popes, princes, and all the powers of darkness, "the word of the Lord will have free course and be glorified." If they continue their opposition, the King of Zion "will break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings, be instructed ye judges of earth; serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little; blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

TRANSLATION.

Russian Ulass, dated St. Petersburg, 12th April, 1826. O. S.

Most Rev. Metropolitan of Petersburgh and Novgorod Seraphim.

Having taken into consideration the representations of your eminence, and of the Metropolitan Eugenius, respecting the difficulties which present themselves to the progress of the cause of the Russian Bible Society, and those disadvantageous consequences arising therefrom; to the averting of which considerable leisure time is requisite, in order maturely and judiciously to examine into all circumstances: and considering your opinions well founded, I order you as President of said society to suspend its activity in all its operations, without exception, until my further permission.

You are hereby empowered to extend this my order to all the Committees, branches, and associations, connected with the Society throughout Russia, and at the same time to obtain a particular account of all property, moveable and immoveable, in houses, lands, books, materials and money, belonging to the Society, wherever these are to be found, and to furnish me with the most accurate and circumstantial information possible thereof.

The sale of the Holy Scriptures already printed in Slavonian and Russian, as also in the other languages in use among the inhabitants of the Russian empire, I permit to be continued at the fixed prices.

Recommending myself to your prayers, I remain, &c.

(Signed) NICOLAS.

His eminence immediately ordered a stop to be put to the printing of the versions at present under the press, &c., and to make up the accounts as soon as possible.

The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., during the month of June last, viz.

Of the following Commissioners who gave their mileage to the Contingent Fund, viz.

Eliphalet Wickes, Esq. of Jamaica, L. I. 55 91
Benjamin Strong, Esq. of New York 5 23
Elezar Lord, Esq. do. 5 23
Zachariah Lewis, Esq. do. 5 20
Rev. Dr. A. Alexander, of Princeton 5 23 77

Amount received for the Contingent Fund 523 77
View of Publick Affairs.

During the last month the advices from Europe are of little general interest, except those which relate to the fall of Missolonghi.

BRITAIN.—By the last intelligence from Britain, which is of the 30th of May, it appears that the parliament was still sitting. Bell’s Weekly Messenger, of May 31st, says—“There is but one object of interest and importance, that principally occupies the publick mind, and that is, the dissolution of parliament.” This dissolution was expected to take place on the first of June. It appears that preparations were making in every part of the kingdom, for the election of members to a new parliament—The official details of the capture of the strongest fortress of the Barman empire (Bhurtpore), and a copy of the treaty of peace concluded with the authorities of that empire, had been received in England; and the importance of the acquisition made to the British territories in the East, was highly appreciated.—The distress arising from the want of employment, in all the manufacturing establishments of the kingdom, was still great, but thought to be somewhat diminished. Liberal contributions had been made by the king, nobility and gentry, for the relief of the suffering poor, to the amount, it is said, of a hundred thousand pounds, in the city of London only. Yet it is affirmed, that even this sum will afford but a partial and temporary relief. The restrictions on the importation of grain were not finally removed; but authority was granted to the crown, to exercise a limited discretion on the subject, and to permit the sale, to a certain extent, of what is called banded corn.

FRANCE.—It appears by the last accounts from France, that the commercial distress is in that country, although not so great as in England, is still very considerable; and that it affects the manufacturing establishments, especially those of Lyons, in a very unfavourable manner.—The kingdom in general is tranquil. At Rouen, it appears that a pretty serious riot had been produced by certain missionaries; but whether these missionaries were papists, or protestants, we cannot certainly determine; but we think they were Jesuits.

SPAIN.—The Spanish court, we are told, refused to recognise the regency established in Portugal, till persuaded to do it by the combined efforts of the British and Portuguese ambassadors.—The renegade Infant, Don Miguel, had been invited to Madrid.—More vindictive measures against the former constitutionalists had been adopted.—In some towns of Spain a scarcity of the necessaries of life prevailed to such an extent that a number of individuals had actually died of famine.

PORTUGAL.—It appears that all remains quiet in Portugal, under the new regency, and the influence of the British court.

RUSSIA.—Beside what appears in another department of our work, and in this under the article Greece, we have recently heard nothing of importance from Russia. It is said that the emperor Nicholas has expressed his wish to visit several of his brother sovereigns, who belong to the misnamed Holy Alliance; and that the internal government of the empire is committed to two military governors general, one to reside at Petersburgh, and the other at Moscow; and to seven civil governors general.
account has yet reached us of the coronation of the new emperor.—It is said that he was about to visit the military colonies of Novogorod.

TURKEY.—It would seem that the Grand Seignor has been in danger of losing both his throne and his head—which indeed are commonly lost together by the usages of the Turks. In consequence of some manifestation of pacific disposition toward Russia, and some new military arrangements which displeased the Janizaries, they announced the design of deposing the Sultan, and proclaiming his son. How the matter has terminated we know not.

GREECE.—In our last number we stated, that notwithstanding the plausible accounts to the contrary, we entertained "serious fears that the fortress of Missolonghi, so long and so heroically defended, had fallen into the hands of its ferocious invaders." Our fears are now realized.

In several instances such narratives have been given in the publick papers, relative to the affairs of the Greeks—sometimes favourable and sometimes unfavourable—as we knew not how to discredit, and yet time has demonstrated that they were utterly false; and as the statements have been accompanied with details of particulars, dates and names, they must have been deliberate fabrications. This has sometimes left us at a loss to determine whether to report recent accounts, or to leave them without notice till some should either confirm or confute them. In the present case, however, it is clear, no longer doubtful that Missolonghi is in the hands of the Turks; and the circumstances of its capture or abandonment are of the most shocking kind. It fell on the 23d of April last. The following brief summary of particulars may, we think, be considered as materially correct.—The garrison of Missolonghi steadily refused to capitulate to Ibrahim Pacha, unless he would permit them to retire with their arms and with the honours of war. This he refused: but he offered them the assurance of his protection, and also pecuniary rewards, if they would surrender; and this they indignantly rejected: even when suffering the extreme of famine, they resisted all the persuasions of the British governor general of the Ionian islands, to yield to the offers made them by the Turkish commander. It appears that the British could have supplied them with provisions, but did not,—restrained, probably, by express orders to take no part in the contest. Had the garrison received supplies of provisions, it seems that the Turks had little or no prospect of ever reducing it.—Sensible of this, the Turkish Pacha resolved no longer to endeavour to take it by storm, but to employ all his force and ingenuity to cut off supplies from the neighbouring island of Zante, and from every other quarter; and in this he was successful. On the 17th, 18th, and 19th of April, several women, children, and old men, died of hunger. The brave Grecian admiral Mialiis, with a very inferior force, made two desperate attacks on the Turkish fleet before Missolonghi, with a view to relieve his countrymen—the first on the 15th, the second on the 21st and 23d of April. In the first attack he was partially successful; in the last he suffered severe loss; but in neither could he afford any succour to the starving garrison, which was now reduced to a state of desolation. The ground of the garrison was mined, the women and children were placed over the mines, and some intrepid old men engaged to set fire to the magazines the moment the signal should be given. Most of the men who were still able to bear arms, to the amount of about 2000, determined to make a desperate effort to cut their way through the besieging army, and to gain the neighbouring mountains. They made the attempt, and most of them were destroyed.—It is supposed that about 700 or 800 effected their purpose, but this we think is doubtful. Meantime the mines were sprung, and 6000 Greeks perished in the awful explosion. About 130 men fortified themselves in a house, and the next day after the explosion, fought as long as they could, and then, as the Turks were entering the house, blew themselves up, and perished with a number of their enemies. Such has been the fate of Missolonghi. Our reading does not furnish us with an entire parallel, either in ancient or modern story, to this narrative of the desperate resolution of a whole garrison, that none of them should be taken alive. What will be the consequence to the Greeks of the loss of this fortress, we know not.—The Turks themselves must now be sensible of the impolicy of their cruel conduct: They have driven the Greeks to desperation, and they will never conquer them, but by extermination or driving them out of their country. That they will be able to effect this, we do not yet believe; although we saw, with the desire begotten that the Grecian cause does not seem to us more than we have ever seen it, till since this last disaster. But we well remember the gloom in which our own country was involved, in the memorable month of December, 1776.—We remember that light then suddenly arose amidst the darkness—And so we hope it will be with Greece, without pretending to conjecture in what manner it will take place. But whether Grecian liberty be lost or won, a foul stigma and a dread responsibility will, in our humble opinion, rest on Christendom, for not preventing this horrible waste of human life, and insufferable outrage of all the claims of humanity itself. We perceive that much is still said about the interference of the European powers; but we see no evidence that anything is likely to be soon attempted. Russia, it is stated, has succeeded in settling her dispute with the Ottoman Porte, in regard to the provinces of Wallachia and Dalmatia, without doing a single thing, so far as yet appears, in favour of Greece—of that Greece from whose ecclesiastical system her own has avowedly been derived. The religious zeal of Russia is employed, only in suppressing Bible societies and Protestant missions.

ASIA.

Notwithstanding what we have stated under the article Britain, in our present View, it seems to be rendered probable by the report of a Captain Endicot, arrived at Salem, N. E., that the war between the British and Burmese has been renewed. The report of Capt. E. is, that several British East India vessels had arrived at St. Helena, which left Calcutta a month after the articles of peace to which we have referred had been there announced. The captains and officers of these vessels stated to Capt. E., that after the signature of the articles of peace, a British detachment that had not been informed that peace was concluded, attacked and routed a division of the Burmese troops. Enraged at this, and supposing the British had proved treacherous, the Burmese attacked and defeated the British troops, nearly annihilating three whole regiments. We still are without information of the missionaries.

AFRICA.

We learn by the last arrival from Britain, that information had been received by a vessel recently returned from Sierra Leone, that the several British stations on the coast of Africa were more healthy than usual.—That it had been determined to break up two establishments, at one of which the English and Dutch blacks had commenced war with each other.—That Com. Bullen, with four or five vessels of war of a small size, was cruising on the coast, to suppress the slave trade.—That information had been received of the death of Capt. Pearce and Dr. Morrison, the companions of Capt. Clapperton, in exploring the interior of Africa.—That the latter intrepid adventurer was living, and making his way toward Timbucto.—That Major Laing was also approaching the western coast from Tripoli.—And that a survey was nearly completed of the whole coast of Africa, from the Cape of Good Hope to Sierra Leone, as well as of the adjacent islands. We are also not sorry to learn, that the Pacha of Egypt is so embarrassed in his finances, that he is not able to carry on his military operations agreeably to his wishes. We hope this will turn to the advantage of the brave and unfortunate Greeks.

AMERICA.

COLOMBIA.—The revolution, or insurrection, or rebellion—we know not which is the proper term—that we noticed the last month, as having taken place at Colombia, is not yet settled. General Paz affirms, that “by the free voice of the people, the supreme command of the civil and military administration has been conferred on him—that the people were oppressed by a bad administration, and sighed for a remedy.” This was the ground of his reasoning, in vindication of his opposing and attempting to put down by a military force, all the existing constituted authorities of Colombia. He appears to be popular at Caraccas, and to find, in that quarter, little or no opposition. But in the Province of Cumana, where General Bermudez commands, he is explicitly accused of treason, and his authority is set at defiance. Both parties have appealed to Bolivar, who, we are glad to hear, is hastening towards them, and we hope will be able to settle this most inauspicious controversy, which has arisen in his absence.

We have heard nothing new, either of the Congress of Panama, or of the war carrying on between Bueno Ayres and the emperor of Brazil.

UNITED STATES.—Legislation in our country, except in time of war, is commonly suspended during the summer months.—It is so at present, and nothing of interest in relation to our political concerns invites our attention at this time.

The drought which we mentioned in our last number as prevailing throughout our country, has been terminated by abundant and successive falls of rain. Not only is the ground now saturated with water, but the streams have been replenished, and are indeed, in many instances, raised to a height very unusual at this season of the year. In the removal of the general calamity, many local and partial losses have been sustained. By the creation of torrents, the overflowing of rivers, and the occurrence of tall storms, a considerable destruction of property has been occasioned, in several sections of our country. In some places too, the continuance of rainy weather has been unfavourable to the harvest of the winter grain. On the whole, however, our land has received a rich mercy, which demands our notice and our gratitude. The danger of scarcity is apparently removed, and the promise of abundant fall crops is said to be flattering. In the mean time, health generally prevails, and the population of our large and healthful city continues to increase, with all the blessings of civil and religious liberty, in undisturbed peace and quietness. What we have most to regret, is the want of a due sense of our obligation to the great Bestower of all our blessings. Instead of manifesting our gratitude to God, by acts of cordial thanksgiving and praise, and especially by obedience to his laws, and a reverend regard to his institutions, profaneness lamentably abounds, and immoralities of various kinds are not merely tolerated, but seem to be countenanced and promoted by popular sentiment. This appears to be the case especially with reference to the day of sacred rest. The profanation of the Sabbath in our land, is an evil over which the friends of religion are constantly called to mourn, and which, unless reformation prevent, they justly fear will be followed by the marked displeasure of Heaven, in national calamities. This fear is the greater, because our government itself is not without guilt in this matter, having, it is believed, given occasion and countenance to the general licentiousness which prevails. By authorizing the travelling of the mail and the opening of the Post offices on the Sabbath, an evil example is continually presented to the public view; and the laws of the particular States which prohibited publick travelling and all secular labour on the Lord's day, are in this instance set aside; and thus the way is opened to set these laws aside in almost every other instance. In the cities of Philadelphia and New York, the proprietors of steam boats advertise, with unblushing effrontery, for excursions for Sunday, with as much freedom as for any other day of the week. We have intentionally used strong language in stating this fact; because every such advertisement as we have here adverted to, goes to a direct violation of the law of the land—is a publick declaration of an intention to violate the law, and an invitation to others to do the same. Such acts deserve to be denounced effrontery, and we know not how our magistracy can with a good conscience forbear to punish them. In the city where we write, the Sabbath preceding the day of our national prayer was profaned by the manifestation of profane deportments through the streets with martial music, and by their embarking for the fort is the river, that they might there be ready to perform certain services on the following Tuesday. Could there be even the pretence of necessity for this? There was ample time for reaching the fort, if the troops had left the city on Monday morning, instead of Sabbath morning. We remember that when Britain was threatened with invasion by the French, a few years since, a Sunday drilling of the militia was authorized by the government; and there the religious community raised their voice loudly against the measure, and if we mistake not, their voice was at length so heard as to be regarded. We do, for ourselves, most solemnly and earnestly protest against this desecration of the Sabbath by military parade, in a time of profound peace; and above all by those who are militia, and not regular troops.

Notwithstanding what we have said above, we have the pleasure—and to us it is a very pleasing reflection—that in various parts of our country, and in the city of Philadelphia among the rest, there was a religious celebration of the 4th of July, followed by a contribution to aid the funds of the African Colonization Society. We rejoice to observe that this mode of celebrating the birth day of our nation is becoming more and more extensive; and we earnestly recommend that the friends of religion use their best endeavours to render it universal. In what manner can this morning of the day be so properly employed, as in devout thanksgiving to God for the civil and religious liberty, which is his special blessing on the efforts of those who declared the independence of our country, that country now enjoys in a pre-eminent degree; and this thanksgiving, accompanied with earnest prayer for the continuance of the blessing to ourselves, and for its extension to our brethren of mankind universally—and that with our praises and prayers, our alms also, be presented as a thank offering to the Most High—alms to be applied in cleansing our land from that deep moral stain which the slavery of the unhappy Africans has impressed upon it: We object not to the spending of the remainder of the day, after the religious services of the morning, in any of those temperate and decorous festivities which are most inconsistent with Christian duty; and which may be favourable to the promotion of the love of liberty, and the cherishing of publick spirit. Christianity is a social religion, and genuine piety is the best friend of cheerfulness, while it is decisively hostile to all revelling and intemperate mirth. When shall the time arrive that the gospel system, or true godliness, shall be so estimated—its spirit so felt, and its practice so exemplified—as that mankind at large shall be convinced, that "it is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come!"
THE
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

AUGUST, 1826.

Religious Communications.

LECTURE XXIII.

Our attention will be occupied in this lecture, by two answers to our catechism—The first is, Christ, as our Redeemer, executeth the office of a prophet, of a priest, and of a king, both in his estate of mediation and exaltation. His answer is chiefly to be read as introductory and preparatory to the three which immediately follow it, in which the offices of Christ are distinctly and particularly explained. There are, however, some things, of a general nature, which may, with more propriety and advantage, be considered than elsewhere.

You will observe then, in the place that it is in his mediatorial character, that our Lord Jesus Christ is to be considered as exercising all the offices which have been specified. The mediatory office of Christ may be considered as general, which he always and invariably sustains, and of which others are only several, or particular and constituent parts; that is, office of mediator is never laid or suspended, but is always exercised by our Redeemer, when he acts as prophet, priest and king of his church—"There is one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus."

Observe in the next place, that there is a clear foundation for these several offices of the great Mediator, both in the scriptures and in the reason and nature of things. This has sometimes been denied, and even treated with contempt; as if to speak of Christ as the prophet, priest, and king of the church, was no better than theological jargon. Nothing, however, can be farther from the truth than this. Christ was expressly predicted to the ancient Israelites under each of these characters; and he actually sustains them in the work of our salvation. Moses foretold the coming of our Lord, under the character of a prophet, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet, from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me: unto him shall ye hearken." Accordingly our Saviour was recognised as being he of whom Moses spake. When the people had seen one of his miracles, they said—"This is the prophet that should come into the world?" and Peter, in the Acts, expressly applies the prediction of Moses to Christ.

Our Lord is also distinctly predicted as a priest, in the 110th
Lectures on the Shorter Catechism.

Psalm—"The Lord hath sworn and will not repent, thou art a priest forever, after the order of Melchisedeck." This prediction is quoted and applied to Christ by the author of the epistle to the Hebrews; and a considerable part of that epistle is employed, for the very purpose of showing in what a superior manner our Lord sustained and performed the office of a priest.

Again. In the 2d psalm, which is a continued prediction of the Messiah and his acts, Christ is represented as the anointed and reigning king of Zion—"I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion,"

Under this character the Messiah was, and indeed still is, looked for by the Jews—sadly mistaking, as they did and do, the nature of his kingdom, in supposing he was to be a temporal, and not a spiritual prince. Hence it was, that on one occasion they were about "to take him by force, and to make him a king."

You will be careful to notice that these offices of Christ, as mediator, relate to the state, character, and situation of mankind, as sinners—"The nature of our salvation required that it should be revealed by him as a prophet; purchased by him as a priest; and applied by him as a king."

His prophetical office, therefore, respects our ignorance; his priestly office our guilt; and his kingly office our pollution, defilement, and thraldom in sin: Accordingly, as a prophet he is made of God unto us wisdom; as a priest righteousness; as a king sanctification and complete redemption."

So also, in regard to the promises of God made to his people—"They are revealed by Christ as a prophet; confirmed by his blood as a priest; and effectually applied and fulfilled, by his power, as a king."

And here it may be proper just to mention, that all these offices did never centre in any one person but in Christ alone.—In order, as it would appear, to shew the unequaled dignity of our blessed and glorious Redeemer, none of those who were typical of him, under the Old Testament, were ever clothed with them all. Melchisedeck was a king and a priest; Moses was a ruler and a prophet; Jeremiah was a priest and a prophet; David was a king and a prophet; but Christ alone was prophet, priest and king.

It is only necessary farther to remark on the answer before us, that Christ did and does execute these several offices, both in his estate of humiliation on earth, and in his state of exaltation in heaven. Having done on earth whatever these offices here required, he hath gone to heaven, there to sustain them in the kingdom and temple of God above. The manner in which this is done, is explained in the three following answers—to the first of which we now proceed.

"Christ executeth the office of a prophet, in revealing to us, by his word and Spirit, the will of God for our salvation."

The office of a prophet is, to reveal and teach the counsel and will of God. Of the nature of prophecy in general, it would lead me too far from the subject immediately before us, to speak particularly. Yet it is an important subject in itself, and does not occur again in the very compendious system of theology given in the catechism. In Buck's Theological Dictionary, a work to which you may easily have access, under the word prophecy, you will find an extremely well written article, which I would recommend to your careful perusal. In the meantime, some leading ideas on the subject, will naturally mingle themselves in the discussion before us.

My children, we owe it entirely to our Lord Jesus Christ, in his prophetic character, that we have a Bible. "He executes the office of's het, (says the catechism) by aling to us the will of God for salvation?—in the first place,
his word." The Holy Spirit, third person in the adorable ity, is the immediate agent in ging prophetic communications
rdly to the minds of men.
ays the apostle Peter—prophecy came not in old
by the will of man; but holy of God spake as they were d by the Holy Ghost."—But essed Spirit, who proceedeth
the Father and the Son, is ordered, in this work, as the ment of Christ. This is expressly ot, or affirmed, by the very ule just quoted—Attend care-to the following passage. "Of salvation the prophets have red and searched diligently,
phesied of the grace which come unto you: Searching,
or what manner of time,
spirit of Christ which was in id signify, when it testified hand the sufferings of Christ,
he glory that should follow."-
we see that it was the Spirit
rist, which was in those holy
of God; who, in old time,
; as they were moved by the Ghost.

must observe that there have three dispensations of the cont of grace, Patriarchal, Mo-
, and Christian. Revelations made to prophets and holy from the very time of the first
acy. We are not told of the se manner in which a com-cation was made of the threat-
and doom pronounced on the or, nor of the gracious inti-don given to our first parents mediately after the fall, that the
of the woman should bruise
ertail's head: Yet we are ex-ly informed of the fact, that communications were made;
we have reason to believe, that faith of our first parents in imation of a Messiah to
was effectual to their salvation. We are expressly informed,
in the New Testament, that Enoch,
the seventh from Adam, was a prophet; and a part of his prophecy,
or the subject of it, is given us. Divine communications, after this,
were made to Noah, to Melchised-deck, to Abraham, to Isaac, to Jacob, to Joseph, and it is probable to several others, till the time of Moses.

Moses was the most eminent prophet of the dispensation to which he has given name. He wrote the first five books of the Bible, which from their number are denominated
the Pentateuch. He has given us the history of the creation, of the fall of man, of the antediluvian word, and of the church up to his own time. It is of no consequence to know, if it were possible to know—
which it is not—how much of this early history Moses might be able to give from authentick tradition;
which, before the use of letters and during the long lives of the antediluvians, was doubtless much more accurate than with us at present.
That much of these things was then known by tradition to others, as well as to Moses, there is no reason to question. But we are sure that the history of the creation itself could not be known to any mortal, but by a revelation from God: And if revealed, as it no doubt was, to Adam,
Moses, who wrote under the guidance of inspiration, was preserved from all error, in the account he gave, both of this and of subsequent events. In whatever manner his information was acquired,
whether by tradition or revelation,
or both, the portion that has come down to us was just as much as God saw meet to be put on record.
The whole, I repeat, was at least verified by an unerring revelation
to Moses; so that all errors of tradition, if errors there were, were corrected, and an account, free
from all inaccuracy, was thus secured, for the use of the Church to the end of time.
After Moses there was a succession of prophets—with some intervals between the death of one and the appearance of another—till the time of Malachi; which was about 400 years before the birth of Christ. Prophecy then ceased till the time of John Baptist.

(To be continued.)

ON THE ATONEMENT.

No. VI.

My dear Brother,—Agreeably to your promise, I am to show, in this letter,

III. That Christ, as our Redeemer, bore the penalty of the law, or endured the punishment of our sins.

It is admitted by the new school, that one person may suffer for another, but not that one can suffer the punishment due to another; and accordingly, while they affirm that Christ died and suffered for us, they strenuously deny that he was punished for us. "If," says one, "another person, of his own accord, offers to bear the suffering, which was due to me for my offences, he may do so. But it cannot be punishment to him. Punishment supposes guilt. He cannot take my actions upon himself, so that they shall become his own actions, and cease to be mine. He cannot become guilty without his own personal transgression. If he suffers in my place, therefore, his sufferings are not punishment to him."* This reminds me of the manner in which Dr. Fuller attempts to prove that the sufferings of our blessed Redeemer were not the punishment of our sins. It was done by the magic of a definition. His definition is this: "Punishment is natural evil inflicted for personal guilt." Admitting the definition to be correct, his point was gained. But suppose his definition to be altered so as to suit our taste, and to read thus: Punishment is natural evil inflicted for personal, or imputed sin: and what then becomes of his argument? To the author of the argument in the above quotation we readily concede that punishment supposes sin; but we deny what he maintains, that it always supposes personal transgression. Jesus Christ, it has been proved, had the sins of his people imputed to him, and thus became subject to the punishment of them. By this we do not mean, that he took their actions upon himself so that they became his own personal actions, and no longer the actions of his people. The absurdity of such a supposition has already been exposed. He consented to have them so charged to his account, that the punishment of them might be justly required of him. To maintain that punishment, in all cases, supposes personal guilt, is as unreasonable as to maintain that a person can never become responsible for any actions but his own personal actions. This, however, the common occurrences of civil life will prove unfounded. It is well known, that when a citizen has incurred the penalty of a violated law, and being unable to pay the fine, is liable to imprisonment, a friend may release him by assuming his obligation and paying his fine. When this is done there is no transfer of moral character; and no one is so absurd as to imagine the transaction implies that the offender's friend committed the trespass.

A man is apprehended as a murderer. He is tried, convicted, condemned to death, and finally executed. It cannot be denied that this man has suffered the punishment due to murder. Afterwards his innocence is proved beyond dispute; what will result? Will you say he suffered no punishment? No punishment! What greater punishment could he have suffered? He certainly did die under the imputation of murder; and to expiate

* Dialogues on Atonement, p. 20.
2. During a long course of ages this truth was typically held up to view in the daily sacrifices of the Jewish church; for it can hardly be denied that the animal victims were considered as dying in the place of the offerer, and as symbolically bearing his punishment. Now, the substance of this shadow was found in the great Antitype; Christ realized the idea that had been prefigured in the types.

3. The history of our Redeemer’s sufferings proves that he endured the penalty of the law. His sufferings began at his birth, extended through his life, and terminated only in his death. He suffered from poverty and hardship, from slander and persecution. He suffered from men and devils, from earth and heaven, from the hands of his enemies and the hands of his Father. He suffered both in body and in soul. In the garden of Gethsemane such was his amazement and consternation, and anguish of spirit, that he said to his disciples, “My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death;” and to his Father, “Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.” On the cross his sufferings were aggravated by every circumstance of shame and indignity that malice could invent; and to crown all, his Father hid his face from him, so that, in the bitterness of extreme sorrow, he exclaimed, “My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!” At last, having finished his awful sacrifice, he bowed his head and gave up the ghost.

Such were the Redeemer’s sufferings; and it is natural to ask, Why did he suffer? To reply, he suffered for us, or he suffered in consequence of sin, is saying no more than Socinians will say. The scriptural reply is, Christ, by his sufferings, endured the penalty of a violated law, and thus satisfied Divine justice for the sins of men. But our brethren, while they affirm he satisfied publick justice, by his sufferings, deny that he bore the penalty of the law. Their very nature, however, we think, evince the contrary.

For what is the penalty of the law? An inspired apostle shall answer the question: The wages of sin is death.” Rom. vii. 23. By death cannot be meant simply the separation of the soul and body. This term is used in scripture in a variety of senses. It signifies any great calamity. Speaking of the plague of locusts, Pharaoh said to Moses and Aaron, “Intreat the Lord your God, that he may take away this death only.” Exod. x. 17. It signifies circumstances of great danger: “The sorrows of death compassed, and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid.” Ps. xxviii. 4. It signifies great vexation or distress of mind: “And it came to pass, when she pressed him daily with her words, and urged him, so that his soul was vexed unto death, that he told her all his heart.” Jud. xvi. 16. Death, by which the apostle expresses what is the wages of sin, is a word of large import. It comprehends all the pains and sorrows, labours and toils, sufferings and miseries, which wicked men endure, either in this world or in the next; for all these, together with the death of the body, constitute the wages of sin, or the penalty of the divine law, when inflicted on impenitent offenders. How manifest then is it that Jesus Christ bore this penalty! All the pains and sorrows, all the sufferings and miseries that the law could demand from him, as the Surety of his people, in order to make expiation for their sins, he actually endured; and at last terminated his humiliation and sufferings by dying on the accursed tree.

4. As the Old Testament exhibited typically Messiah’s sufferings in this light, so the language of the New expressly ascribes to them this character. It speaks of them in terms so plain and decided, that it seems surprising how any can deny the truth now under investigation. The Son of God, the apostle tells us, “was made under the law, that he might redeem them that were under the law.” Gal. iv. 4, 5. How was Christ under the law? Just as they whom he came to redeem were under it. Sinners are under the law, both in respect to its preceptive requirements, and its penal demands; they are bound to obey the one, and to satisfy the other: and so was the Redeemer under the law; he voluntarily obligated himself to obey all the precepts of the moral law, and to satisfy all its penal demands by enduring its curse. Moreover, as the church was under the ceremonial law, when he appeared in the world, he submitted also to this law and all its institutions; and, as a token of his subjection to it was circumcised, although, as a perfectly holy man, he could, on his own account, be under no obligation to observe it.

The correctness of this interpretation may be confirmed by a passage in the 46th Psalm, as explained in the 10th chap. of the epistle to the Hebrews. “Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened: burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required. Then said I, Lo I come in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart.” By the will of God in the 6th verse, the Saviour doubtless means, as he explains it in the next member of that verse, the law of God. Now, he declares that he delighted to do this will, or to fulfill the law; or as the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews shows that this will or law of God referred especially to the Saviour’s sacrifice of himself; or, in other words, to his sufferings, it will follow, that he considered himself under obligation to obey the divine law in this respect.—In pre-
On the Atonement.

Of delight, because it was red by the law of his God.

appears, then, from these texts, the Redeemer voluntarily submitted himself to the penal demands of the divine law; and consequently was legally bound to endure penalty. That he actually fulfilled his engagements and bore the penalty is plainly and unequivocally asserted by the apostle Paul. "Christ," says he, "hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being a curse for us." Gal. iii. 13, it seems so plain as almost to preclude any reasoning on it. The curse of the law was its penalty, and to say Christ was made a curse for us is equivalent to saying he was made a punishment; for the penalty of the law, but punishment it denounces against transgressors? The meaning of the curse, in the first part of the cannot be disputed; nor can just reason be assigned for giving the same term, in the second part, a different meaning. But it is said that Christ was made a curse, our brethren contend the expression is figurative. Granted; yet it be remembered it is used to convey a very important truth. "The carnal mind," says the same writer, "is enmity against God;" which doubtless is a figurative expression; for no one will believe he intended to teach that the mind of man is really enmity, in the abstract. In using this strong expression, undoubtedly designed to inform us that the carnal mind is in a state of perpetual enmity to God, highly and directly opposed to his holy will.

What less can the inspired writer mean, by saying Christ was made a curse for us, than that he really endured the curse or penalty of the law for us? for if Christ not bear the curse or penalty of law, but merely suffered for us, could not with any propriety be considered as somewhat diverse from his suffering God's wrath. For his suffering, wrath consisted more in the sense he had of the dreadfulness of the punishment of sin, or of God’s wrath inflicted for it. Thus Christ was tormented, not only in the fire of God’s wrath, but in the fire of our sins; and our sins were his tormentors: the evil and malignant nature of sin was what Christ endured immediately, as well as more remotely, in bearing the consequences of it."

I think, my dear friend, I may now say that, by plain and decisive scriptural testimonies, the following points have, in this and the preceding letter, been proved; namely:

1. That Jesus Christ was constituted the substitute of sinners.
2. That he was charged with the sins of his people; and,
3. That he sustained the penalty of the law, or bore the punishment due to their sins.

It must then follow, conclusively, that his sufferings were a real and full satisfaction to Divine justice, and that he actually paid the price of our redemption. How remarkable that passage in the epistle to the Romans! “Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time, his righteousness, that he might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.” Rom. iii. 25, 26. From this text it is a clear inference, that if Christ had not become a propitiation for sin; if his blood had not been shed for the remission of it, and he had not interposed to turn away Divine wrath from believers; if he had not brought in his righteousness, Jehovah could not consistently with the demands of his justice, have pardoned and justified any of our race: but that now, through the satisfaction made by the death of Christ to the demands of his justice, and that complete righteousness which he has wrought out, he can, in the remission of the sins of believers, and in their justification, display not only his boundless mercy, but his inflexible justice.

To you, my friend, and to me, it is matter of surprise, that our brethren do, in the face of such plain testimonies of scripture, assert that the Redeemer did not pay any real price for our redemption. I shall not here repeat the texts quoted in my fourth letter, (page 246) to show how frequently and expressly the inspired writers use this very term, and other cognate words. I would only ask, what language can be plainer? Is it figurative? Was not the blood of Christ real? Was not the church, the object of his purchase, real? Was there not a real exchange? Did he not really give his life, his blood, for his people? Are we not told that "in this end Christ died and revived and rose again, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living?"

I shall close this letter with two extracts from the writings of President Edwards, for whom our brethren profess so great a veneration.

Illustrating the nature of the atonement by referring to the Jewish sacrifices, he says, "If there was nothing of true and real atonement and sacrifice in those beasts that were offered, then doubtless they were an evidence, that there was to be some other greater sacrifice, which was to be a proper atonement or satisfaction, and of which they were only the presages and signs; as those symbolical actions which God sometimes commanded the prophets to perform, were signs and presages of great events which they foretold. This proves that a sacrifice of infinite value was necessary, and that God would accept of no other. For an atonement that bears no proportion to the offence, is no atonement. An atonement carries in it a payment or satisfaction in the very nature of it.* Vol. viii. p. 526.
If satisfaction was so little necessary, that the divine Majesty admitted one that bears no atonement at all to the offence, i.e., wholly equivalent to nothing, compared with the offence, so was no payment or satisfaction at all; then he might have forsook sin without any atonement. Re-again: “It cannot here be readily objected, that God is not capable of properly receiving any satisfaction for an injury; because not capable of receiving any profit; that a price offered to men for an injury, because it truly be a price to them, or a wholesome; but that God is capable of receiving a benefit. God is as capable of receiving action as injury. It is true, he cannot properly be profited; so er can he properly be hurt. As rebelling against him may be hourly looked upon as of the nature of an injury or wrong done to him, and so God is capable of being object of injuriousness; so capable of being the object of which is the opposite of injuriousness, or the repairing of an injury.

If you say, what need is there God have any care for repairing the honour of his majesty when he do him no good, and no advantage can be made to his happiness? You might as well say, what is there that God care when despised and dishonoured, and authority and glory trampled down, does he no hurt? A president then goes on to prove, that the natural dictates of conscience, and from the light of reason, Jehovah demands a repair of the evil of sin, not merely in that it is injurious to the happiness of his creatures, but chiefly regard due to his own insulted self.

Sincerely and affectionately,

Yours, &c.

c. viii. p. 530, 531.
c. viii. p. 633.

IV.—Ch. Adv.
from them in some points of speculation, or habits of action. For it is not easy to conceive that such a difference as this can be altogether prevented, unless the whole human race should partake of the same education, and be placed in the same condition of life; nay, unless they should receive the same constitutional temperament—to influence, as it always will, in some degree, the system of affections, passions, and original cast of thought. It is difficult to believe that this will ever take place in this world; and assuredly it is not necessary that it should. Imperfect as the feelings of Christian charity and benevolence now are, we notwithstanding witness a few rare but lovely examples, both of ministers of the gospel and private Christians, eminently pious, but of different denominations and of varying opinions on the unessentials of religion—loving each other with great cordiality; holding occasional intercourse with each other in delightful conversation on the great topicks of practical piety; rejoicing in each other's success in all efforts to promote the gospel; aiding those efforts, so far as they conscientiously can and their means will permit; and joyfully anticipating the happy meeting which they mutually expect to have with their Christian brethren, in the mansions of perfect concord, purity and peace. Only suppose mankind in general to have a good portion more than these exemplary Christians possess of their temper and spirit, and that additional approximation of sentiment which, without reaching to perfect union, such a temper and spirit would certainly produce, and we imagine a Millennium, as perfect probably, as any that will ever exist on earth.

The preceding thoughts have arisen in the mind of the writer, in meditating on the question which is expressed in the title of this paper—how shall we maintain both truth and charity? It is believed that an answer to the question is intimated in the suggestions already offered. Let every individual hold firmly, every thing, essential or unessential, important or unimportant, which he believes to be truth; and no doubt will be done in the Millennial age. But let every man distinguish between what he considers as essentials and nonessentials, or as important and unimportant; and let him, with something like the charity of the glorious period to which Christians look forward, love those from whom he differs in smaller matters, rejoice in their joy, and wish well to their endeavours to promote the Redeemer's kingdom—In this manner he may maintain both truth and charity.

It will readily be perceived that the writer is no friend to that misnamed charity which places all religious opinions on a level, and holds that it is no matter what a man believes. No truly; he is not only no friend to such a charity as this, but he can have no fellowship with any one who is. He believes that there are essential truths and doctrines in religion, and that he who rejects these rejects religion itself; and is entitled to no other charity than that which consists in praying for his conversion from the error of his ways, and in doing all that is practicable to promote it. The writer farther believes, that there are truths and doctrines in the revealed system of Theology which, although they may not be absolutely essential to salvation, yet are highly important—so important that they must not, and by a truly conscientious person, cannot be compromised—They must be retained and provided for, in a system of church fellowship and ecclesiastical order. The writer believes it to be a very weak and superficial remark, however common, that we should be willing to have church communion on earth with all those whom we hope to meet in hea aven, we know that harmonious union will be complete, and God will be worshipped and adored without the intervention of ances. On earth the opinions of very good men, at least in recent age of the world, may and often are, so discordant that they cannot walk together comfortably church fellowship ecclesiastical order, because they are not agreed. They are not in regard to the nature of ordinances, the proper recitation of these ordinances, and the mode of their administration, are not agreed how a church must be constituted, organized, and governed. Hence it is more comfortable, more convenient to peace and edification, for good men to look out several those with whom they can harmonize with the greatest cordiality, form bonds of union with them, leave others to do the same. It is more comfortable to do this, for the whole to be amalgamated into one mass, in which, although every constituent part is seasoned by Divine grace, still are so many discordant materials, that close and solid, with all its beneficial effects, never take place.

It is undoubtedly true that, good must often "agree to differ," regard to non-essential and unimportant points in a religious system, and that there may be, and frequently has been, a faulty extreme arrow mindedness and tenacious, relative to things of little moment. As to this, no fixed rule can be given. The matter must be left to the influence which various degrees of hedge, of a truly charitable Christian temper, and of intercourse, with different religious denominations, will always on different minds. Some will it easy and pleasant to wave important, what others cannot with a good conscience regard in this light. Still, it should be remembered, that no man is at liberty to treat as falsehood, any thing that he believes to be truth. He is to hold all truth as truth—Yet while he does this, and while he allows his brother the equal privilege of doing the same, the two may and ought to look out for the truths in which they are agreed, and if they find that these embrace all that they think essential, and much moreover which, though not essential, they deem important, so that the points which remain are comparatively of very inferior moment, they may and will cordially love each other; and will have with each other that fellowship, or communion of saints, which consists in cherishing the same holy affections, desires, pursuits and expectations.

In pursuing the train of thought which is now before the reader, the writer has had constantly in his eye, the ultimate resolution of the following questions—Ought Christians of different denominations, who regard each other as holding the essentials of religions—and especially if they mutually consider each other as holding almost all that is important—to endeavour to amalgamate with each other, so as to break down all visible distinctions, be called by one name, and act together as one body? Or will they better consult their own peace and edification, and more promote the cause of God in the world, if, while they retain and carefully cultivate the spirit of brotherly love, and aid and encourage each other in doing good, they maintain their separate standings, and distinctive characters as religious denominations? The writer answers decisively in the negative, to the former of these questions; and in the affirmative to the latter—with a reservation for some distinction or explanation. He explains thus—If the differences between religious denominations are found, on examination, to be only nominal and not real; or if in any respect real, still in the estimation of all concerned of very small practical import, the amalgamation of such sects may be advisable. Yet even in this case, there should be no precipitancy, no forcing of a union—The parties should continue separate till they, in a sort, imperceptibly fall into one: otherwise alienation, and not genuine harmony, will probably be the result. The human mind cannot be forced, it must act spontaneously: and this is more sensibly true with conscientious persons than with any other; and on the subject of religion it is the most sensible of all—In regard to the expediency of amalgamation, there is likewise another consideration that deserves a very careful attention. It is, whether amalgamation will not produce a body too large for the greatest efficiency. It is unquestionably true that, to a certain extent, "Union is strength." But it is equally true, that beyond a certain extent, "Union is weakness." The Roman empire fell by its own weight, and the Romish church—happily for the world—lost much of its influence, because it could not act with energy from its centre to its extremities—"Pax est ab hoste doceri." When any church, however pure, extends over such a range of territory that it cannot act with vigour, it would be advantageous to divide the body—to divide it, not as to doctrine, discipline, forms or feelings, but so that each part should act separately. In this event, a provision should be made for correspondence, and, in certain cases, for concert and co-operation. Correspondence, concert and co-operation, among religious bodies where there is unity of sentiment, may be carried to any extent whatever; but amalgamation, to be efficient, must be limited.

(To be concluded in our next.)

---

From the Christian Observer for A 1826.

BISHOP KENNY’S MIDNIGHT HYMN

Mr Geo. now I from sleep awake,
The sole possession of me take;
From midnight terrors me secure,
And guard my heart from thoughts pure.

Bless’d Angels, while we silent lie,
You hallelujahs sing on high;
You joyful hymn the Ever Blest,
Before the throne, and never rest.

I with your choir celestial join,
In offering up a hymn divine:
With you in heav’n I hope to dwell,
And bid the night and world farewell.

My soul, when I shake off this dust,
Lo, in thy arms I will entreat;
O make me thy peculiar care,
Some mansion for my soul prepare.

Give me a place at thy saints’ feet,
Or some fall’n angel’s vacant seat;
I’ll strive to sing as loud as they,
Who sit above in brighter day.

O may I always ready stand,
With my lamp burning in my hand!
May I in sight of heav’n rejoice,
Where'er I hear the bridegroom’s voice.

All praise to thee, in light array’d,
Who light thy dwelling-place vast,
A boundless ocean of bright beams,
From thy all-glorious Godhead stream.

The sun, in its meridian height,
Is very darkness in thy sight:
My soul, O lighten, and inflame,
With thought and love of thy great name.

Bless’d Jesu, thou, on heav’n intent,
Whole nights hast in devotion spent;
But I, frail creature, soon am tire’d,
And all my zeal is soon expir’d.

My soul, how canst thou weary grow,
Of antedating bliss below,
In sacred hymns, and heavenly love,
Which will eternal be above?

Shine on me, Lo, new life impart,
Fresh arduous kindle in my heart.
One ray of thy all-quick’ning light,
Dispels the sloth and clouds of night.

Lo, in the tempter’s wile surprise,
Watch over thine own sacrifices.
All loose, all idle thoughts cast out,
And make my very dreams devout.

Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him, all creatures here below;
Praise Him above, ye heav’nly host;
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.
FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THE SPIRITUALITY OF GOD.

The importance of speculative opinions upon religious subjects, is much greater than is generally imagined. Men possessed of a revelation from God, are evidently under obligation to believe the truth which that revelation contains. Apart from this consideration however, the nature of some of these truths, and our deep interest in them, render correct opinions concerning them, peculiarly important. The character of God, for instance, is a subject which demands our most careful attention, and concerning which, no error can with propriety be esteemed slight or unimportant. As God is possessed of every possible perfection, surely it is no light matter to entertain any notion which is derogatory to his character. Voluntary ignorance and careless misconceptions upon this subject, are incompatible with that reverence for God which right reason dictates and true religion inspires.

Upon this subject, however, solemn and important as it is, men are peculiarly prone to err. Here the weakness of their minds and the wickedness of their hearts, conspire to lead them astray. The idea of a being of immaculate holiness, and of inflexible justice, to whom we are accountable, is too alarming to the wiser conscious of his guilt, to be cordially received. The natural man does not like to retain God in his knowledge. And besides this unwillingness to conceive at all of God, men labour under a mental debility, with regard to this sublime subject of contemplation. To conceive of a real existence, infinite and immense, possessed of no form and confined to no place, requires a vigorous mental effort—an effort from which the human mind is prone to recoil, and to rest upon something more palpable and commensurate with its powers.

The history of our race, even when placed under circumstances the most favourable to mental elevation, affords lamentable evidence of the truth of these remarks. The world by wisdom has never known God. The light of science, which burned so brightly in ancient Greece and Rome, served only to render more distinctly visible, the moral darkness which brooded over those polished nations. The genius of Homer, which upon most subjects soared with a vigour and glowed with a brilliancy seldom equalled, and perhaps by uninspired man never surpassed, was bewildered amid the mazes of their mythology, and has wrought into immortal verse the most childish and impious fables. The finest productions of the chisel and the pencil, although they were evidently conceived by minds tenderly alive to the sublime and beautiful of nature, and were almost quickened into life by the magic touches of genius, were executed by gross idolators; and many of them were consecrated to an impious and groveling superstition. The Bible has ever been the only source of rational religion. The character of the Deity as it is drawn in the holy scriptures, exhibits the sublime conception that the human mind ever formed. To the Supreme Being the sacred writers have attributed every excellence, natural and moral, and from him they have removed all imperfection, even in its slightest degrees.

Men destitute of this revelation from God, have not only been prone to misrepresent his character or attributes, but have almost universally misapprehended his very nature or essence. The traces of the notion of the spirituality of God, which are discoverable in the various systems of Paganism, are few and faint.
while the grossest idolatry forms the leading feature of the most of these systems. The most refined nations "have changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things." Even the chosen people of God, whom he awed and instructed by the solemn scenes of Sinai, were strangely inclined to this gross and fundamental error. Scarcely had the thunder of the second commandment died upon their ears, when they were stupid and presumptuous enough to attempt to represent by a golden calf, that being of whom they had seen no similitude, and whose very voice had thrilled them with insupportable terror. And during the succeeding period of their national existence, their faithful historian has recorded their repeated relapses from the true religion, into the idolatry of the surrounding nations. There have also been men, who under the still clearer light of the gospel, have adopted and promulgated erroneous opinions upon the spirituality of God. Even Milton, as appears by his lately discovered work, notwithstanding his familiarity with the lofty representations of the scripture, was led by a very fallacious principle of interpretation, to adopt the views of the humanitarians, and to conceive of the Deity as incumbered with materiality, and limited by form.

Still, however, the spirituality of God, is evidently a doctrine both of natural and revealed religion. The opinions of the anthromorphites, or humanitarians, are plainly at variance with all our notions of the absolute perfection of God. For surely it is rendering God imperfect, to ascribe to him any of the qualities of matter. If God is possessed of a bodily form and of material limbs, he is not in his essence immutable. It is true that his omnipotence might secure him from being affected by any external cause. This, however, would be to make his immutability the result of his power, and not one of the properties of his essence. The opinions in question are also irreconcilable with the immensity and omnipresence of God. As impenetrability is one of the essential properties of matter, if God is possessed of a body, he cannot be present in that portion of space which is occupied by any other body. To form a conception of God, therefore, as possessed of a bodily form, is profanely to limit and circumscribe his immensity.

The spirituality of God is taught in the scriptures, both implicitly and expressly. Many of the perfections which are therein ascribed to him, necessarily imply this doctrine. And the apostle Paul distinctly announced from Mars' Hill to the idolatrous Athenians, that "forasmuch as they were the offspring of God, they ought not to think that the Godhead was like to gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art or man's device." He is styled the "invisible God." "Who only hath immortality—dwelling in light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see." 1 Tim. vi. 16. And our Saviour, according to the record of the apostle John, expressly asserted that "God is a spirit." John iv. 24. It is true that Socinus has attempted to pervert this plain assertion, but his crude criticism has been ably exposed by De Moore.

Holy men of old, are indeed said to have been favoured with visions of God. God at times seems to have manifested himself to them by significant emblems; or to have impressed upon their minds an ecstatic sense of his immediate presence and of his exceeding greatness. At other times, the Word which was God, which was made flesh and dwell among us, appears to have assumed a human form, and to have given intimations of his future incarnation. A scene of this kind is recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Judges, where Manoah is expressly said to have "seen God." Thus also the Lord—Jehovah—(whose name is incomunicable to his creatures) seems to have appeared to Abraham in the plains of Mamre. Gen. 18 chap. It is moreover true, that the vision of God is promised to his people as the consummation of their future blessedness. But this may imply nothing more than a clear perception and the full enjoyment of God. Thus in the language of scripture, to "see life," is to possess or enjoy life. There is no doubt however, that the promise will be more literally fulfilled in the mansions above; and that the glorious character of the invisible Father, will be seen beaming in the face of his incarnate Son, who is the brightness of his glory and the express image, or exact representation, of his person; the sight of whom will diffuse through the throng of the blessed, the most rapturous felicity.

Again—We are informed that man was created in the image, and after the likeness of God. The image of God, however, in which man was created, we believe to have consisted chiefly in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness; and to have been of such a nature, that it was capable of being effaced; and accordingly we believe that it has actually been effaced by sin. These sentiments, we think, are clearly implied in the exhortations of the Apostle Paul, contained in his Epistle to the Colossians, iii. 10, and in that to the Ephesians; iv. 24. The Anthropomorphites found their principal argument upon the fact, that the actions and members of the human body are expressly ascribed to God in the Scriptures. While this is granted, it is contended that such expressions are manifestly figurative; because a literal interpretation of them would contradict some of the plainest doctrines of the Bible, and some of the clearest principles of reason. The adoption of such forms of speech is perfectly consistent with the vivid and figure manner of the sacred writers; nay, it was absolutely necessary that, in describing the character and actions of God, they should adopt this anthropopathy—this language adapted to human passions and actions. Men, however sublime the subject upon which they are addressed, must be addressed in the language of men. Of the mode of the Divine subsistence, of his pure essence, of his spiritual nature and actions, we cannot distinctly conceive; much less have we language to describe them. All those terms which we apply to the phenomena of our own minds, are metaphorical, and were originally confined to objects of sense. "Immateriality supplies no images, we cannot show spirits acting without the instruments of action—we must therefore invest them with form and matter, when we would discourse of them." It is clear, therefore, that nothing ought to be inferred from these figurative expressions, which is inconsistent with the more explicit language of Scripture. These expressions are, moreover, incapable of that construction for which the Anthropomorphites contend. For though the sacred writers have ascribed to God some of the members of the human body, yet they have, at the same time, attributed such properties and qualities to these members, as are utterly inconsistent with the properties of matter. While God himself is clearly represented as omnipresent, his eyes discern the operations of the spirits of men, and to his ears, their thoughts are audible.

But it may be asked; Of what practical importance is this mysterious doctrine? Is it not a subject apt to excite arid, barren, and sceptical speculations, rather than the genial glow of contemplative piety? What new light will investigations upon this subject probably shed upon the real nature or essence of God? Ought we to venture, with the short line of human reason, to sound this fathomless depth? Would it not be safer and more reverential, to acquiesce in a quiet indifference upon this subject, than to pry into it with inquisitiveness? "Can we by searching find out God? Can we find out the Almighty to perfection? It is as high as heaven, what can we do? Deeper than hell, what can we know?"

To these suggestions it may be replied, that although God is exalted infinitely above our comprehension, and although our thoughts and speculations upon his being and character ought to be tempered with the deepest humility and awe, yet it cannot be inconsistent with our duty towards him, diligently to examine the revelation, which he himself has given us, of his own nature and character. On the contrary, a willingness to remain ignorant of any of his perfections, betrays a want of esteem and reverence for the greatest and best of Beings. It is to be feared that many persons, through ignorance and inattention, dishonour God by entertaining unworthy thoughts of him, as much as by habitual forgetfulness of his presence. And although until death, at least, we must remain entirely ignorant of the essence, or peculiar nature of God, (as indeed of every thing else) still, we ought carefully to entertain the most exalted sentiments with regard to his character, both natural and moral. This is a material part of that spiritual worship which we owe him. If then God has revealed himself to be a Spirit, it becomes a high moral duty to believe him to be such; and to aim at as distinct an apprehension of this revealed truth, as it is possible for us to attain. Nor will the distinct apprehension, cordial belief, and frequent contemplation of this truth, have the least tendency to diminish our reverence for God, or to encourage a presumptuous curiosity with regard to his character. On the contrary, having by these means become more deeply impressed with the idea of his mysterious and incomprehensible nature, we shall be led to distrust the mere light of reason, and more highly to prize that of Divine revelation. Much of that crude, as well as unholy speculation, in which some men indulge, about the inconsistency of the plurality of persons with the unity of essence in the Deity, seems to arise from gross conceptions of this incomprehensible essence. And undoubtedly, indistinct and erroneous views of the spirituality of God, must have formed the first step, in the fatal progress of men from the pure Theism of Adam and of Noah, to all the absurdity and impiety of Polytheism and idolatry. Mr. Locke has remarked that, "though few profess themselves Anthromorphites, yet we find many among the ignorant, of that opinion." And perhaps the figurative representations of the Deity which the sacred writers have necessarily adopted, although they are remarkably expressive and lofty, may have a tendency to engender in the debased minds of men, some indistinct and half-formed views of this kind. Especially in the solemn duty of prayer, there is a propensity in the human mind to embody the object of its addresses, and thus to worship a mental image. We conclude, therefore, that the spirituality of God is as important doctrine of Scripture; and that, as on this subject we are peculiarly exposed to error, we ought to be peculiarly careful, lest we herein dishonour the living God. Our conceptions of him will indeed always be inadequate, yet still, as far as they extend, they may be just. He who grows in spirituality and holiness of temper, will increase in right apprehensions of the infinite and holy God; and will be making a happy advance, in preparation for that blissful state, in which "he shall see as he is seen, and know as he is known." Q. &
IN EUROPE FOR HEALTH IN
BY AN AMERICAN CLERGY-OF THE SYNOD OF PHILADEL-
Continued from p. 258.)

Bagnieres, July 13, 1820.

Dear Friend,—My last, was to Toulouse; where I re-
but a short time after I I was very anxious to this place, in hopes that might receive what I have rendering in pursuit of—hi-with small success. This was increased, from a sen-
ing back in my health, ex-ured during the short space of ays spent at Toulouse. I this is to be imputed to unfavourable weather,
ly cold, damp, and windy,
ed up the period of my
ere. On the morning of the June, I again mounted the
, at early dawn, and set his place; which is about iles distant from Toulouse.
 privilege of seeing the
I took my place with the ur in the cabriolet, which is front of the coach, on the

But in truth, my feeble rendered me very indiffer-
all that was to be seen.
fortified abundantly with
and wrapped in my great suffered a good deal until 10 o’clock. Doubtless, ciency of animal heat was cause; and doubtless,
cause ought to be im-
good measure, the evil
have made, and feel dis-make, of the cold and raw-
the French climate, in the past. I think it fair to set own, as ill qualified to the case. Very likely an man, and (it is from Eng-chiefly, I believe, that we ceived our information on ject of the French climate) ast health, accustomed to the
and chill atmosphere of his native island—his mind cheered with the variety and novelty presented during his travel, and perhaps occasionally elevated with the abundance of good wine, every where to be had at a cheap rate—
would make report of the climate of this country, just the reverse of what my feelings would dictate.
They who would judge and act correctly, ought to guard against being the dupes of their feelings,
in more things than climate.

Our first day’s travel was through a fine country—level and fertile.
The roads, like all the main roads
I have seen in France, very fine.
While the sun was yet some hours
high, we stopped for the night at St. Ganden’s, which is, I think, a handsome place. The next day, as we approached the Pyrenees, we got into a hill country,—poor and ill cultivated. Here I saw more woods than I have anywhere else seen in France. We passed some orchards of chestnut trees, planted in rows, exactly like apple trees with
you. We passed through a number of towns and villages, many of which were very shabby, and indicated no improvement for generations past. At one large market town, where the stage made some delay, I was gratified with the exhibition of a fair, such as is common in European towns; but the first that has happened to fall in my way. It presented a new scene, and one that was not a little amusing. The whole place was gorged,
with variety that was endless;
through which you could scarcely make your way. At one part, the townpeople had their stalls, exhibiting every kind of goods and merchandise, which the country peopole might need to carry to the ountry. At another place, every thing that was movable, seemed gathered from the country into the —horses, cows, sheep, and hogs, grain of all kinds, implements of usbandry, and marketing of every description—All was bustle and activity, buying, selling, and bartering, with a hubbub of noise and strangeness of language, which made me think of ancient Babel. But the item of greatest curiosity, was the uncouth appearance of the outlandish multitude; the entire opposite of the polish and refinement, usually considered characteristic of French people. The great majority were women, whose swarthy complexions and toil-worn features, made me feel for the degraded state of their sex. Their dress was of the coarsest fabric. Their heads were covered with hoods of woollen cloth, from which a cape descended half a yard long, around the shoulders; while the face was without an atom of protection from the sun or wind. The men were dressed in a style equally distant from modern taste. On some of them I observed hats with small crowns, just the shape of the head, and large brims, held by loops attached to the crown; such as I recollect to have seen in our country, near forty years ago. The principal French people known in the United States, are, I suppose, from Paris, or from the cities and country on the sea-board, who have taken their habits of dress and behaviour from the capital. To judge of all French people from this sample, would be an egregious mistake. Nothing, it seems to me, is farther from refinement of manners and appearance, than the half barbarous population which I have seen collected at this and other places, on this route. Improvement of every kind must progress extremely slow, among a people greatly deficient in education and traveling; and among whom strangers seldom mingle. Even their language will undergo little change. Hence the dialect of these distant provinces is so entirely different from modern French, that it is almost another tongue. Even Frenchmen, from other parts, unless they have learned it, do not understand it. No doubt the priesthood, who watch so diligently against every appearance of innovation in religion, have an unhappy influence in retarding improvement in other particulars.
2 Y

About the middle of the afternoon we arrived at Tarbs; which is really a handsome town, of considerable size. It appears more modern in its construction than most towns I have passed. The streets are wide and airy. A fine stream of water, called the Adour, passes through it. The range of the lofty Pyrenees, whose dark blue summits had risen to our view in the distant horizon a good while before, appeared here quite at hand, towering to a majestic height. At Tarbs the publick stage stopped; and a fellow passenger, whose residence is at Bagnieres, and I, procured a hack, which brought us on here about sundown. Bagnieres is about ten miles from Tarbs, up a valley of great beauty and fertility; which is formed by an opening in the mountain, and which gradually narrows as it proceeds, until at the town of Bagnieres, it is scarcely half a mile wide. You will readily conceive, that alone, dispirited, and without an individual who feels the slightest care for me, taking up a temporary residence at every new place, must be attended with some unpleasant feelings. So I find it; and particularly so on my arrival here, where I had but one letter of introduction, and that to a Roman Catholic family, from whom I expected very little. It was evening when I arrived, and seldom have I found myself in a more cheerless mood, than when, after moping about the hotel till dark, I retired to my chamber, there alone, to reimize on the past, the present, and future. But it is worth while to be in any situation of trial and privation, in which Providence may place us, for sake of the advantage to be derived from exercising the faith, which the Divine promises... always warrant. It is worth while to be a stranger in a strange land, for sake of knowing the consolation which results from laying hold on that great Being, who hath promised "to preserve the stranger," as well as "to relieve the fatherless and widow." Could I have improved it rightly, this is a source of comfort always at hand, and always adequate to the exigency of the case.

The next morning I was introduced by the landlord to an English captain, living on his half-pay, as he represented himself, who stayed at the hotel. He manifested nothing of the reserve I have generally found in his countrymen at first acquaintance. Having learned the object of my coming to Bagneres, he tendered his services with the utmost frankness, and proceeded, forthwith, to take me under his direction. Before I had expressed any wish on the subject, he had sent for a physician, to prescribe relative to the water I should drink, and where I should bathe. Very soon I became quite disgusted with him. His appearance strongly indicated a broken down character; and his conversation was mingled with so much profanity and obscenity, as rendered it utterly abominable. His physician I suspected to be a bon companion of his own. He had been an old surgeon in Bonaparte’s army. As soon as possible, without giving offence, I disengaged myself from both. After hearing the prescription of the physician, I gave him a small fee, which was received very gratefully—intimating at the same time, that if I wished farther consultation, I would send for him. I afterwards consulted another physician, whose standing I had first ascertained, relative to taking the waters, and from whom I received a very different prescription.

By means of information received from Dr. Thomas of Toulouse, I have found out an apothecary who speaks English, and whose house is as pleasantly situated as any in the place. With him I have hired a furnished chamber, for which I pay four dollars per week; and in addition, the market cost of what is brought to my table—the cooking being done in the family, without charge. Such is a common custom of the place. A great part of the inhabitants of the town receive their principal subsistence, by hiring out their chambers, furnished, to strangers who come to take the waters; and those who occupy them, have their victuals cooked in the house; or they repair for their meals to restaurateurs, or eating houses, with which the place is well provided.

I have been here now four weeks, and notwithstanding the dejection and ill bodings in which I was rather disposed to indulge at the outset, find myself more comfortable than I have been at any period since I have been in France. Through Mons. Camus, the apothecary, at whose house I stay, I have become acquainted with an Irish lady and her family, the widow of a rector in the Episcopal church, who resided in Dublin. Her eldest son, who is here also, is studying divinity. In this good lady and her agreeable family, I have found such society as I needed. As there is no Protestant worship to attend on the Sabbath, I have been allowed to exercise something like ministerial functions, in giving exhortation, and performing worship, every Sabbath afternoon in her house. Through her son, I have become acquainted with an English gentleman, of the mercantile class; who, for sake of society, has left his former residence, and taken a chamber in the house with me. He speaks French, is moral, sensible, and very complaisant. Besides, his untiring loquacity, in which he is rather an exception from the English character, makes him a companion, in one respect, equal to some half dozen. Thus I am liberally provided for, in one very important article—society. And in addition to all, which is better than all, I find myself much recruited, and feel more like being in progress towards restoration, than I have been for years past. Shortly after coming here, I once more commenced the use of flesh in my diet; and have been enabled to persevere in it, I think with good effect. Surely I have the greatest reason to be thankful to that great Being "who feeds the young ravens when they cry to him, and without whom a sparrow cannot fall to the ground;" who thus makes "goodness and mercy to follow me," as if I was really one of those who fear Him, though I fall so utterly short in gratitude and duty.

I should like very much to give you some correct idea of this same Bagneries, which as an item of curiosity, falls short of no other place I have yet seen in this interesting country. The town itself is indeed, all things considered, but a paltry place; and it is astonishing to me, that considering the attraction of its waters, which have given it celebrity since the days of the Romans, (and how long before nobody knows,) it should still be little more than a village, containing (I speak by guess) about two or three thousand inhabitants. There is not one habitation in it, whose exterior indicates superior elegance; nor is there in its environs, one country seat that attracts notice. There is one establishment, as a publick boarding house, and but the one, which is at this time being refitted; and when completed in style, according to its progress so far, will be superb in its accommodations. The mayor of the town gave a splendid ball at its opening, since I have been here. Strangers generally were invited. I was honoured with a ticket. Any temptation however, which I might have felt to gratify curiosity, by being a looker on upon the occasion, was at once repressed, from the circumstance of its being on the evening of the Sabbath. This will give you an idea of the religion of the place, where publick feeling would tolerate such an outrage on the sanctity of the Lord's day.

It is the scenery around Bagneries which has enchanted me, beyond any thing I have ever yet seen, in all the productions either of nature or art. I have mentioned that the town stands in a valley, formed by the projecting spurs of the mountain, which at the town close in, so as to narrow the valley to about half a mile in width. Directly alongside of the town, the mountain rises from the valley by an abrupt and steep ascent, towering to a vast height. This steep face of the mountain is one continued thicket of trees and brush-wood, equal to any thing an American woods can show; so that you can see into it, or out of it, only a very short distance. Up the face of this precipice, art has formed roads, with great labour, winding in zigzag directions, so as to make an easy ascent to the top. As you ascend, you are encompassed with a shade, so thick as to hide almost every thing from your view, but the road, before and behind; and are completely protected from the scorching rays of the sun, at all hours of the day. When you arrive at the top, you find it entirely bare, and the whole world seems at once to open upon you. Standing on the brow of the mountain, you are able to see over the thicket that hides its rugged ascent, and to look down on the town of Bagneries, which, with its whole arrangement, is completely under your view, far below. Looking up and down the valley, you see it in both directions (a beautiful small river winding through it) as far as your eye can carry you, with all its thickly planted habitations and variety of cultivation. Some idea of the ex-
Travels in Europe for Health in 1820.

If prospect, as well as popular of the country seen, may be
from the fact, that eleven and villages can be distinguished,
within the range of vision. Looking towards on the south, you find your-just on the verge of a world of ains—Pyrenees towering be-Pyrenees, in long succession,
the tops of the more distant
are seen glistening white snow. But what is better
all, is the lightness and purity mountain air. The weather
up, shortly after my arri-
as generally been fine, and it seem that there is somein the nature of the atmos-
upon the mountains, that renit exhilarating, beyond any I ever experienced. No
the beauty of the prospect has its effect on the animal and possibly my nervous from its debility, may have ability that renders it more excited. It is a fact, how-that I have never ascended fty elevation, without feeling
an exhilaration of spirits,
for a few days at first, was hing like incipient intoxica-Half my time, from day to d been spent in wandering
one mountain peak to an-joying that change of pros-
which change of position fur-
. The extended surface of ountain may itself be called a tainous country—sinking into valleys and rising into lofty
. The mountains are devoted orage, and appear to make a ge for all kinds of animals.
of horses, cows, sheep, goats,
gs, are here under the care of men. I have some opportunity ning acquaintance with pasto-
and verily, whatever charms
be clothed with, in the des of poetry, they all vanish reariness and discomfort, as I seen them in real life. The herds’ tents” are among the last abodes in which I should to choose to dwell. The shepherds themselves are the most forlorn wretches any where to be seen—Dirty, ragged, half-starved looking beings, lying for hours basking in the rays of the sun, in listless idleness; and getting up to mope about,
with nothing to interest but the flocks they tend from day to day, and night to night. Jacob I believe gave a pretty correct account of the business, when he said, “thus I was in the day, the drought consumed me, and the frost by night,
and my sleep departed from mine
eyes.”

The medicinal waters which Bag-nieres furnishes, belong to the wonders of nature. There are nine or ten different springs, some of them
very copious, which discharge a great variety of water, generally of warm temperature, varying from lukewarm to near a boiling heat.
They are used equally for drinking and bathing. The water that is most generally drank, is transpa-ent, perfectly tasteless, and a little below blood heat. It is drank early in the morning, to the amount of from one to three half pint tumbler, and operates in the course of a few hours upon the bowels, without any painful sensation. A little girl attends the spring, and receives from each guest she serves, the trifling compensation of two sous.

The baths are in high credit for a variety of complaints, especially those of the rheumatick class; from five minutes to half an hour, is the usual time of continuing in them.
The sensation they excite is very pleasant, except to the olfactory nerves, which are saluted with a slight odour, which every body agrees in comparing to that of ro-ten eggs. The one I have used is attended by an elderly matron,
who charges the low compensation
of seven cents each time. As soon as the patient has adjusted
himself in the bath, he rings a bell,
and the good lady herself enter and removes his linen, which she again returns at a second ring of the bell, comfortably warm, from a small furnace which she keeps heated for the purpose. Such is the outrage on decorum, which custom sanctions in this country. The bathing operates powerfully on the organ of the skin, as I have experienced, by its producing a tendency to perspiration, in a degree to which I have long been a stranger. On the whole, I begin to flatter myself that it may please Providence, through the instrumentality of these waters, to turn my captivity, and bring about a measure of restoration. All however is in his hand, to whom it belongs to order our lot as he sees proper; and whom we may well trust, from the fact that his wisdom cannot mistake, nor his mercy fail. In the belief of this, I desire to remain, as ever,

Yours, &c.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

TRANSATLANTIC RECOLLECTIONS.

No. VII.

"Forsan et haec olim meminisse juvat."

Revered and respected Editor—It was my intention to have pursued my Scotch Recollections much farther; but lest I should become too garrulous upon the delightful reminiscences of youthful days, and fatigue both you and your readers, I have determined to take my departure from the "land of the covenant," and to bring my communications much sooner to a close. But can I leave that land of letters and of piety, without casting "one longing, lingering look behind!" Ah! no, thou country of my dearest acquirements and most joyful associations, "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, peace be within thee; because of the house of the Lord our God, I will seek thy good."

According to "Ledwick's Antiquities of Ireland," Christianity was planted in that country as early as the fifth century, flourishing there like a garden in a desert, while the nations around it were involved in the darkness of the most abject superstition. At that early period, it was so famed both for piety and learning, that students came to it from the neighbouring states, to be instructed by the Irish doctors who excelled in philology, philosophy, and theology. At the head of the religious orders of that day, who were known by the name of "Culdees," was the celebrated Columba, who afterwards established religion in Scotland, from whence it extended to England and Wales. The church, during this period, was of the Presbyterian form, and continued such until the eleventh century, when prelacy was inflicted upon it, with the other miseries of the papal deminission, under which it unhappily fell. From that period until the reign of James, in the beginning of the seventeenth century, Presbyterianism, and, indeed, piety and religion, may be said to have been banished from the island. About this time many thousands of the Scotch, together with their ministers, flying from persecution at home, came over to Ireland, and settled in the province of Ulster, and reinstated Presbyterianism; which has to this day continued to flourish, in despite of the combined opposition of English and papal prelacy. The following, however, will appear a curious fact in the present day:—"When Mr. Blair, a Scotch licentiate, arrived in Ireland in 1611, and scrubbed at an episcopal ordination, Eclin, bishop of Down, proposed that the Presbyterian ministers should join with him in the ordination; and that any expressions to which Mr. Blair might object in the established form, should be omitted or changed. The bishop of Raphoe granted the same indulgence to a Mr. Livingstone, and the same form was used in the ordination of all the Scotch ministers, wh
l in Ireland, from that time in the year 1642.

In this period, until the restoration of Charles, the Presbyterians and, though oftentimes hunted like bloodhounds of papacy and theates sometimes of liberty, and times of life; yet there was not officiously done to militate at their standing as real ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ. As a part of this, they received the tythes of their respective parishes, as the episcopalians did of theirs, until the commonwealth under well, when the tythe was com-

and to a demonstration the most pious and conscientious, were cut off from the Church, and cast upon the world without subsistence, and without an opportunity of usefulness. "Many of the clergy who conformed, represented the schism of the dissenters in the most reproachful light. Dr. South calls it 'A schism that unrepeatable, will as infallibly ruin their souls as theft, whoredom, or murder, or any other of the most crying, damning sins whatever.' And indeed, to this very day, the clergy of the established church in Ireland, keep up the cry of "damn- ning schism" against dissenters. It is unfortunate however for these people, that in their zeal they forget that what is schism in one portion of the king's dominions, is well authenticated and established truth in another. In England and Ireland, English episcopacy reigns and rules, branding every thing else as schism; but in Scotland, Presbyterianism claims superiority by virtue of the very same power; while, in Canada, papal episcopacy, which in England, Ireland, and Scotland, is both schism and antichrist, according to the English church, becomes changed from the mother of harlots into a lady of established reputation; and by that very authority too which denounces her at home. So much for schism.

From this time until the coronation of George I., Presbyterians were treated more like the wild beasts of the forest than like men. As a proof of this, I will relate a few facts concerning their treatment in Ireland:—In 1682, when Major Blood, a desperate adventurer, laid a plan to surprise and take the Castle of Dublin, lo! the Presbyterians, because Blood was one of that denomination, were accused en masse. A number of their ministers were examined, and although on the examination it appeared that neither the clergy or laity of that body were implicated, yet seven ministers were imprisoned in Carlingford, and all the Scotch in the country were disarmed. After

* Manning's Life of Young. this they enjoyed a calm until James II. began openly to favour the papists, when he commenced to persecute the dissenters, shutting up their churches, and making it criminal for their ministers to officiate in private houses. No sooner, however, were William and Mary seated on the throne, than another glimpse of sunshine brightened the prospects of the persecuted Presbyterians: this continued until the accession of Anne, when an act obtained the royal assent, which made it necessary for persons to qualify themselves for office by receiving the sacrament in the Episcopal church; and provided that if any such person should ever after go into a Presbyterian meeting-house, he should forfeit £20 sterling for every such offence; and that he should be forever disqualified for any office, until he could make oath that he had conformed to the church. By another act, in the last year of her life, the education of youth was entirely taken out of the hands of dissenters: and in fact, so far had persecution arrived during this reign, that between the time of her death and the news of it arriving in Ireland, three Presbyterian churches, in the north of that kingdom, were nailed up by the church party.

Under the present royal family, however, the Presbyterians have not only been tolerated, but countenanced and supported. Their churches are amply protected by law; the test act has been repealed, and their congregations receive from the treasury an annual salary, according as they stand in the first, second, or third class, respectively, of £100, £75, or £50 sterling.

Properly speaking, there are four denominations of Presbyterians in Ireland—the Synod of Ulster; the Southern Association; the Associate Reformed Synod of Ireland; and the Covenanted or Reformed Presbyterians, who trace their original to the Waldenses.

Concerning the Southern Association we know very little, with this exception, that it is generally supposed in the north to be Arian; but whether it deserves this appellation as a body, or has got it in consequence of distinguished individuals belonging to it, who held these sentiments, we will not take it upon us to say; though, for our part, we do conscientiously think, and unhesitatingly say, that any body which permits its members, or any of them, to proclaim and vindicate a doctrine contrary to its standards, does in this world deserve the stigma attached to those who avow such doctrine, and certainly will not be held guiltless before God. We would say with the poet—

"He who allows oppression, shares the crime."

On this subject we are not left to conjecture, or to grope our way through darkness; for the Great Head of the church has commanded us, saying, "Come out from amongst them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." I confess freely, that I am one of those who would think that I was polluting the mantle of charity, by covering with it the clean and the unclean. And perhaps this is one of the most effectual ways, in which the great adversary can injure the church of the living God. A brother sees something wrong in our standards of doctrine—he is too zealous and conscientious not to declare it wrong; but, yet he is a brother, and better that the ark of the covenant should get a little wrong touch, than that a good brother, who sets at nought his fathers and his brethren without hesitation, should be dealt with fully and fairly and fearlessly! Out upon such tender-heartedness say I; "let God be true and every man a liar;" let right continue to be right, no matter who says it is wrong. If we are not assured that our doctrines and standards are according to the word of God, why let us be very cautious in awarding censure to those who gainsay them, until by diligent and prayerful research we find out what is truth; but, on the ary, if we have confidence in let us act so as to keep them
uncontaminated, and unadulated. I am the more particular on subject, because I have seen and suffered the effects of such deretness. And, Mr. Editor, if the Lord lets me to send you another compilation, I will show you how far unhallowed lenity, this kind-to a brother at the expense of unfaithful to Christ, carried a stable section of the church. I fear that I can say so little conning the Presbyterians known by name of the Southern Association, especially as connected with reputed Arianism. This much
I know, that they and the "Presbytery of Antrim," a body of avowed is, are upon the best terms; and the General Synod of Ulster
nise them so far, at least, as to not put them freely into their pulpits.
This proves nothing, as we shall quently show.

---

REV. MR. STEWART'S PRIVATE JOURNAL.

(Continued from p. 318.)

Saturday, 7th. On Saturday, Mr.
ham and myself took tea and d the evening on board the artie, Capt. Kotzebue—the la-having declined the invitation, extended to them also. She well built, substantial and fine of 22 guns, constructed under direction of Capt. K. expressly for the voyage she is now perfomring
Her deck is remarkably hand-and the accommodations of icers and crew very conve-
. She is however entirely too between decks, both for comfort
eauty, not admitting of an up-position in a man even of or-size. The captain's cabin ge, airy, and well, but not hand-ly furnished—no carpets or dra-
. The chairs, sofa, tables, and ard are of plain mahogany, with two large mirrors. The most
IV.—Ch. Adv.
mediately behind the chaplain, and by their apparent reverence and devotion, set a commendable example to the crew. Their full, deep-toned voices, and in some instances, good taste in singing, added much to the effects of the chants and anthems, the chorusses of which, in two or three cases, were very fine.

Though in the whole there was a striking want of that simplicity, which we believe characterized the primitive church of Christ, still we could but regard with tender interest and complacency, a scene in which so large, so youthful, and so noble a company, publicly and solemnly testified their remembrance and fear of God; rather than in uniting in the shameless exhibitions of debauchery, which too often, by day and by night, scandalize the Christian name of ships at anchor at these Islands.

Within the last two days, there have been arrivals both from the leeward and windward stations, and the very animating letters received by them from the missionaries and chiefs, promise a more interesting state of things in the mission, than we have yet known; and have made our monthly prayer-meetings delightfully profitable. But as incidents of this kind will be fully noticed in the publick journal to the Board, I shall not, in general, enlarge on them, but confine myself to those which you will be less likely to find in print.

Wednesday 9th.——Yesterday morning, Mr. Hoffman and myself, after an early cup of coffee, visited the salt lake, of which, I have already given you a description. The morning was so fine, the air so pure and bracing, that without any exertion or fatigue, we returned in time to dine with the family at 1 o’clock. Before reaching the village, we descried a sail, coming from Tanai; it proved to be the native brig Ainoa, which came to anchor just after dark. Shortly after, a messenger from the royal family arrived, requesting a visit from us to Kaahumanu, who had been absent some months to the leeward, and had just landed. Our interview with her and the heads of the nation, was uncommonly pleasant and interesting. We found them in one of the upper rooms of her new house, on the point. The room was well lighted by several handsome glass lamps, and was furnished with a neat Chinese sofa, under a large and richly framedlooking-glass. Two mahogany card-tables were covered with expensive cloths of orange and blue, and three large field bedsteads were hung with drapery of beautiful figured yellow merino cloth. On the floor, in the middle of the room, which was spread with new mats, of the finest and handsomest kind, the group was seated; consisting of Kaahumanu, in the centre, Karaimoku on one side, the queens of Rihorih on the other—while Opia and Hoapiri Wahiwe, the sisters of Kaahumanu—Kea-riiahomu, her husband (a son of Taumurarii) Lhanui, the husband of Opia—Tahitona, a Tahitian (private tutor and chaplain of Kaahumanu and Kae-rriahonui) and two or three confidential attendants, made up the circle. They were all well dressed, (not a naked person in the room) and apparently most happy in the arrival of the regent and queen. The first salutation we received from Kaahumanu, was in these words—"We are saved by Jesus Christ," or "Jesus Christ is our salvation;" and the whole conversation of the evening was on the subject of religion alone, which seemed to be the only subject of their thoughts and desires. When I recollected what they once were, noisy, drunken, debauched, disgust- ing idolators, and observed the sobriety of their appearance—the mildness of their manners—the piety of their conversation, and the tenderness and affection of their looks and expressions to us, while my heart deeply felt the power of contrast, and most sincerely prayed God for what my eyes saw my ears heard. I was most truly reminded of a little circumstance which gave rise to a happy scene, during our first voyage to Lahaina. Shortly after our arrival at the islands, as you know, we were almost immediately separated from the rest of the mission family, and sent to Maui. Not yet familiar with the noise, the rudeness, the nakedness of the natives, the degree of ignorance of the gentleness and harmlessness of their character, for the first few days, we found myself surrounded by 200 of them, we naturally felt, in some respects, exposed to trials and dangers; we felt that the "tender mercies" of heaven are "cruel," and felt ourselves completely in their power.

Indulging in reflections of character, I accidentally raised my eyes to the main top of the mast, and very much to my surprise, in the device on the top cloth, I saw a subject of meditation, that greatly changed the character of my feelings, and so effectually lulled my apprehension to rest, that I never knew one of the kind. It was a sketch from Isa. xi.

The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie with the kid; and the calf, and young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

After a half-hour's general conversation, they requested to have a chance to pray; at the close of which we returned home, greatly pleased with our interview, and with the prospects which the kindness of the chiefs presents for the future.

After breakfast this morning, the company, including the young women, who had not come on shore the night before, came to the chapel to return to Oahu, and happy meeting with their friends.

Saturday, 12th. We were last evening called to part with our Russian friends of the Pretpratik, which left the harbour early this morning, and now looks only like a lofty spire in the midst of the ocean, as she is gently securing an anchorage from the island before night. We have formed a pleasant acquaintance with several of her officers, though only one, besides Captain Kotzebue, speaks much English. But none have taken such hold on our hearts as the interesting and accomplished young Hoffman—he has been so constantly in our family—has so greatly commended himself to our love by his intelligence and good breeding, by the warmth and polish of his manners, by the tenderness of his heart, and by a thousand evidences of a virtuous and amiable spirit, that our parting embraces were more like those of long beloved and bosom friends, than of strangers whose acquaintance has been only of a day.

He spent both the last evenings with us, and among other little mementos, has left an elegant piece of Latin for each of us, in H.'s album. We feel sad at every remembrance of him, and our prayers hover around the ship that bears him from us, as we see her fading from our sight, probably forever.

Sabbath, 13th. The chapel has been filled to-day with hundreds of well-dressed and respectable looking chiefs and people—and a more interesting congregation than they formed, can scarcely be imagined. There is indeed every reason to believe, that on the minds of many the word of God is working effectually, while the ears of all appear to be opened to the messages of salvation and grace.

In the afternoon I held a service with the natives, in one of the valleys east of Honolulu. An incident or two during my walk, will show the state of feeling in the minds of many of the people. When going, I met a company of females near a mile from the village, who I knew belonged to the families of the chiefs on the point. I was surprised to see them so far in the country on the Sabbath, and asked them where they had been; they replied, "To the thicket (or wilderness) near the mountains, that we might pray in secret places." They were then on their way to the chapel, for the afternoon worship.

On my return I met an interesting looking young man, and asked him where he lived, he answered, "Far in the country, where I work during the week, but to-day is the Sabbath, and I do not work, but go to the house of prayer, to hear the good word of God."

And on reaching home, I found another waiting to inquire of Mr. Bingham and myself, whether it was "a sin to pray to Jehovah when walking along the street, and when at work;" for his heart often wished to pray when thus occupied, but he dared not, lest it might be wrong.

Monday 14th. Yesterday a French merchant ship, which has been in port for several months undergoing repairs, put to sea; and this morning the native brig Ainoa, left the harbour for Maui, taking to Lahaina our friend and patroness Hoapiri Wahine, who has been absent from her husband, on a visit at Tanai, for many months.

February 24th. There have been two late arrivals—the whale ship Swift, Capt. Arthur, from a cruise, and the brig Tamaahmaah, Captain Meek, from Norfolk Sound and the port of St. Francisco, in California. Neither of them, however, have brought any news or interesting intelligence.

Kaahumanu does not enjoy very good health, and by the advice of Dr. Law, her private physician, has retired three or four miles up one of the valleys, east of Honoruru, for the benefit of the mountain air. Those unacquainted with the attention and respect required by the high chiefs from inferiors of all ranks, would scarce believe the bustle and confusion this movement of her majesty has created. The removal of the court of Great Britain from St. James's to Windsor Castle, would not make a greater change in the west end of London, than is perceived in the fashionable circles of our metropolis. The road leading to her retreat, has been almost constantly marked by the equipages (two or three single horse wagons,) and by crowds of more humble gentry on foot, with hundreds of attendants and servants bearing furniture and provision, and a variety of luggage. Karaimoku and his family, which since the absence of Rihorho, has included the young queen's Kekauuoohi, Panahi, Kinau, and (at present) Kekauonohi, are the only grandes that remain. The etiquette of the court seems to require their presence at least occasionally, and though Kaahumanu only went on the morning of the 22d, they have just returned this evening from spending the day with her. We were quite amused with their appearance, as they approached the Mission House. Karaimoku rode in a neat yellow wagon, drawn by a fine and well harnessed horse; his wife, the queens, and his trusty and confidential attendants, were on horseback; while their respective retinues, making a large crowd, ran after them on foot, bearing the badges of their distinction, and spit boxes and tobacco pipes, the inseparable appendages of their persons. The queens were the objects of special notice, as exhibiting something that was entirely novel to us. The horses they rode were gay and spirited, and being unacustomed to riding, and accommodated with men's saddles only, they rode astride, instead of sitting in the American manner. Being very modestly dressed, however, there was nothing particularly objectionable in their attitude, especially as it seemed requisite for fety of their royal persons,—wore handsome slips of a vas of colours, made close in the
and deep pause, or native
dresses over them. As usual, coming from the country, their necks, and indeed almost the
of their bodies, were covered garlands of flowers, and tis of evergreen, which had a effect, especially those that gracefully entwined in their hair, which hung, from the ex-
they were taking, in loose
areless locks on their necks oulders. They sat and rode and as far as we could see came on a full canter.
nday, March 7th. This day
varial prayer, has in the kind-God, been made to us truly ious and happy, by an event
I doubt not, my dear sister,
sure your congratulations and thanksgiving—Harriet is a ime a mother—and in the
of a daughter, expresses herder obligations of renewed and devotedness to her cove-aviour and God. In this dis-tion, “He hath not dealt with our sins, nor rewarded us acting to our iniquities,” and we ify that “as a father pitieth
children, so the Lord pitieth
that fear him,” “He knoweth
me, he remembereth that we st”—“He redeemeth our lives
struction and crowneth us ving kindness and tender-es”—therefore we will call our souls and all that is within bless his holy name, and to not all his benefits. May the ings of Israel’s God rest on he has given us, and may the
 that belongeth to his people
rich inheritance.
arch 10th. Within the last few the whale ships Reaper and in came into port, and this ng the Peru and the Almira added to their number. These es directly from America,
brought letters and papers
from some of our friends, and considerable supplies for the Mission.
But every other feeling is lost in surprise and sorrow, at the truly melancholy intelligence they bring,
of the death of our friends Kamamanu and Rihorih. Mr. Evart’s letter gave information of the decease of the former only: and as it was written but a few days before the vessels sailed, we at first flattered ourselves that the report of the king’s death was founded in that of his companion. A paper, however, of a later date than the secretary’s communication, assures us to fully of the unhappy fact. The truth is a shock to us—so much so, indeed, that we frankly confess, our tears are mingled with those of the chiefs and people, who are almost overwhelmed by the bereavement.
We feel that we have lost those in whom we had a very deep interest,
if they did not possess our warm
and tender love; and there were circumstances in their embarkation,
the recollection of which will always cause us to sigh, that they were de-ned against their own strong wish,
and against the wish of the mission and of the nation, the privilege of having a pious teacher, interpreter
and guardian with them.

We had indulged many speculations, as to the probable effect of their visit on themselves and their people—but the death of both, or of one of them, never entered our minds, except as connected with the general possibility of events.
But it was the will of God, that they should go as they did go; and in the accomplishment of that same will, they have died at the place and under the circumstances that they did die. In this, as in all other cases, we have the high and holy consolation, that every mystery in His providence will eventually exalt the honour and the glory of his grace. Though clouds and darkness are often round about him,
still righteousness and judgment
are the habitation of his throne;
and in view of the wisdom of his counsels, an assembled universe will yet exclaim—"Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty—just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints!"

March 15th. We think it probable our friends in America will feel some solicitude, lest the death of the king should prove an occasion of insurrection and bloodshed in the islands—but of this we have scarce had a thought, much less an apprehension. So long as the Prince Keauikokeu lives, the right of succession is indisputable. Rihorihio in his council with the chiefs, previous to his embarkation, formally and publickly appointed him successor, in case he should never return: and from the time of his departure the lad has been regarded, and officially addressed by the chiefs and people, as their king. This has been more especially the case of late: so that the intelligence has produced little or no change in his standing in the government—and none in his title, except the assumption of the name of Tameama (or Tamehameha) III., as the official signature of the successor of Rihorihio.

Indeed, my dear M., in every respect our covenant God seems to have been preparing the way most happily for the arrival of the tidings; and the chiefs in power were never before in a state so favourable to political integrity and peace. Auspicious as the whole history of this mission has been, ever since (and even before) its first establishment on these shores, still the last three months must be regarded as the commencement of a new and more happy era in its progress, than had previously been known.

We have every reason to believe that the principles of eternal truth, with its sanctions from which they are inseparable, which for near five years have been enforced on the minds and the hearts of the leaders of this people, are beginning to have their destined and desired effect on their characters and lives; and that many of the most powerful of them, from the fear of God and a sincere love of his righteousness, are ceasing in heart to do evil, and learning to do well.

I think I can safely say, that we have good and satisfactory evidence of genuine piety, in the cases of a large number of the most influential personages in the nation; while all the rest are, in a greater or less degree, our avowed friends and followers in belief and practice. We cannot but think, the once imperious, haughty, and even scornful regent, Kaahumanu, a sincere Christian; she certainly is a most altered woman; and we have reason to hope the alteration arises from that change of heart, which humbles all who experience it at the feet of Jesus.

Her husband, Keawialoha, a son of the lamented Taumunui, (Tamoree,) gives still more decided evidence of love to God and man; and daily performs the part of an active and zealous missionary, by going from house to house in every direction, teaching, exhorting, and praying with the people. Opiie, another of the queens dowager of Tameamea, and Laanui, her husband, are equally exemplary in every respect, as are also Taputia the queen of Tanai, and her husband, Kau. To these may be added Karaimoku, Karaikoa, and many others of less note; (I speak now only of the high chiefs at present at this place) and this number includes the power of the kingdom. These, with the young king, and every chief of any importance, have regular family worship with their respective households twice a day—never take a meal without having a blessing asked and thanks returned—observe the Sabbath with becoming propriety—attend all the religious instructions of the week, both private and public—and studiously avoid every kind of amuse—and pastime, not consistent strict sobriety and Christian um. Their whole minds and whole time seem given to our ution; and so far from becoming, they appear more and desirous of making night and profitable, by the acquisition w light and a new knowledge of word of God. Such is the in which the melancholy gs found them—and the effect apparently such as might be exd—it was a dreadful blow, but we seen and heard none of the vagrant expressions of heathen.

For the first day or two, sorrow was evidently keen leap, but it was quiet, humble Christian—their tears fell si y and rapidly, but they mani no disposition to indulge in oud wailing by which they once accustomed to vent their e same day the news arrived— the weekly lecture from the upriate text, "The Lord gave the Lord hath taken away, ed be the name of the Lord"—imoku, entirely of his own ac rose and addressed the pecommanding them to observe weeks of humiliation, of peni and prayer, on account of the uni which had befallen them. id scarcely command my feel at this unexpected evidence of nppy light in which he viewed dispensation. The next morn minute guns were fired from real till eight o'clock, both by art on the point and the battery lunch-bowl hill—the shipping their colours at half-mast, and the chiefs put on full black.

Our official communications, for u, Maui, and Hawaii, convey he intelligence, and enjoining observance of the season of hu tion and prayer, were also pre and signed by the king and regents, Kaahumanu and Ka raimoku, and despatched by Opia, accompanied by Mr. Chamberlain.

16th. Another arrival from America, the brig Convoy, Capt. McNeil, from Boston. We have Heralds and papers by her, six weeks later than those by the Almira, but no letters for myself and family. We learn but few additional particulars of the king and queen, except that their bodies may be daily expected, in a government vessel command ed by Lord Byron. A copy of a letter from Mr. Bender, secretary of the London Missionary Society, informing that the king, queen, and party, were inaccessible to a deputation from that body, both before and during their illness, has added greatly to our grief. The chiefs are exceedingly distressed to know that they died without the prayers of the people and ministers of God.

The dispensation, in all its circumstances, is dark to us—but it will yet be light!

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust Him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain,
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain.

March 26th. I am called in very great haste to close my journal, in order that it may be sent by an opportunity now occurring, and which may be the last for many months to come. Nothing new has occurred since my last date, except another arrival from Boston, the brig Griffen, Capt. Pierce. By it I received a letter from Mr. Pomeroy, making me acquainted with the kindness of our friends at Cooperstown.

I send a hasty answer by the present vessel. We are all doing well and are happy. May the blessing of God rest on my dear sister, and all that is hers.

Yours, as ever,

CHARLES SAMUEL STEWART.
The character and measures of the emperor Alexander, of Russia, lately deceased, have become more interesting to the friends of religion than they would otherwise be, from the part which he once took in the promotion of Bible Societies and evangelical missions, and from the lamentable change, at the close of his reign, of a course which seemed to be so favourable both to his own happiness and to that of his widely extended empire. The following article, extracted from the Eclectic Review for May last, contains remarks and information relative to this distinguished monarch, which we think will prove interesting to our readers. For ourselves, we do not altogether agree with the Reviewer, whose work we quote, in regard to Alexander’s character. We grant that he wanted firmness, and admit that this was a great want; yet, on the whole, we think he had more talent and less virtue, than is conceded to him in the following article. While we are satisfied of the justice of the observations with which this article is introduced and closed, it is our opinion, that if Alexander’s good principles had been as deep and efficient as they once seemed to be, he did not lack the talents and address necessary to ensure success to the measures which those principles had dictated. Neither is our estimate of the character of Prince Galitzin, in perfect accordance with that of the Reviewer. We regard that prince not only as an amiable man and a devout Christian, but as an able statesman, who wanted nothing but the steady and decided countenance, support, and co-operation of his sovereign, to have effected as much for the benefit of his country, as the peculiar and unhappy state of society there existing would have permitted.

We are unwilling to believe—we do not believe—that the emperor Alexander was a deliberate political hypocrite, in his acknowledgments of the signal interposition of Divine Providence, in preserving Russia when assailed by the mighty power of Buonaparte, and in all that he did for the propagation of revealed truth. We believe that in all this he acted as he felt at the moment; but that his feelings were of that temporary and transient kind which princes, as well as private individuals, have often experienced and manifested, and which are extinguished and lost when temptations and trials assail them.

We also think that the writer of the following review, ought to have noticed the influence of the clergy, as a fourth obstacle to the work of reformation in Russia. It was their influence, quite as much as that of the lay nobility and the officers of the army, which operated to deter Alexander from continuing to yield to the counsels of Galitzin. The Pope, too, had a considerable agency in opposing the diffusion of the Scriptures; and it was the combination of the whole of these causes which made the unhappy emperor think that his power, and perhaps his crown and his life, would be endangered, if he did not change his course. He wanted the firmness and the strength of principle necessary to carry him forward, in the face of all this array of hostility. He yielded, and by yielding we verily believe he has done that which will issue in the event which he dreaded. We pretend to no special sagacity in foreseeing the effects which must follow from their proper causes, in morals and in politics. But without such pretension, we venture to prognosticate, that Russia will not long remain in its present state—that convulsions of a very serious kind are not far distant; and that the proper preventive of these would have been a continuance, under prudent guards and with wary but fearless steps, in that very course which Alexander abandoned, and in which his brother, it appears, is following his example. If absolute monarchs will not gradually relax the gripe of power, and by degrees prepare their subjects for the blessings of knowledge and freedom, the people, as soon as they have the opportunity, will seek to right themselves, and to trample their oppressors in the dust.

If it be at all times, and under all circumstances, far from easy to form a correct estimate of the character of monarchs, the difficulty increases in a tenfold degree when the qualities of a Russian autocrat are subjected to the investigation of his contemporaries. We are too apt to imagine that a despotick sovereign is perfectly unshackled; that his counsels are free from the distraction of conflicting, or the embarrassment of overbearing interests; that his measures, whether for good or for evil, are self-originated and unimpeded; that his choice of instruments depends entirely on his own judgment; and that the principles of his rule may be fairly inferred from the moral aspect of his reign, the effects of his political system, and the general condition of his people. It may be true, that these are the only materials within our reach, and equally so, that they shall prove quite insufficient for the specific purpose. The veriest tyrant is more or less under restraint.

There are considerations of inevitable urgency, impulses and resistances that set arbitrary power at defiance, controlling influences to which the most absolute will must yield; and no history can exemplify the operation of these circumstances more emphatically than that of Russia. There are three tremendous agencies, of which the Tsar must be in continual dread,—the nobility, the army, and the people. Among the first, there has hitherto been no difficulty in finding conspirators and assassins; the second is a two-edged weapon, as dangerous to the unskilful wielder as to the enemy; and for the third, no mob is so irritable and sanguinary as a rabble of slaves. It is vastly easy to sit down in the safety and quietness of private life in a free country, and define the canons of policy and morality by which a ruler thus situated shall regulate his conduct; but it would—we do not say that it should—become a very different affair, were we personally concerned in the matter. Commanding intellect, unyielding firmness, consummate intrepidity and self-possession, above all, stern and uncompromising moral principle must combine with kind and beneficent feelings, to make up a temper equal to the full requisitions of so trying an elevation.

We have no inclination, certainly, to depreciate the character of the late Emperor Alexander, but we cannot take it even as approaching to our beau idéal in the present case. That he was a man of good intentions and respectable talents, we are quite willing to believe, but it must be kept in view, that a much higher order of faculty is required in the master of a realm of slaves, than will be efficient in the governor of a free and represented people. The former has no check to his caprice, but in the exercise of his own judgment; no aid to his administration in open and unrestrained counsel and rebuke; the latter has an advisor in every subject, through the different media of public discussion. The chief of a popular government is the president of a well-ordered mechanism, and has little more to do than to watch over the regularity of its movements, and to provide for the maintenance of its integrity and activity; while an autocrat is himself the machine, if that can be rightly so termed, which is subject to no prescribed law of action, and of which the principles are altogether uncertain. Hence, if a despotick monarch be of a character distinguished by moral and intellectual excellence, his sway may have some advantages, in unity of counsel and promptitude of execution, over the administration of a constitutional chief. Happily, however, for mankind, the value and efficacy of government are not to be estimated by the exception, but by the rule: for one Titus, there are twenty Domitians; and were the proportion reversed, there would be more lost, on the despotick system, in stability, strength, and energy, than might be gained in less essential qualities of security and power.

From all, then, that we have ever heard of the Emperor Alexander, he appears to have been a striking instance of the incompetency of excellent dispositions and fair abilities to struggle with the inherent difficulties of an arbitrary government. We have not the smallest doubt of the purity of his intentions, nor of the sincerity of his earlier exertions in behalf of his degraded people. Had he been a free agent, or had he possessed that higher order of faculty and determination which would have enabled him to “trample upon impossibilities,” we have assurance that his plans for the intellectual, moral, and political advancement of his people would have been triumphantly followed up, and that he would never have yielded to the fatal influences which suspended his career of glory. Nor were his deficiencies adequately supplied by his choice of a minister, although that choice reflected the highest honour on the motives and feelings that prompted it. The spirit of the amiable and excellent Gallitzin seems to have been better suited to the offices of that warm and sacred friendship which, as he never abused, so he never lost, than to the mastery of a turbulent nobility, a ferocious soldiery. People ignorant and shackled, and, from those very circumstances, requiring the incessant vigilance of a jealous police. The following illustrations of Alexander’s affectionate feelings are, we suppose, authentick; but, even if otherwise, they speak strongly in favour of the monarch respecting whom such anecdotes are circulated with acceptance.

“From his earliest years, he was remarkable for his respect and attachment to the persons entrusted with his education, and for his exemplary conduct towards his mother, the Empress Maria, which truly deserved the name of filial piety, being in him a feeling next akin to religion, a holy flame which bust with unvarying splendour from his childhood to his grave. So entirely innate in him was this feeling, that he beheld with abhorrence, and, when the occasion served, marked by his serious disposition, any violation of the Divine precept, ‘Honour thy mother;’ and it was but a few months before his death, that a young prince, who had treated his mother with disrespect, received orders to reside only in Moscow, under the special superintendence of Prince Golizin, the military governor-general, and of the guardians appointed for him, who were at the same time commanded to take the administration of his property into their hands. He not only treated his tutors with respect while under their care, but continued through life to give them proofs of his gratitude and affection. For Count Selikoff he showed unabated veneration during his life, and in 1818, followed his corpse, on foot and bareheaded, to the grave. Of his regard for Colonel Laharpe, many instances are recorded, of which the following may find a place here.

“His attachment to Laharpe was rather filial than that of a pupil; his greatest delight was in his society, and he would cling round his neck in the most affectionate embraces, by which frequently his clothes were covered with powder. 'See, my dear prince,' Laharpe would say, 'what a figure you have made yourself.' 'Oh, never mind it,' Alexander replied; 'no one will blame me for carrying away all I can from my dear preceptor.' One day he went to visit Laharpe, as was his custom, alone; the porter was a new servant, and did not know him; he asked his name, and was answered Alexander. The porter then led him into the servants' hall, told him his master was at his studies, and could not be disturbed for an hour. The servants' homely meal was prepared, and the prince was invited to partake of it, which he did without affectation. When the hour was expired, the porter informed Laharpe that a young man of the name of Alexander had been waiting some time, and wanted to see him. 'Show him in.' But what was Laharpe to do—surprise to see his pupil! He wished to apologize; but Alexander, placing his finger on his lips, said, 'My dear tutor, do not mention it; an hour to you is worth a day to me; and besides, I have had a hearty breakfast with your servants, which I should have lost, had I been admitted when I came.' The poor porter's feelings may be better imagined than described; but Alexander, laughing, said, 'I like you the better for it, you are as honest servant, and there are a hundred rubles to convince you that I think so.'

'When he was at Paris in 1814, he paid a visit to the wife of M. Laharpe. As she remained standing, he said to her, 'You are much altered, madam.' 'Sire,' she replied, 'I, like others, have suffered from circumstances.'—'You mistake me; I mean that you do not sit down, as you used to do, by your husband's pupil, and that familiarly with him.'” pp. xv.—xix.

Mr. Lloyd justly remarks, that a relish for “the simple beauties of nature” is a highly favourable testimony to character; and he states that Alexander had much of this feeling. The instance, however, which he gives, can hardly be considered as in point. “The view from Richmond Hill,” which the emperor considered as “the most lovely that he had ever beheld,” betrays in its peculiar richness too much of the presence of man, to simplify “the simple, the spotless, and the amiable scenes of nature.” Of the Tsar’s active humanity, too much cannot be said. The well-known event which obtained for him the gold medal of our Royal Humane Society, is of too common notoriety to justify its insertion here; but in these duties Alexander was never deficient. The police-officer who saved, at the hazard of his own life, the rasher individual who was sinking in the half-frozen Neva, was applauded, rewarded, and promoted on the spot, by his benevolent sovereign. The sufferers from the dreadful inundations in Germany, were relieved by his abundant contributions; and when a similar disaster befell St. Petersbourg, in November, 1824, he visited, in person, the scenes of misery, and while his open hand distributed the necessary relief, his presence and his language were yet more grateful to the feelings of the afflicted, than his liberal alms.

"It once happened, at the very moment when the emperor had given the word of command, and the guard on the parade was just on the point of paying him the usual military honours, that a fellow approached him in ragged garments, with his hair in disorder, and a look of wildness, and gave him a slap on the shoulder. The monarch, who was standing at the time with his face to the military front, turned round instantly, and beholding the wretched object before him, started back at the sight; and then inquired, with a look of astonishment, what he wanted? "I have something to say to you, Alexander Pawlowitsch," said the stranger, in the Russian language. "Say on then," said the emperor, with a smile of encouragement, slapping him on the shoulder. A long solemn pause followed; the military guard stood still; and none ventured, either by word or motion, to disturb the emperor in this singular interview. The Grand Duke Constantine alone, whose attention had been excited by this unusual interruption, advanced somewhat nearer to his brother. The stranger then related, that he had been a captain in the Russian service, and had been present at the campaigns, both in Italy and Switzerland; but that he had been persecuted by his commanding officer, and so misrepresented to Sovereign, that the latter had turned him out of the army, without money and without friends, in a foreign country. He had afterwards served as a private soldier in the Russian army; and being severely wounded at Zurich, (and here he pulled his rags asunder, and showed several gun-shot wounds,) he had closed his campaign in a French prison. He had now begged all the way to Petersburg, to apply to the emperor himself for justice, and to intreat an inquiry into the reason why he had been degraded from his rank in the army. The emperor listened with great patience, and then asked, in a significant tone, 'if there was no exaggeration in the story he had told?'

'Let me die under the knout,' said the officer, 'if I shall be found to have uttered one word of falsehood.' The emperor then beckoned to his brother, and charged him to conduct the stranger to the palace, while he turned round to the expecting crowd. The commanding officer who had behaved so harshly, though of a good family, and a prince in rank, was very severely reprimanded; while the brave warrior, whom he had unjustly persecuted, was reinstated in his former post, and besides, had a considerable present from the emperor.' pp. xxvi—xxix.

Alexander seems to have possessed the rare talent of confering favours with a grace which enhanced their value. When he sent a valuable jewel to Kutusoff, after the campaign of 1812, it was taken from the imperial crown, and the vacancy thus occasioned, was supplied by a small gold plate, on which the name of that officer was inscribed. After the attack on Montmartre, in which Count Langeron distinguished himself, dining with a party of which that general was the host, he addressed him as follows:—'I have paid a second visit to Montmartre, where I found a parcel directed to you.' On the count's replying, that he had lost nothing:—'Oh! I am not mistaken; see here!' The contents were the valuable insignia of a Russian order.

'The hackney-coachmen in St. Petersburg do not much like to drive officers, and seldom let them get out without their having paid them before-hand, or leaving something in pledge. They do not object to letting other persons get out whenever they choose, and will even wait hours for them. Alexander, who was generally dressed in a very plain uniform and a grey mantle, was walking one day on the English quay, when suddenly it began to rain very fast, and he would not step into a house. He accordingly seated himself in the first droschke he found, and ordered the coachman to drive to the Winter Palace. As he passed by the Senate House, the guard was called under arms, and the drums beat. The coachman looked, and said he supposed the emperor was riding by the Guard House. 'You will see him very soon,' replied Alexander.

'They at last arrived at the Winter Palace, and Alexander, who had no money about him, ordered him to stop till he sent his fare down. 'No,' replied he, 'you must leave me something in pledge; the officers have so many times deceived me. So you must leave me your mantle.' Alexander acquiesced, and left it with him. He directly sent down one of his footmen with five and twenty rubles, to give them to the coachman, to say that he had driven the emperor, and to bring him the pleasure. The footman did so; when, instead of the coachman's being glad at the honour and the present, he laughed, and said: 'Do you think that is so stupid; the mantle is worth more than twenty-five rubles; who knows what you mean? perhaps you want to steal it; so, that won't do, and unless the gentleman whom I have driven, comes himself, I shall not part with it.' Alexander had almost been obliged to go down himself, had not his chief coachman happened to come by, who confirmed what the footman had said. The poor coachman was now almost out of his wits for joy.' pp. xxxi—xxxiii.

One more of these anecdotes we must distress.

'The High Chamberlain N received of the Emperor Alexander a most beautiful star of the order of St. Andrew, set round with diamonds, which was valued at 30,000 rubles. Being in pecuniary distress he pawned it; soon after this, there was a grand entertainment at court, where N could not appear without this star. What embarrassment! Money was wanted, and the pawnbroker an inexorable man, would not part with the star for a quarter of an hour, unless it were properly redeemed. Now there was nothing but the emperor's groom of the bed-chamber, who had in his possession two beautiful diamond stars, belonging to the emperor, one of which was but lately finished, and had cost 60,000 rubles. The high chamberlain accordingly had recourse to him, and after many protestations, the gentleman was persuaded by incessant entreaty, and promises of returning it safe to him again after the entertainment, to entrust it to him.

N accordingly made his appearance at court with this star. Alexander soon perceived in the four large diamonds at the corners of the star, a great likeness with his own new star. He fixed his eyes several times on N, and at last said, 'I am very much astonished to find you have a star which has a great likeness with one I have just received from the jeweller.' N, quite embarrassed, replied only by unmeaning compliments and bows. The emperor, more and more struck with the great resemblance, at last said to him, 'I do not know what to say, but I must tell you plainly, that I almost believe that it is my star, the likeness is so very remarkable.' N at last humbly confessed how it happened, and offered to undergo any punishment, but only begged that he would have mercy upon the poor gentleman of the bed-chamber, who had suffered everything into a state of confusion and danger. It was believed, at least it was affirmed, that he had determined on the imprisonment of his wife and his sons Alexander and Constantine; and a determination was formed, with the privy of the elder, to anticipate this purpose by putting him under restraint. When Alexander found that, instead of that doubtful measure, the conspirators had made all sure, by going the length of assassination, his grief and horror are said to have been extreme. The particular circumstances of this event are, however, imperfectly known, and Mr. Lloyd has given two different statements; one exceedingly and interestingly minute, and consequently the less likely to be true. It is singular enough, that these narrations should contradict each other on one of the leading points. The common story ascribes the fatal deed to Benningssen, who, when the others were relenting at the prayers and tears of the miserable victim, aware that to recede was to sign their own death-warrant, animated them to resolution, and used his own sash as the instrument of destruction. The other version describes Benningssen as leaving the room to obtain a light, and on his return finding the emperor dead.

We do not deem ourselves authorized to enter into a detailed examination of the history of so recent a reign. Mr. Lloyd has collected, with praiseworthy diligence, all, probably, that is to be known at the present moment; and his volume will be found valuable as a spirited sketch of one important section in the annals of Europe; but there is much still to be known, before a decided opinion can be formed on many particulars connected with the reign of Alexander. It is difficult, perhaps without further evidence impossible, to account for the discrepancy between the liberal feelings which adorned its commencement, and the narrow policy which clouded its closing scenes. Was he driven from his better impulses by the murmurs of his nobles, or cajoled into compliance with the mean and Machiavelian system of Metternich? We cannot answer this; but we are quite disposed to adopt the solution which shall be most favourable to a character which had many excellencies, counterbalanced, we fear, by some weaknesses.

Alexander's reign was characterized by events which exhibited him advantageously, though he had little share in their successful termination. Napoleon was conquered, not by arms, but by stress of weather, and by his own unusual Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, etc.

In a paper by Sir H. Davy, in the last part of the Philosophical Transactions, it is mentioned, that, independently of the chemical, there is a mechanical wear of the copper of vessels in sailing, which, on the most exposed part of the ship, and in the most rapid course, bears a relation to it of nearly 2 to 4.55. As the result of actual experiment, as to the electro-chemical means of preserving the copper sheathing of vessels, he concludes that the proportion of protecting metal should be from 1-90th to 1-70th.

The largest steam vessel ever built in England, was lately launched from Limehouse. She is called the Shannon, of 350 tons burden, and is intended to convey passengers and goods from London to Dublin, in seventy-two hours, calling at Margate, Dover, Portsmouth, and Falmouth, for passengers.

In France it has been strongly urged by M. de la Place, that all the nations of Europe, instead of referring their calculations of longitude to the meridian of their principal observatory, should have some common meridian; which would introduce into the geography of the world the same uniformity that exists in its almanacks and in its arithmetic. M. de la Place recommended the Peak of Teneriffe, or Mont Blanc, as a suitable meridian.

A fresco painting has been discovered at Pompeii, representing an eruption of Vesuvius, and several processions at the foot of the mountain. If this picture be correctly drawn, the site of Naples was formerly much more elevated than at present, and the Somma did not exist, or rather formed a part of Vesuvius.

There are now no fewer than three newspapers published in the capital of New South Wales. The files of these journals contain reports of meetings of agricultural societies, of proceedings of courts of law, pastoral charges to the clergy; discussions, political and literary; long columns of advertisements; in short, all the characteristics of an English newspaper, in a spot in the Antipodes, a few years ago tenanted only by a few naked savages. The Archdeacon's charge to the clergy of New South Wales states, that "the offspring of this colony has not its equal either for morals or quickness of apprehension." He states further, that they have the royal commands for the establishment of parochial lending libraries, and that "three distinct libraries have been sent out by his Britannick Majesty, together with a donation of one hundred pounds, independent of the church plate to each of the churches."—Ch. Obs.

American Porcelain.—The Porcelain manufactory at Jersey City, established about eight months since, is now going on with a fair prospect of success. The materials both for the body of the article and for the glazing are all found abundantly in the United States, and are thought to be of a quality at least equal to the best French materials. Skilful and experienced workmen have been induced to come over from France, and a variety of articles of porcelain have already been finished at the establishment. A still greater quantity of porcelain vessels, many of them executed with great ingenuity and perfection, after the finest models of the antique, are now ready for the oven. We have seen several of the articles manufactured there, which, in the purity and delicacy of their texture, are nothing inferior to the finest French porcelain.—New York Evening Post.

The Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette mentions the following as a curiosity:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

M. Velsac claims to have discovered a remedy for smallpox. The following is the account of his method:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

The Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette mentions the following as a curiosity:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

M. Velsac claims to have discovered a remedy for smallpox. The following is the account of his method:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

M. Velsac claims to have discovered a remedy for smallpox. The following is the account of his method:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

M. Velsac claims to have discovered a remedy for smallpox. The following is the account of his method:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

M. Velsac claims to have discovered a remedy for smallpox. The following is the account of his method:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.

M. Velsac claims to have discovered a remedy for smallpox. The following is the account of his method:—A lady in this town, a few days since, laid out some linen on the grass to whiten, and on taking it up, found to her astonishment a number of flowers elegantly painted upon it. A second time the same magical picture was stamped upon her linen, which led to the discovery of the fair painter. It was found to be a little worm, which diligently laboured till he produced the flower, and then died. The flowers are large, perfectly regular and variegated. The colour of the centre is yellow, the foliage of a dusky brown. Naturalists can probably give some further account of this little embroiderer.
If putrescent fluids have run upon the ground, their odour is destroyed by pouring the diluted chlorate on the place, and stirring it with a broom; by dash- ing it upon porticoes, stair-cases, &c. which are infected, a similar effect is produced.

Vaults, privies, sewers, &c. are cleansed in a similar manner.

Did our limits permit, all the statements in relation to this subject, contained in Mr. Laisné’s letter might be corroborated by particular cases; only a few can be alluded to. The contagious effluvia emanating from diseased persons, are completely destroyed by sprinkling the chamber with one of the liquid chlorates, very much diluted with pure water; it should be dashed about the beds; and physicians and attendants should moisten their hands and their nostrils with the liquid.

These agents remove the odour of foul teeth and gums, and neutralize the dangerous emanation from the ulcerated sore throat. A purulent and offensive discharge from the bladder was removed by injections of a very dilute chlorate. Bodies kept for interment until they are offensive, may be rendered innoxious by these fluids, and professional men, called to examinations connected with medical jurisprudence, with processes of embalming, or with demonstrations in anatomy, should secure themselves by a free use of these powerful agents.

ininsupportable. The application of the chlorate of lime produced a wonderful effect—the smell ceasing almost from the first aspersion.

They neutralize the foul air of marshes, of markets, and other places where animal matters occasion a putrid and deleterious effluvium.

The common sewer in Paris, called Amelot, being entirely obstructed, had been for 40 years a nuisance. In 1782, eight men were suffocated in an attempt to cleanse it, and in a recent effort several workmen had fallen down in a state of asphyxia; when the attempt was again made, and with entire success, and without accident. The safety of this painful and dangerous operation appears to have been imputable entirely, to the use of the chlorate of lime, with which the workmen wet their hands, arms, and nostrils, and also all the putrescent matters which they were removing. The superintendent derived his safety from a disinfecting bottle, which he occasionally applied to his nostrils.—The space to be cleared was from ten to fourteen feet long, the putrescent matter formed a bed of four feet and a half in thickness, and the labour occupied more than four hours.

One of the workmen who had been thrown into a state of asphyxia, in the attempt to enter the vault without precaution, and who had lain forty-eight hours in this situation, entirely without sense, was completely restored by the use of the chlorate of lime, inhaling the odour, receiving the fluid internally, and having it sprinkled in his chamber.

M. Labarreque’s preparation is called in the French memoir chlorure de xide de sodium et de chaux, and the method of preparing it is given in Tome I. des Archives générales de Médecine.”

---

Religious Intelligence.

MINUTES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America met, agreeably to appointment, in the First Presbyterian Church in the City of Philadelphia, May 18th, 1826, at 11 o’clock, A. M. and was opened by the Rev. Stephen N. Rowan, D. D. the Moderator of the last Assembly, with a Sermon from Colossians, iv. 17, “Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it.”

After prayer, the Committees were read, and it appeared that the following Ministers and Elders were duly appointed, and attended as Commissioners to the Assembly, viz.—

OF THE PRESBYTERY OF

Niagara, Buffalo, Genessee,

Rochester, Ontario, Geneva,

MINISTERS.

Calvin Colton.
Samuel T. Mills.
Joseph Penney.
William F. Curry.
Norris Bull.
Henry Axtell, D. D.
Joseph Merril.
Lucas Hubbell.

Elders.

None.
None.
None.
Jacob Gould.
Alfred Beecher.
Theodore Parsons.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Town</th>
<th>Ministers</th>
<th>Elders</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Corland</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cayuga</td>
<td>James Richards, D. D.</td>
<td>James M’Chain.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Samuel Parker.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>William M. Adams.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Alpha Miller.</td>
<td>Abijah Thomas.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>David Chassell.</td>
<td>Harvey Fisk.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oneida</td>
<td>James Abell.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oswego</td>
<td>Eleazar S. Barrows.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onondaga</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Owasco</td>
<td>Isaac Clinton.</td>
<td>William Clark.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Moses Parmelee.</td>
<td>John Fine.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>William Miltimore.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Troy</td>
<td>James V. Henry.</td>
<td>James Boughton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Columbia</td>
<td>John Younglove.</td>
<td>James Wallace.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Henry B. Stimson.</td>
<td>Levi Calender.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sylvester Woodbridge.</td>
<td>Campbell Bushnell.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hudson</td>
<td>Jared Dewing.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Charles Cummins.</td>
<td>James Wallace.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>George Stebbins.</td>
<td>Townsend Seely.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>None.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>James G. Ogilvie.</td>
<td>Eleazar Lord.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Goldsmith.</td>
<td>Richard Cunningham.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Newark</td>
<td>Joseph M’Elroy.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Samuel Fisher.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gideon N. Judd.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>William B. Barton.</td>
<td>Jacob Davis.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Newton</td>
<td>Jacob R. Castner.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lemuel F. Leake.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Isaac V. Brown.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Charles Hodge.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Castle</td>
<td>John Burtt.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Samuel Martin, D. D.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert White.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Eliphalet W. Gilbert.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>None.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lewes</td>
<td>Alexander Campbell.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baltimore</td>
<td>James Laurie, D. D.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>District of Columbia</td>
<td>Reuben Post.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carlisle</td>
<td>William Neill, D. D.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Henry R. Wilson.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>William R. Dewitt.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Huntingdon</td>
<td>James Galbraith.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Peebles.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northumberland</td>
<td>George Junkin.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>William R. Smith.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Redstone</td>
<td>Alexander M’Candless.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ohio</td>
<td>Francis Herron, D. D.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Elia P. Swift.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Thomas D. Baird.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OF THE PRESBYTERY OF</td>
<td>MINISTERS.</td>
<td>ELDRERS.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------</td>
<td>------------</td>
<td>---------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Steubenville,</td>
<td>Donald McIntosh.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Erie,</td>
<td>Samuel Tait.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alleghany,</td>
<td>John Munson.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hartford,</td>
<td>Thomas E. Hughes.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grand River,</td>
<td>Jonathan Leslie.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Portage,</td>
<td>Joseph Treat.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Huron,</td>
<td>Samuel B. Wilson.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Winchester,</td>
<td>John Lodor.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lexington,</td>
<td>Conrad Speece, D. D.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hanover,</td>
<td>John H. Rice, D. D.</td>
<td>William Maxwell.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abingdon,</td>
<td>William J. Armstrong.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Lexington,</td>
<td>James Blythe, D. D.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ebenezer,</td>
<td>Samuel Taylor.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transylvania,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muhlenburg,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Louisville,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wabash,</td>
<td>John T. Hamilton.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salem,</td>
<td>James H. Johnston.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madison,</td>
<td>Solomon S. Miles.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lancaster,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Athens,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chillicothe,</td>
<td>William Dickey.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Columbus,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cincinnati,</td>
<td>Joshua L. Wilson, D. D.</td>
<td>Caleb Kemper.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miami,</td>
<td>James Coe.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richland,</td>
<td>Thomas Barr.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Union,</td>
<td>Eli Sawtelle.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Tennessee,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French Broad,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shiloh,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mississippi,</td>
<td>Samuel Hunter.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Missouri,</td>
<td>George Potts.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Orange,</td>
<td>Lemucll D. Hatch.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fayetteville,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Concord,</td>
<td>Daniel Gould.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mecklenburg,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bethlehem,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alabama,</td>
<td>Thomas Alexander.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>North Alabama,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harmony,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Georgia,</td>
<td>Elipha White.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charleston Union,</td>
<td>Reynolds Bascom.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>South Carolina,</td>
<td>Henry Reid.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hopewell,</td>
<td>None.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gen. Association of Massachusetts,</td>
<td>Joab Brace.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reformed Dutch Church,</td>
<td>Ebenezer Porter, D. D.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German Reformed Church,</td>
<td>Benjamin B. Wisner.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Wheeler.</td>
<td>Frederick Erringer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Thomas M. Strong.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John H. Smaltz.</td>
<td>None.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
John Hutton, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of Troy, appeared in the Assembly without a commission; but, as testimony being given, that he had not been appointed as an elder, he was received as a member. Isaiah Bissell, from the Presbytery of New London, appeared in the Assembly, and was accepted as an elder in the Presbytery. A member of that Assembly informed the Assembly that he had not been set apart as an elder, but that he was appointed as a member by the Presbytery, in conformity with a conventional agreement between General Assembly and the Association of Connecticut. After discussion, the Assembly adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning. Concluded prayer.

9th, 9 o'clock, A.M., the Assembly was constituted with prayer. Minutes of the last session were read. Rev. Cyrus Gilderseleeve, from the Presbytery of Susquehanna, the Rev. Peet, from the Presbytery of the Rev. James Hoge, from the Presbytery of Columbia, and Dr. Dunn from the Presbytery of Newark, David I. Burr, ruling elder, from the Presbytery of Hanover, appeared in the Assembly, and their commissions were taken their seats as members. The Assembly resumed the consideration of the messages from Mr. Bissell, and after considerable discussion, it was reported that Mr. Bissell be admitted as a member of the Assembly. Rev. Thomas M'Auley, D.D., was moderator, and the Rev. John D. D., and the Rev. Samuel T. were chosen temporary clerks.

ed, That it be the order of the Assembly, and afterwards on their own adjournments.

Resolved, that the General Assembly, and such persons as may choose to unite with them, will spend next Wednesday evening in this church, as a season of special prayer for the out-pouring of the Spirit on the churches, and in other religious exercises. Dr. Janeway, Dr. Ely, and Mr. McCalla, were appointed a committee to make arrangements for the evening.

Resolved, That it be the order of the Assembly to adjourn the Assembly, and examine the Synodical and Presbytery Reports.

Mr. Post, Mr. Dewitt, and Mr. Potter, were appointed a committee to receive these reports, examine them, and read to the Assembly such parts of them as they may judge necessary to be read for the information of the Assembly; and also to prepare a statement to be transcribed into the Compendious View.

Mr. B. Strong, Mr. Nassau, and Mr. Fine, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Genesee.

Dr. Martin, Mr. Swift, and Mr. Maxwell, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of New York.

Dr. Blythe, Mr. E. White, and Mr. J. Gould, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Albany.

Mr. Dewitt, Dr. Anderson, and Mr. McLearne, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of New York.

Mr. Miltimore, Mr. Henry, and Mr. Calender, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of New Jersey.

Mr. Stebbins, Mr. Cummins, and Mr. Cuninghame were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Philadelphia.

Mr. Brown, Mr. Baldwin, and Mr. Freeman, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Adams, Mr. Barrows, and Mr. Molaison, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Ohio.

Mr. Ford, Mr. Woodbridge, and Mr. Davis, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of the Western Reserve.
Mr. Parker, Mr. Lyons, and Mr. Kirkpatrick, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Virginia.

Mr. Hunter, Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Semple, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Kentucky.

Mr. Clinton, Mr. Stimson, and Mr. Blake, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of Tennessee.

Mr. Taylor, Mr. Treat, and Mr. Trimble, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of North Carolina.

Mr. Hughes, Mr. Leslie, and Mr. Wallace, were appointed a committee to examine the Records of the Synod of South Carolina and Georgia.

Adjourned till this afternoon at 4 o'clock, P.M. Concluded with prayer.

Four o'clock P.M. The Assembly met and was constituted by prayer. The minutes of last session were read.

Rev. Samuel Nott, from the Presbytery of Albany, and Mr. John Poor, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of New Brunswick, appeared in the Assembly, and their commissions being read, took their seats as members.

The delegates appointed by the last Assembly to attend the several Ecclesiastical bodies, with which the Assembly have a correspondence, reported respectively, and their reports were accepted.

A number of copies of the printed minutes of the General Association of Connecticut, of the General Association of Massachusetts, of the General Association of New Hampshire, of the General Convention of Vermont, and of the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church, were laid on the table, which were ordered to be distributed by the clerks among the members.

The committee appointed by the last General Assembly to confer with a similar committee to be appointed by the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, should they deem it expedient to appoint such a committee, and to prepare a plan of correspondence between the two bodies, reported that they met a committee of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, in the city of New York, Dec. 30, 1825; which committee on the part of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, consisted of the Rev. Alexander McLeod, D.D., the Rev. James Christie, and the Rev. John Gibson. After Conference the joint committees resolved to submit to their respective bodies, the following articles of agreement, viz.

The General Assembly and the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, lamenting the existing separations between the members of the body of Christ, and believing that all the members of that body, being many, are one body; and trusting to the word of God, that these separations will not be perpetual, do agree to use all scriptural means, in the exercise of patience and prudence, to bring their several ecclesiastical connexions to uniformity in doctrine, worship, and order, according to the word of God.

Art. II.

In order to bring about this desirable object on the basis of the proper unity of the visible church, it is mutually conceived, that the ministers, members, and judicators of these churches, treating each other with Christian respect, shall always recognize the validity of each other’s acts, and ordinances, consonant to the scriptures; and yet that any church judicator belonging to either body, may examine persons, or review cases of discipline, on points at present peculiar or distinctive to themselves.

ARTICLE III.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, shall severally appoint two Commissioners, with an alternate to each, to attend these judicators respectively, who shall hold their offices till they are superseded by another choice; and these commissioners shall have the privilege of proposing measures important to the church of Christ; and of delivering their opinions on any question under discussion; but they shall have no vote in its decisions.

ARTICLE IV.

In order to carry this last article into effect, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church will at their sessions, in May, 1826, appoint commissioners who shall attend the succeeding meeting of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, provided the said Synod shall have concurred in the above plan of correspondence.

The above report was unanimously adopted, and the plan of correspondence agreed upon by the joint committees, was accordingly sanctioned by the Assembly.

The committee on Psalmody reported that they have had the important business of their appointment under serious consideration; and have arranged such plans of operation as they humbly hope may be efficient to the great object in view. They think they shall have the indulgence of the Assembly, under a recollection of the magnitude of the labor, if they defer a particular report until the meeting in May next.
The committee were continued. A communication from Mr. Harvey Chapin was read, and committed to the judicial committee.

(To be continued.)

OBITUARY NOTICE.

Died, after a short illness, at his residence in Arch Street, Philadelphia, on Sabbath evening, July 23d, 1826, Daniel Audon, for many years a distinguished teacher of a young ladies' academy in this city. A memoir of this excellent man and eminent Christian is in preparation for our next number.

The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of July last, viz.

Of Messrs. C. Starr and M. Allen, per James S. Green, Esq., from the treasurer of the Bible Society of Caledonia, New York, for the Contingent Fund $10 00

Of Mr. William S. Plumer, one of the Theological students, per ditto, from an unknown friend to the Seminary, for ditto 10 00

Of Rev. John W. Scott, a quarter's rent for ditto 87 50

Amount received for the Contingent Fund 107 50

Of Rev. John B. Davies, per Thomas Fleming, Esq., of Charleston, S. C. for the Southern Professorship, from the following persons in the bounds of Bethel Presbytery, formerly part of Concord Presbytery, viz.

1825, Rev. Robert B. Walker - - - - $31 00
James S. Adams - - - - 43 25
John B. Davies - - - - 30 00
Mr. Robert Harris - - - - 30 00

134 25

1826, Rev. Robert B. Walker - - - - $20 00
John B. Davies - - - - 5 75
Aaron Williams - - - - 20 00 45 75 180 00

Of Mr. James Anderson, of New York, per Robert Ralston, Esq., for the endowment of a Scholarship - - - - 2500 00

Total $2787 50

---

View of Publick Affairs.

EUROPE.

The foreign intelligence which has reached us within the last month is not of great interest.

BRITAIN.—London papers to the 17th of June, inclusive, have been received in this country. The British Parliament was prorogued on the 2d of June till the 14th of that month, and then dissolved. Writs were immediately issued for calling a new Parliament. Shortly before the prorogation, some new regulations were adopted, to prevent bribery at elections. The measure was carried in the Commons, only by the Speaker's casting vote. Whether these regulations have had any influence in producing riotous proceedings at the pending elections, we know not; but such proceedings, to an unusual extent, appear to have taken place. At Carlisle the civil officers were driven off the ground by the rioters, who could not be subdued, till they were fired on by the troops that were called in to disperse them.—Several lives were lost. The whole kingdom was occupied, at the last accounts, with the election of members for Parliament, and nothing else attracted publick attention—unless we except the arrival of our countryman, senator John Randolph, and the sage and smart sayings which he is reported to have uttered.

FRANCE.—The last advices we have seen from France are to the 14th of June inclusive. General Sebastiani, in the French legislature, had made an energetic appeal in favour of the Grecian cause. But although private sympathy and liberality in behalf of the suffering Greeks seem to be awakened, not only in France but almost throughout Europe, yet we perceive no decisive indications that governmental measures are likely to be adopted in their favour—Although M. de Ville, the French prime minister, declared in debate, "that the cabinets of Europe had not been indifferent to the interests of the Greeks, and that diplomacy would soon put an end to the evils deplored." Alas! there are deplorable evils to which no future measures can apply a remedy. It is said that an unusual number of French military officers have lately resigned their commissions, disprocessed with the ascendancy influence which has been exerted on military affairs. It is also said that a great number of families from Alsatia, were in the act of emigrating to the United States. The French chambers were engaged in animated discussions on a number of topics; but they are not of great interest to any but Frenchmen.

Spain.—It appears that the British court is still using all its influence with that of Madrid to obtain from the latter a declaration of the Independence of Mexico and Colombia. As yet, however, there has been no yielding on the part of the infatuated Spanish monarch. Distress of every kind still pervades this unhappy nation.

Portugal.—The emperor Don Pedro I. of Brazil, who inherited the crown of Portugal, has confirmed the regency appointed by his dying father; and has declared that his daughter Maria, about ten years of age, is queen of Portugal, and that he will remain in his South American empire—It is said that Maria is to be married to her uncle Don Miguel—We scarcely believe this.

Rome.—The Pope, it appears, has appointed another bishop for the United States, with the title of Bishop of St. Augustine. His diocese is to consist of the States of Tennessee and Alabama, and the territory of Florida.

Greece.—It is stated in the French papers, that there is reason to hope a portion of the garrison of Missolonghi has escaped—The atrocious cruelties perpetrated by the Egyptian troops on their Greek captives, are almost too horrible for recital—Ibrahim gave orders to kill all the prisoners taken at Missolonghi; and as these were not sufficient to furnish the six thousand heads and pairs of ears, which the Sultan had ordered him to send to Constantinople, he made up the number by the slaughter of unarmed peasants. How Christian nations can witness this and similar acts of cruelty and not interfere, is a problem which we beg never to be required to solve. It appears that Ibrahim is weakened by his victories, but it is stated that strong reinforcements are on their way to Greece from Egypt. In the mean time, the most unhappy and embittered dissensions still prevail among the party leaders in Greece. At present, the party of Colocotroni is triumphant; and Mavrocordato and Condurioti have been obliged to flee for their lives, and have taken refuge at Hydra. It is affirmed, nevertheless, that since the fall of Missolonghi, all the Greek chiefs have redoubled their energy in calling their countrymen to arms. It appears that the National Assembly of Greece have vested the civil and military affairs of the country in a commission of eleven members.

Russia.—The Empress Elizabeth, widow of the late emperor Alexander, died on the 10th of May, while on her way from Taganrog to Moscow. She was a niece of the Grand Duke of Baden, was born in 1779, and was married to the emperor Alexander in 1793. She accompanied the emperor in his last journey to his Southern provinces, and witnessed his death at Taganrog.

The recent concessions of Turkey to the demands of Russia, although productive of the appearance of pacification and satisfaction, on the part of the latter power, are by many believed to be nothing more than an advantage which will be used by Russia at no distant period, for the utter subversion of the Ottoman power in Europe. Some accounts represent the Turk as suspicious of unfair designs on the part of Russia, and as tardy in fulfilling the stipulations of the treaty, and as victualing the fortresses on the Danube—The last accounts, however, represent both the contracting parties as satisfied, and as manifesting mutual confidence.

The coronation of the emperor Nicholas had been put off till August, in consequence of the death of the empress dowager Elizabeth.

Asia.

It is a principle with us to correct our errors, whenever we discover them. Mishap by the articles extracted from English papers, ignorant that the British were carrying on any other war in India except with the Burmese, and never having heard of the town of Bhurtpoor, or having entirely forgotten it if we had, we represented it as the strongest fortress of the Burman empire. We find, by examining the map, that it is about fifteen degrees to the West and North of the Burman empire. The war then carried on had, it appears, no connexion with the Burmese war. It was undertaken primarily to restore to his throne a native prince exiled by a usurper, but vainly.
we believe, to strengthen the British power in India. The expedition was conducted by Lord Combermere, with an army of 30,000 men, and a large train of artillery. This war is now terminated by the complete success of the British arms, and the taking of an immense booty—The British loss was 102 killed; 466 wounded; 11 missing.

We have seen the official despatch of Sir A. Campbell, giving an account of the renewal of the Burmese war. His representation is, and it appears to be a just one, that the negotiation for peace and the formation of a treaty, was a measure of deliberate perfidy on the part of the Burmese. That there was no intention to make peace, but only to gain an advantage by the cessation of hostilities—That the treaty which was to have been ratified in 15 days, had not even been sent to the emperor. When Sir A. Campbell discovered the treachery, he attacked the town of Malwun, or Malawin, before which his army was encamped, carried it by storm, after a tremendous cannonade and rocket firing, and at the last dates was pursuing his march for the capital, Ummerapooa.

The loss of the British was said to be only 14; that of the Burmese 500 dead on the field, 80 pieces artillery, 120 ginpalls (grasshoppers) 1800 stands of muskets, 20 tons of powder, a large quantity of munitions, and the military chest containing 36,000 rupees—It was hoped there would not be much more resistance. We believe that these successes of the British in the Eastern world, and the extension of their dominions there, will eventually be overruled for good, and for the diffusion of the gospel: yet those concerned in making these conquests "think not so, neither doth their heart mean so"—Wealth and power are their object; in pursuit of which they regard not justice, nor the waste of human life. Their responsibility is awful; although He whose prerogative it is, may bring good out of evil.

AFRICA—furnishes, for the last month, no intelligence of importance.

AMERICA.

PANAMA.—On the 20th of May last, delegates to the Congress, expected to convene here, had arrived from no other states than those of Peru and Guatemala. Chili, it appears, has not yet appointed delegates, and the republics of Rio de la Plata are said to be strongly opposed to the measure. Jealousy of the dominant influence of Bolivar, and the fear of some measures which may control the will and power of the several independent states, are represented as the causes of delay. It is said that the course recommended by our country, when generally known, would have much influence.

COLOMBIA.—The aspect of the political affairs of this republic, which not long since appeared so promising, is at present very gloomy. Two great parties are formally arrayed against each other. General Bermudez is at the head of one, and General Paez commands the other. Both are organizing a powerful military force, and we fear that bloodshed and civil war will follow; unless the speedy arrival of Bolivar shall prevent the catastrophe—He, it is to be regretted, was so distant, and so circumstances, at the last advices, that it was thought he could not be expected in Colombia soon. We hope he will arrive in time to interpose his influence, to prevent those conflicts of the opposing parties, in which all the tyrants in the world would rejoice, and which would be most auspicious to all our sister republics of the South.

Buenos Ayres.—Hostilities between Buenos Ayres and the Brazilian Emperor seem of late to have been wholly confined to naval operations. The emperor has the most vessels of war, but the republic has so skilful a commander of her little fleet in Commodore Brown, that hitherto she has had the advantage. A new commodore, Captain Norton, is expected to supersede the late Portuguese Admiral Lobo; and the destruction of the republican fleet is then predicted—with what probability we know not; but we are sorry to see an American, or an Englishman, taking the command of any forces, which are to act against those who are contending for their rights.

BRAZIL.—On the 6th of May, Don Pedro I. Emperor of Brazil, opened what he calls the second National Assembly, under the constitution which he framed. He felicitates the "august and most dignified representatives of the Brazilian nation" on the harmony which, under this constitution, prevails among the political departments in the best possible manner"—except in what he denominates "the Cisplatina Province"—otherwise called the Banda Oriental. He charges the inhabitants of that province with ingratitude for revolting against his government, and declares that the national honour demands that this province should remain an integral part of his empire. Besides this, the speech contains little noticeable, beside what is embraced in the following paragraph, which we shall leave to speak for itself.

"I have confirmed the Regency in Portugal, which my father had created. I have given an amnesty: I have given a constitution. I have abdicated and ceded all the indisputable and irrefragable rights which belonged to the monarchical crown of Portugal, and the sovereignty of those kingdoms, to the person of my much beloved and
View of Publick Affairs.

Aug.

dear daughter, the Princess Donna Maria da Gloria, now Donna Maria the Second, Queen of Portugal. This was proper for my honour and the good of Brazil. Thus some Brazilians, though incredulous, will know (what they ought to have known) that the interest of Brazil, and the love of her independence are strong in me; that I have abdicated the crown of the Portuguese monarchy, which by indisputable right belonged to me, only because at a future day it might compromit the interests of Brazil, of which I am the perpetual defender.”

UNITED STATES.—Within the month past, an occurrence has taken place in our country which has awakened, throughout the whole, the most lively feelings, and which will become a subject of most interesting contemplation for posterity. The two men, who have, of the other two, were instrumental in pronouncing and proclaiming the independence of the United States in the Congress of 1776, are surviving that event for half a century, and witnessing as the fruit of it the unrivalled prosperity of their country, and receiving for themselves its highest honours, expired, at the distance of five hundred miles from each other, on the very day of the national Jubilee, and while its celebration was at the height in every part of the land.

John Adams was born on the 19th of October, 1735; Thomas Jefferson on the 2d of April, O. S. 1743. Of course, at the time of their death, on the 4th of July, 1836, the former was in his 91st, and the latter in his 84th year.

In the Congress of 1776, the motion for independence was first made by Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, on the 7th of June. On the 10th of that month, a committee of the whole reported, “That these colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown; and that the union between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.” The consideration of this report was made the day before the day for the 1st of July following: and a committee was appointed to prepare a draught of a declaration of independence; that it might be ready for immediate promulgation, if Congress should decide in its favour. This committee consisted of five members; namely, Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and —— Livingston. The draughting of the instrument was, by their fellow committee men, referred to the two first named—It was, in fact, prepared entirely, in the first instance, by Mr. Jefferson; and it is said that a copy of this original draught has been left among his papers. With some modifications, not at all affecting the spirit and design of the whole as originally written, this declaration was formally sanctioned by Congress on the 4th of July—the report of the committee of the whole having been adopted two days before.

Men of more deliberation than were the fathers of our country, never decided on momentous publick affairs. The matter of independence was most fully, freely, and gravely discussed. Some, of whose integrity, patriotism and wisdom, not a doubt was entertained, thought that it ought at least to be delayed. Of these, the late venerable John Dickinson was the most distinguished; and his ingenuity and well known powers of argumentation were exerted to the utmost, to obtain a delay. John Adams was his opponent, and the respondent of all who sided with him. It was, in fact, the acumen, learning, energy and eloquence of Mr. Adams, that bore down all opposition, and secured nearly a unanimous vote. In regard to this conflict, Mr. Jefferson characterized his associate Adams, by calling him the Ajax Telamon of the day. Hence it appears, that the declaration of independence was penned by the talents of Mr. Jefferson, and carried through Congress chiefly by those of Mr. Adams. Mr. Jefferson seldom spoke in that body, and never, we believe, at any length. His powers were those of a writer, not of a speaker. We think the foregoing statement may be relied on as authentic, although a part of it depends on verbal testimony—Yet the verbal testimony was that of actors in the scenes to which it relates, with many of whom we had, in younger life, the honour of a personal acquaintance.

After the declaration of independence, the course of the two great men, whose death our country has been called to commemorate during the last month, is known to all our readers. They were, for a time, ardent political rivals. But it was among the happy circumstances of their protracted lives, that they outlived all their hostile feelings, and renewed, with the utmost cordiality, all the warm friendship of their earlier years. Full of days and full of honours, and on the jubilee of their country's freedom, they have descended to the tomb; and with a unanimity and ardour which does honour to our citizens, their virtues and their services are commemorated, by every token of the highest regard. Numerous reflections with which our mind is filled we have not space, nor, in some respects, freedom to express. We desire to bless God, that he has hitherto raised up for our country such able and faithful men to manage it, and should be the faintest of all our readers, of our publick councils, and all the departments of our government may ever be guided and managed by those who fear God, possess wisdom, and devote all their power to the promotion of the publick welfare.
LECTURES ON THE SHORTER CATECHISM OF THE WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES—ADDRESS TO YOUTH.

LECTURE XXIII.
(Continued from p. 340.)

In so common a book as Cruden’s Concordance, under the word prophet, you may find an account of the order and times in which the prophets of the Old Testament appeared, and of the standing, as to authority, which they had among the Jews. On these topics, therefore, I shall not dwell.
It may be proper, however, to remark, that there was a variety of ways, in which prophetick communications were made to prophets, in every age. Sometimes it was by supernatural appearances, either of angels, as in the case of Abraham, Lot and Manoah; or of other accompanying miracles, as in the case of Elijah and others. Sometimes by an audible voice, as in the case of Moses at Mount Sinai, and of Samuel and Elijah, in other circumstances.
Sometimes by extraordinary visions,
as in the cases of Ezekiel, and the Apostle John: Sometimes by dreams,
as in the case of Daniel and others.
And most frequently of all, by inward illumination and impulses.

No one will question that it is competent to the Deity, both to communicate his mind and will to his intelligent creatures, and to make them perfectly assured of the fact—so as-
Ch. Adv.—Vol. IV.
sured as to be under no danger and no possibility of deception—And all this was actually done in the case of all the ancient prophets. In whatever manner they obtained it,
they had, it is manifest, certain knowledge that what they delivered, was a message from God.

The testimony to be given to others that an individual spake under divine direction consisted, either in working a miracle, or else in such a weight of previous unexceptionable
character, or of publick, prophetick office—for which numbers were educated in schools established for the purpose—as to leave no reasonable doubt that the message was indeed
from God.

It may be proper to observe further, that almost the whole of the Patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations were, in a sense, prophetick.
My meaning is, that the persons, the types, symbols, and sacrifices of those dispensations, foreshowed the Saviour, and his character and work,
—that they, as well as prophecy,
were calculated and intended not only to give assurance of the advent of Christ, but also to teach what he was to do, and to effect.

At length Christ himself, the great prophet of his church appeared in the world; and spake as never man spake. Yet he recorded nothing with his own hand. The only authentick information we have that he ever wrote, was in the instance in which "he stooped down and wrote with his finger on the ground." But the faithful record of many of his discourses and doctrines, as well as of his publick acts and miracles, is given us by the four evangelists, under the guidance of the Spirit of infallible truth.
3 C

After the death of Christ, Luke, who wrote the gospel which bears his name, penned also the Acts of the Apostles, containing a short history of the establishment of the primitive church. And several of the apostles, among the chief of whom was the great apostle of the Gentiles, St. Paul, gave a far more full and extensive exposition and detail of the Christian doctrines and principles, than it was proper to give during the life of our Redeemer. Some have been disposed to consider the writings of the evangelists, as of higher authority than those of the authors of the epistles. But there is no ground whatever for this distinction: all are of equal authority, for all were equally given by a plenary inspiration.

Last of all, we have "The Revelation" made to St. John; in which a prophetick view is exhibited of the state of the church, to the very end of time. At the close of this book an intimation is given, accompanied with an awful sanction, that the canon of Scripture is complete—from which nothing is to be subtracted, and to which nothing is to be added. All subsequent pretensions to prophecy, therefore, are false and vain. Christ, as the great prophet of his church has, in that sacred book, the Bible, revealed all that is necessary to salvation, and will never make an addition. And remember, my young friends that, as it all came from him, so it all points to him. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy"—He is the centre of all, and to lead us savingly to the knowledge and enjoyment of him, is the design of all.—But, in order to this, be careful to remember that you must be taught inwardly by the Spirit of Christ, as well as outwardly by his word. You perceive that this the catechism distinctly affirms and inculcates. It affirms that Christ, as the great prophet of his church, not only reveals his word for salvation, but that he also reveals it to us, by his Spirit—The meaning is, not that he gives us personally any new revelation, but that he reveals to our hearts effectually, the spiritual import of the revelation contained in the Bible. To look, therefore, on the one hand, for any new revelation, is rank enthusiasm, or presumption. And to expect, on the other, that the revelation given will save our souls, till it is effectually set home by the Spirit who editeth it, is destructive self-sufficiency and delusion.

The Holy Spirit, by whose inspiration the sacred Scriptures were penned, opens the eyes of the human understanding, to perceive the moral glory, beauty and excellence of divine truth, beyond any attainment ever made by mere learning or study, without this heavenly aid. The same Almighty agent, also, gives divine truth, when thus perceived, a transforming influence on the heart—agreeably to our Saviour's intercessory prayer, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." "The entrance of thy words," says the Psalmist, "giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple." Under the influence of the Holy Spirit, inwardly revealing the truths of sacred Scripture to the minds of men, the gospel method of salvation is seen to be so suitable, so excellent, so complete—so worthy of God and so desirable to the sinner—that language can scarcely express the perceptions which are then entertained; and the heart, at the same time, is most powerfully, but most sweetly, persuaded, inclined and enabled to fall in with, and embrace the offered grace of the gospel. At different times, the various parts and passages of scripture, are thus presented to the view of the mind; and with such evidence, force, and fitness to the wants of the believer, that the most happy practical effects are produced.
Practical Christians, indeed, are those only who are acquainted with these blessed effects of revealed truth—effects which, after all, afford the fullest and most gratifying and satisfying conviction, that the source whence they are derived must be divine—that the Scriptures are given by the inspiration of God. On the whole, then, my dear youth, expect no new revelation, nor credit any pretenses that such a revelation has been received; but earnestly and constantly look to God, to reveal savingly in your understandings and hearts, by the power of his Spirit, the revelation which he has caused to be recorded in the sacred volume.

In concluding what I have to offer on this topick, it may be proper just to mention, that in reading pious writers on the subject of experimental religion, you will probably sometimes meet with the record of inward impressions, urging them to duty. In all such cases, it must be understood that the duty to which they were urged, was one clearly warranted by the written word—Otherwise, the impression must be regarded as altogether fond and delusive. The divine Spirit may, and certainly does, incline and draw us to the practice of Scripture truth, but never to any thing which is contrary to that truth, or inconsistent with it.

In closing this lecture let me exhort you—

1. To meditate with lively gratitude to God, on his great goodness, in revealing to us his mind and will in "the lively oracles" of inspiration. Without these, all history shows, that mankind, however otherwise improved or enlightened, have uniformly been polytheists and idolaters. How thankfully then ought we to receive those blessed communications, which a gracious God has been pleased to make by his Son, through his own blessed Spirit—communications relative to his own nature and will, the manner in which we may worship him acceptably, the whole duty which he requires of us, the way of return to him through the intervention of a Redeemer, and the certainty of eternal happiness beyond the grave, to all who truly accept and rely on Christ as he is freely offered in the gospel. The world witnesses no combination of folly, ingratitude and impiety, equal to that which is manifested by those, who cast from them with contempt, the unspeakable gift of God—the volume of his revealed will. Be it yours, my dear youth, to act a wiser and better part. Reverence profoundly, study diligently and carefully, those "holy Scriptures which are able to make you wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." In ordinary circumstances, let no day of your life pass, without reading a portion of these Scriptures, attentively and devoutly. Make them, in all cases, the man of your counsel, and endeavour to govern your conduct and your feelings by their sacred dictates.

2. Learn from what you have heard, to accompany the perusal of the Scriptures, with earnest prayer for the influences of that Holy Spirit, by whom they were indited; that the truths they contain may enter your understandings and your hearts with a saving efficacy. It is the want of this, believe it, which is the reason that some knowledge of the Bible—in many instances a very considerable intellectual knowledge—is entirely unproductive of the fruits of holiness—the great end for which God has revealed his will, and to attain which should be our main purpose in becoming familiar with it. Revealed truth, like other truth, may enlarge our intellectual stores, without having much, or any influence, on the moral powers of our minds—on the conscience and the affections. To produce this effect, there must be, if I may so express it, a second revelation. The Holy Spirit, agreeably to the distinct intimation of the Saviour himself, the great prophet of his church, must "take of the things which are his, and show them unto us"—must bring home the truth.
which relate to him, and to our eternal well being, with a light and a transforming energy, which shall render us "new creatures in Christ Jesus." Pray for this in the devout daily reading of your Bibles; for I verily believe that this practice was never long continued, without the most sensible benefit—never persisted in, without being ultimately productive of that "faith, the end of which is the salvation of the soul." Amen.

ON THE ATONEMENT.

No. VII.

Objections Answered.

My dear Friend,

That Jesus Christ actually bore the penalty of the law, was, I hope, clearly evinced in my last. Against this doctrine, however, several objections are urged by our brethren. But objections, how plausible soever they may seem, ought not to outweigh plain scriptural testimony to the contrary. If, therefore, we could not satisfactorily remove every difficulty, still the truth should be believed. It is the duty of Christians to receive with implicit faith whatever they find revealed in holy scripture.

Granted, the pupils of the new school will reply; we admit the paramount authority of inspiration; but we deny the truth for which you contend, to be a part of Divine revelation. To us, however, the texts adduced seem clear and decisive; and nothing that they can offer is sufficient to change our mind.

1. The first objection I shall notice, is urged against the interpretation we give to a particular text. When Paul says, (Gal. viii. 13.) "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree;" we think he does, in plain words, teach that Christ bore the curse or penalty of the divine law. But our brethren think otherwise; and one of them says, "It is, in no shape, asserted here, that Christ suffered the penalty of the law. The apostle tells us in what sense he "was made a curse for us." "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Believers are saved from the curse or penalty of the law by the consideration, that Christ "was made a curse" for them in another and a very different sense. He was "made a curse" inasmuch as he suffered, in order to open the door of hope to man, by the pains and ignominy of crucifixion. He hung upon a tree. He died as a malefactor. He died as one accursed. If this text prove that Christ suffered the penalty of the law, it does, at the same time, and by principles of legitimate exposition, prove, that the penalty of the law was crucifixion, or hanging on a tree. But the penalty of the law was eternal damnation threatened against the transgressor alone, and liable to be executed upon him, and upon no one else."* My answer to this objection will appear in the following observations.

First: To assert, as this writer does, that the penalty of the law can be executed on none but the transgressor himself, is certainly no legitimate proof in controversy with Christians who think differently, and assert the contrary to be true. We do not rest our case on mere assertion; already, it is believed, clear scriptural testimony has been adduced in support of the fact, that Christ suffered the penalty of the law; and to us the text under discussion affords such unequivocal evidence of it, that we are ready to wonder how he could, in the face of the apostle's declaration, indulge himself in the liberty of making so round and unqualified an assertion.

Secondly: The fact that Christ died a painful and ignominious

* Bezae, p. 45, 46.
death, and that he submitted to such a death for the sins of his people, is no subject of dispute. Our brethren admit it as cordially as we. It is admitted in the quotation above. The point of difference is the character of his sufferings. We say that they were an infliction of the curse or penalty of the law denounced against sin; this they deny. But death, it has been shown in the preceding letter, is the wages of sin, the curse or penalty of the law; and consequently as Christ underwent death for the sins of men, he endured the penalty of the law due to them.

Thirdly: The quotation by the apostle of a passage in the Old Testament, was not adduced to prove that our Redeemer was crucified. This fact had been fully recorded by the pen of more than one evangelist. It was perfectly well known to the Galatians. Any quotation from the Old Testament in proof of a fact so abundantly attested in the evangelical narrative, would have been entirely superfluous. Yet Mr. B. seems to think this to have been one reason of the quotation. "He hung upon a tree."

Fourthly: Nor was the quotation made to prove that Christ died as a malefactor. "He died," says Mr. B. "as a malefactor." This fact was fully known to all who were acquainted with the fact of crucifixion, and the account given of it by the inspired historians and teachers.

Finally: The quotation was brought forward to prove the character of the Redeemer's sufferings. It was not crucifixion only that he endured. He had suffered through life from various causes and in various ways. He had endured in Gethsemane unutterable mental agonies. His soul had been sorrowful even unto death. And on the cross the anguish he felt from the hidings of his Father's face, was unspeakably more severe than the bodily pains he underwent. "It pleased the Lord to bruise him." The sword of Jehovah awoke against the Shepherd. His soul was made an offering for sin. Whence all these sufferings of the Son of God? What were they? They were, we say, the infliction of the penalty of the law: and this, in our apprehension, the apostle declares very plainly, by telling us Christ was "made a curse for us." In proof or illustration of this fact, to teach us the true character of his sufferings, to mark distinctly the relation they bore to sin, he adduces the quotation, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." It is found on record in Deut. xxi. 22, 23.

But why was it thus written? Was it designed to express the indignation of Jehovah against the crimes of all who were thus put to death? But why, it may be asked, was this written against all who suffered capitally by hanging, and not against others who suffered by decapitation and by stoning, modes of punishment used by the Jews in relation to crimes of the deepest die? There was a peculiar reason for this record; and Scott, in his comment on this place, has assigned it: "In the current opinion," says this able writer, "they who were thus suspended were deemed accused of God: but the Holy Spirit doubtless dictated this expression in reference to Him, who was made a curse for us." By the providence of God it was so ordered that our Redeemer died that particular kind of death, which, in typical reference to his death, had long before been declared to be accursed; and thus he appeared visibly and outwardly, as in fact he was really, dying under the curse of God, or penalty of the law. Such is the apostle's meaning; and this is the design of his quotation.

The quotation establishes the fact, that the immaculate Saviour was accursed of God. But none can be accursed by the righteous Jehovah, but those whom it is right and just to curse. Nor can any be declared by him to be accursed except those against whom his law denounces a curse; because he has no curse to inflict but what his law denounces. It follows, then, that, as the spotless Redeemer was accursed, he must have been under the curse of the law; but as he could not be under it in consequence of any personal transgression, it remains that, as we have already shown, he was under it by his becoming the voluntary substitute of sinners, and engaging to bear the punishment due to them.

"I wonder," says the celebrated Beza, quoted by Scott on this text, "that Jerome and Erasmus should labour and seek for I know not what figure of speech, to show that Christ was not called accursed. Truly in this is placed all our hope: in this the infinite love of God is manifested; in this is placed our salvation, that our God, properly and without any figure, poured out all his wrath on his own Son;—caused him to be accursed, that he might receive us into his favour. Finally, without any figure, Christ was made a curse for us, in such a manner that unless he had been truly God, he must have remained under the curse for ever, from which, for our sakes, he emerged. For, indeed, if the obedience be figurative and imaginary, so must our hope of glory be."

2. The New School urge, as a second objection, against the doctrine of Christ enduring the penalty of the law, the impossibility of the fact. "It is," says one, "for ever impossible in the very nature of things, that Christ should become liable to suffer the punishment which the law has denounced against the transgressor, against him alone. The law has no penal demands against Christ—and such demands it can never establish. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," is the threatening of the law."* An objection, in appearance, formidable indeed! for if it were in the very nature of things impossible for Christ to suffer the punishment due to sinners, then it would be a hopeless task to endeavour to establish it as a fact that he did bear that punishment. But, I think, notwithstanding this bold assertion, the passages that have been cited plainly teach us that, in the judgment of inspired writers, Christ actually did bear the penalty of the law. Let us examine the proofs by which this confident assertion is supported.

* Beman, p. 34.

The first is, that the penalty of the law is denounced against the transgressor alone; meaning that it can be executed on him alone, and not on Christ. But this is merely offering one assertion to confirm another.

The second proof is another bare assertion, that "the law has no penal demands against Christ—and such demands it can never establish." Neither of these assertions contains any evidence.

But the third, being a quotation from scripture, seems to present some proof: "The soul that sinneth shall die." But how does this prove that Christ could not endure the penalty of the law for his people? The text is recorded in Ezekiel, ch. xviii. v. 4. Examine it, and you will find its meaning to be simply this: That in the next world the son shall not die or be punished in place of his guilty parent; nor shall the parent die or be punished in place of his guilty son: but every one shall bear the punishment of his own sins. The Jews had impiously impeached the conduct of Jehovah in his treatment of them; and he was pleased to vindicate himself by making this statement in regard to the principles of his administration. But what has this to do with the case of our Saviour? It does not declare that the soul of Christ should not die; for his soul did die in agony and pain. Nor does it say the curse of the law could not be inflicted on him as the substitute of promises, and threatenings, and precepts that were addressed to primitive Christians, had respect to Christians in every subsequent age? Who does not know that many promises given to the apostles, in private conversations of our Lord with them, belong to all his future disciples? The sentence denounced against the woman, in Gen. 3. 16, was spoken to Eve; and yet it has been executed on all her female posterity: and the sentence denounced against Adam, in the 17—19 verses, has been inflicted on all his offspring. Indeed almost every thing spoken to our first parents had a reference to their descendants; and as they are born in a state of mortality, and many die before they are capable of personal transgression; it is manifest, from incontrovertible facts, that the commination addressed to Adam had respect to his posterity; because it has, in every age, been uniformly executed on them. And as our blessed Lord submitted to the state of death, so it is, as already shown, apparent, that he endured the penalty of a violated law.

3. It is objected that Christ did not suffer spiritual death.

That the sacred scriptures represent mankind as being by nature "dead in trespasses and sins," will hardly be denied. It is true that sinners love their depravity; but this is no reason why it should be considered as absurd to suppose that being delivered up to the dominion of sin, was comprehended in the sentence of death denounced against a violation of the divine law; because to innocent man, delighting in holiness and in communion with God, it presented a terrible idea, an object of the greatest dread. That God does punish one sin by giving up the offender to another, is clearly taught in the volume of inspiration. Speaking of the stupid idolatry of the ancient heathen, the apostle says, "for this cause God gave them up unto the affections.”—“And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do the things which are not convenient.” We, therefore, believe that spiritual death, which ensued upon the withdrawing of the Holy Spirit from the soul of man in consequence of his sin, was included in the original commination of a righteous God against disobedience.

The Saviour was perfectly free from sin. Had the slightest stain of moral pollution marred his obedience, it would have destroyed its saving influence, and indeed made him as helpless as any of our fallen race. In bearing the penalty of the law, it was not necessary that the curse should, in all its circumstances, operate on him as on original transgressors. It was sufficient for him to endure what was essential to the curse, and what the law demanded from him as the surety of sinful men. Now, this consisted in shame, disgrace, pain, anguish, and misery in the whole of his human nature, in soul and in body. Punishment may, in circumstances, be very different in different persons. Capital offences are, by human law, punished in various ways; and sometimes one mode of inflicting death is commuted for another. The same diversity of circumstances is seen in the application of punishment under the Divine government. All impenitent sinners are subjected to the same curse of a violated law. Yet how different the sorrows, the pains, the afflictions of life in different men! How differently is natural death inflicted! On one by a sudden stroke of lightning; on another by a lingering disease! This man perishes in the ocean; that man is consumed in the flames of his dwelling. One dies through sheer pain; another gently expires. But in all these cases, thus varying in circumstances, the sentence of the Divine law is inflicted. And for anything we know to the contrary, the same diversity in regard to punishment may exist in the next world. The essence of the curse the Redeemer unquestionably did endure. He suffered in soul and in body. He was exposed to shame, disgrace, and ignominy. He endured unnumbered sorrows and miseries. He was deprived of the light of his Father’s countenance, so that he had to complain of being forsaken of him. His soul was exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death. And he actually underwent a separation of his soul from his body, and remained for some time in the state of the dead. “Thou shalt die,” said the law; and the Saviour, the surety of sinners, did die, in the very way the law required.

4. It is objected against our doctrine that the Redeemer did not endure eternal death.

In the eternity of future punishment all sound theologians agree. They know that sin deserves everlasting torments, and that a righteous God has threatened to inflict them on all impenitent transgressors.

But why is the punishment of sin eternal? Because a mere creature, being incapable of sustaining it in any given period, it must be prolonged through everlasting ages. But the divine Redeemer was able to support his human nature under any degree of pain and misery that the curse due to the sins of his people required to be inflicted on him; and the infinite dignity of his person imparted to his temporary sufferings a value that made them a fair and full equivalent for the everlasting sufferings of all who shall be finally saved. By this mode of inflicting the penalty, the justice of God was better satisfied, the honour of his law more effectually maintained, and the universe more impressively warned against the evil of disobedience, than could have been done by the infliction of it on our whole race.
On the Atonement.

393

that, in the vicarious death of Christ, as the substitute of people, all the ends of punishment were completely and gloriously answered. No duration of suffering in a guilty creature can satisfy Divine justice; it must parallel with his immortal existence; but the sufferings, endured by the immaculate and divine Saviour, in the short term of his earthly life, so entirely exhausted the curse, that law and justice did and could not, demand a single solitary tear, or one groan, to render his awful sacrifice himself complete. The eternity of punishment is to be considered not as a circumstance growing of a case, but as belonging to its essence. It depends on the nature of the subject. In a mere case it must be eternal; but in a Divine substitute. To have prolonged the sufferings of Christ and the period in which he endured them, would have been un naturally:

so our views of the atonement, objected, that the Redeemer did not, although a divine person, endure the amount of suffering incurred from him. "If," says a frequent quoted, "one soul must be saved by the atonement, it must sustain an amount of suffering equal to that involved in eternal condemnation of that soul; and if a thousand were saved, Christ must suffer a sand times that amount, and the same proportion for any other who are to be rescued from damnation and exalted to glory."—No, as a single sin deserved eternal misery, which certainly lies infinite suffering, we can see how every sin of all the redeemed could have been expiated in a few short hours, by the agonies of human nature of Christ, though nature was united to the Godhead. We say that Christ himself did not have made an adequate

or. IV.—Oh. Adv.

Beman, p. 78.
applied. Such was the nature of the representative principle on which Adam acted for us, that his first sin, by which the covenant was violated, has conveyed guilt and pollution to all his posterity, and would be equally destructive to all, if the number of his descendants were to be increased beyond that which the Divine decree has determined on. And from the nature of the same representative principle, it follows, that if all mankind were to become united to the Redeemer by faith, and the infinite merits of his atonement were to be applied to them, all would be saved.

Every reflecting mind will see, that the divine nature of Christ imparted to the sufferings and obedience of his human nature, to which it was personally united, an infinite value; and rendered him capable of enduring sufferings that were, in the eye of law and justice, a full and perfect equivalent "for the eternal damnation of all those who will be finally saved." A small piece of gold is in value equal to a much larger quantity of silver, and a still greater quantity of baser metal. A diamond will surpass in value silver or gold that would outweigh it a thousand times. The blood of a rational creature is worth more than the blood of dumb animals; and the blood of Christ is infinitely more precious than that of man. From sinful creatures justice demands eternal torments; but from the immaculate Son of God, while acting as the substitute of sinners, it could demand no more than he actually suffered while on earth, by which he exhausted the terrors of the curse. The Father filled the cup that he put into his hands with every bitter ingredient which the penalty of his law required. The human nature of Christ shrunk back for a moment from the deadly draught, and prayed that, if possible, it might pass from him; but knowing it must be taken, or man must perish, he drank the cup to its very dregs. "Ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot and without blemish." 1 Pet. i. 18, 19.

Thus I have endeavoured to answer the objections brought by our brethren against the views we entertain of the nature of the atonement. The attempt, I hope, has been a successful one.

Other points of contrast I reserve for subsequent letters. Should Providence permit, I may compare the two theories in reference to the honour they reflect on the perfections of God, on his holy law, and on the work of our Redeemer.

In the mean time, I remain,

Yours, affectionately.

HOW SHALL WE MAINTAIN BOTH TRUTH AND CHARITY?

(Concluded from p. 348.)

If then the differences between two or more religious denominations be rather nominal than real, if the conviction that such is the fact be so general and deep among the members of these denominations, that publick sentiment really calls for a union, and if by this union, strength, and not weakness, will be produced—in every such case, it is not only admitted but maintained that an amalgamation ought to take place. In all other cases, it is maintained that it ought not to be attempted—i. Because genuine Christian charity may be as fully and advantageously cultivated without it as with it. Nay, it is affirmed, as already intimated, that a part of this excellent Christian grace finds a scope for its exercise, which otherwise it would not have in embracing with full fraternal affection those who, in certain shades position or sentiment, differ of the success of Christian missions, as they are conducted by the Church Missionary Society of Great Britain, by the London Missionary Society, by the Baptist and Methodist Missionary Societies, by the Moravians or Unitas Fratrum, and by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in our own country: when he prays for the success of missionary labours, he has all these missions in his view; and he would, to a certain extent, cheerfully contribute his mite of money and personal exertion to promote them—Why? Because he believes that the immortal souls of the heathen will be saved when the great truths of the gospel, as taught by any of these sects, are cordially embraced and reduced to practice; and because he views this as infinitely more important, than that men should become Presbyterians. Now the writer considers these views and feelings, as exemplifying the small portion of Christian charity which he possesses, far more than he could rejoice in the success of no missions unless they were Presbyterians—conducted by men of his own denomination, and forming converts to multiply adherents to that order of church government which he prefers. Yet, while the writer can, as he believes, make this statement with perfect truth, he is not prepared to identify himself with any of the churches which he has mentioned. He is not prepared to do so, because he could not do it without compromising truth—Not essential truth;—not truth of the greatest importance; but yet truth which, while he remains a Presbyterian in sentiment, he feels that he is bound to maintain.

Here is then, another reason, why churches that regard each other as essentially orthodox, ought not to amalgamate, but to retain their distinctive character—They are bound as churches to maintain truth, as well as charity. Now charity may be preserved and en ercised, even in its greatest purity, we have already seen. How truth, that is, what different churches regard as truth, can be fully maintained, without preserving their distinctive character, is by the present writer not seen—He believes it impracticable. Every denomination must be supposed to think that there is a foundation in truth, even the revealed truth of God, for those peculiarities in which its difference from others consists. If this is not believed, the difference certainly ought not to be kept up. As soon as a man becomes convinced that another church is nearer the gospel standard than that to which he belongs, he ought immediately to change his connexion, and to join that, the constitution of which he believes to be nearest to what the New Testament requires. But while an individual, or a denomination, honestly and sincerely believes that certain peculiarities, constituting a distinctive character, are warranted by scripture, they cannot be given up without a surrender of truth; and this cannot lawfully be done, although the truth in question is not believed to be essential, nor even of very great importance. The writer supposes it may be taken for an axiom in morals, that truth is never to be treated as if it were falsehood—not even truth of the least importance. Truth, in itself, is doubtless not affected by the reasonings or judgments of men—It is not made, or modified, by human opinion. Be that opinion what it may, truth remains the same. Still, it is clear that every man's opinion is the standard of truth to himself. He is responsible to his God, for the manner in which he formed that opinion; but while it exists it must guide and govern him. A man of knowledge and reflection, will be very sensible that human opinion, or the estimate of truth, is much influenced by education, by example, by habit, and by different degrees of information; and hence he may see that men of great integrity may, in some things, differ widely from himself—Here is the foundation of his charity. “It hopeth all things.” It hopes that error may have been embraced without a forfeiture of integrity, and consequently that he who has embraced it may be a good man, his error notwithstanding. But with his own present views and convictions, he could not embrace that error, without forfeiting his integrity, violating his conscience, and ceasing to be a good man. He must therefore treat as error, what he regards as such.

The same is the case with denominations of Christians. They are bound to exhibit to the world the doctrines of the gospel, and the whole order of the church of Christ, as free from error as possible. All religious truth is of some importance, and of some efficiency; and having a choice to make, every man, and every denomination, is under a responsibility to God to promote his cause in a manner the most worthy of it, the most free from error, the most effectual, the most salutary, the most unobjectionable; and to do this, religious denominations must retain their distinctive characters—Their members must chiefly use their personal influence and exertions, and make their pecuniary donations, for the promotion of piety, in the denominations to which they severally belong; because they believe that here they will come the nearest to the mark at which they should aim—the advancement of truth with the least admixture of error; the doing of good with the least alloy of evil. If, indeed, there be a certain field of usefulness not cultivated at all by the denomination to which certain individuals belong, then no doubt it may be proper for them to aid in its cultivation, any denomination which they regard as holding the essentials of religion, till they have the opportunity to employ their means and influence.
in the manner which most fully accords with their sentiments and wishes. And in the mean time, they ought to use their best endeavours to stir up the members of the denomination to which they belong, to enter on the work which they have hitherto neglected.

3. Dissention and discord may best be avoided, and kind feelings towards our fellow Christians may best be preserved and cherished, by the several religious denominations retaining, except in the cases specified, their distinctive character. The writer is aware, that the contrary of this is believed by many; and that even the popular argument in favour of amalgamation is, that it will prevent discord and promote harmony. It is confidently believed, notwithstanding, that both reason and experience, if impartially consulted, will demonstrate this popular notion to be erroneous; and that the same authorities will firmly establish the position that has been taken in this particular. It is readily admitted, indeed, that if the different sects be supposed to cultivate an exclusive regard to their own interests, to cherish a spirit of bigotry, and to hurl anathemas against each other, as has too often been done, discord and strife will prevail; and the cause of Christ will suffer in the house of its friends. But the question is—how shall this be prevented? Certainly not by amalgamation; because these fierce and bigoted spirits, like oil and vinegar, can never be made to amalgamate. Their very nature prevents it. The farther they are kept asunder the less will their hostility be manifested. Is it not a fact that many of the real friends of vital godliness and Christian charity, are at this time passing from one extreme to another?—a common error, to which human nature is extremely prone. Having long seen and mourned over the dissensions which have taken place among good men, they seem to be desirous to merge them, all at once, in the tide of undistinguishing charity. But in doing this, have they not forgotten that truth, as well as charity, is to be maintained? The great desideratum is, to find a plan, which will best provide for the preservation of both these precious ingredients of genuine Christianity. The writer of this essay believes that there is no other way for the several denominations to provide for maintaining truth, without any sacrifice, but by keeping themselves distinct; and that charity will also be provided for most effectually, if, while they keep distinct, they will carefully and impartially consider what is essential, and what most important in religion, and will observe attentively how much of all that is essential and important is held by sects of a different name from themselves. Doing this, they will become very sensible that the difference is not such as to justify uncharitableness and alienation,—and thus bigotry will be destroyed, and free scope be given to brotherly affection.

The point immediately under consideration may be explained thus—By retaining their distinctive characters each sect may maintain its peculiarities without interfering with those of its neighbour, and thus may avoid giving offence and provocation; whereas if you amalgamate these sects you bring their peculiarities into unavoidable contact and interference, and altercation and alienation will be the result.—The parties cannot give up their peculiar notions and feelings without a sacrifice of truth, and they cannot maintain them without violating that union of sentiment which amalgamation indispensably requires. In a word, they are not prepared to walk together because they are not sufficiently agreed. If they attempt it, each will still endeavour to make proselytes to its own peculiarities, and to urge measures which will favour these peculiarities. Hence excitement will first be produced, then resentment, then discord, then parties of a permanent character will be formed; and not improbably, a violent rent will at last ensue, and new sects be created, greatly embittered against each other, and far more contentious than were the denominations out of which the amalgamated union was originally constituted. If we had time and space for the purpose, it would be easy to show from recorded history, that what is here stated as reasonable to expect, has sometimes taken place in fact—We shall only advert for a moment to what may still be fresh in the recollection of many now living. About five-and-twenty years ago, in a great religious excitement which took place in the western part of our country, two or three sects of Christians, for some time held their meetings for worship together, communed together, preached together, and some believed that the millennial age had commenced. But the unhappy result of the whole was discord, alienation, strife and heresy, the effects of which have not yet entirely vanished.

4. It is believed that if a right spirit be possessed and exhibited, more will be done for extending the influence of true religion, that is, for the salvation of souls, the honour of the Redeemer, and the promotion of the declarative glory of God, if these denominations of Christians who held the most important doctrines and rites of Christianity, retain their distinctive character, than would be done if they should become amalgamated. Cherishing a right spirit—the spirit of an enlightened and genuine charity—they will cordially rejoice in the propagation of revealed truth, the evangelizing of the heathen, and the conversion of sinners to God, wherever, and by whomsoever, this good work shall be performed. In Bible societies, and in some other associations for promoting the interests of piety and benevolence, they can fully and cordially unite with their Christian brethren of a different name; because this can be done without any compromise of truth or principle. All pious men of liberal minds can not only pray for the success of faithful translations of the scriptures, by whomsoever made, and for evangelical missions by whomsoever managed, but to a certain extent they can aid them by pecuniary appropriations and by personal services. And while thus they do something—do much indeed—to aid the good cause in general, and as managed by others, they ought to lay out their main strength in promoting the same cause, in a manner most agreeable to their views of what the word of God, not only in essentials, but in circumstancials also, clearly requires. There is not a doubt in the mind of the writer, that by acting in this manner, the cause of vital godliness may be more promoted by the different orthodox sects remaining separate, than by an amalgamation of the whole.

Let us consider this point, for a moment, in reference to the great subject of evangelical missions. They have been, and still are, carried on by a number of Christian denominations; and is it probable—let it be asked—that the effects which we now witness would have been as extensively produced, if only one denomination had been concerned, although it had been enlarged by the addition of all that have been engaged in this great and glorious work? Or if all who are at present concerned, were now to be amalgamated, is it at all probable that the work would proceed with as much vigour and efficiency, as it is likely to do by their remaining distinct? It is believed that a considerate and candid attention to these interrogatories must result in the conviction, that the extent and success of protestant missions has, in a great mes-sure, hitherto depended on that emulation and enterprise which one denomination has excited and quickened in another, and which would never have existed, at least in equal strength, if this stimulus had been wanted or weakened; as it certainly would have been, had all the parties concerned been amalgamated into one body—and that in times to come, it is reasonable to expect the same effects which have taken place in times past. Nor is the emulation in question to be condemned as an unchristian principle. It is not denied that an unholy emulation may have place in religious concerns, as well as in those of a secular kind. But this is not necessary. The Apostle Paul repeatedly refers to a holy, or truly Christian emulation, in doing good; and he distinctly avows it to have been his own purpose, to avoid as much as he could “the building on another man’s foundation,” in this very business of evangelizing the heathen. And how stands this matter, as exhibited by facts, in relation to the missions which now exist? For a long time protestant Christendom seemed to be dormant, as to this great concern—this most important duty. The Moravians, indeed, seem always to have regarded it aright; and they are entitled to be considered as the pioneers in this sacred warfare against the powers of darkness. Whether their example had any influence in stirring up the Baptists in Britain, is not known—The Baptists, however, were the next to awake. Nor is there any doubt that their exertions led to the formation of the London Missionary Society; theirs to the Church Missionary Society; theirs to the Scotch and Methodist Missionary societies; the zeal of British Christians generally, to several missionary societies in this country, and eventually to the formation of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions—And last of all, the Presbyterians in the United States formed a United Foreign Missionary Society, which they continued for five or six years, and then relinquished it to the American Board. Such has been recently the course of things in the business of missions. It seems undeniable that Christian emulation has hitherto had much influence in producing the happy effects which are witnessed; and that, as this emulation has been excited and nourished chiefly by the distribution of the protestant world into different denominations, so that it would in a great measure cease, if they were all amalgamated—and must be considerably diminished in proportion as they are amalgamated. Neither should it pass without distinct observation, that these missions have been, and still are, conducted with a most amiable spirit of Christian charity, among all the parties concerned—among the societies who conduct the missions, and the missionaries themselves, wherever they meet in the prosecution of their sacred work. In a word, the Redeemer’s kingdom is promoted, and sectarian bigotry is not cherished—Nay, it is manifestly lessened, by these various missionary operations.

The same influence which has had an agency in extending missions, has also had an effect in planting churches in our cities, and in our country at large. It seems palpably evident that much more has been done, and is at present doing, in this respect, than there is any reason to believe we should witness, if a variety of denominations did not exist. On this therefore we shall not dwell. But we must not omit to notice that the various orthodox Christian communities which now exist, are more favourable to a vigorous prosecution of religious enterprises, and consequently to the extension of the Redeemer’s kingdom as the result, than if they were all amalg...
Patriotism is not Piety.

Sept.

mated—because, taken as they are, they form bodies just about large enough for the greatest activity, energy, and unanimity; but if all, or many of them were amalgamated, they would of necessity lose much in these essential particulars. On this point, the remarks heretofore made are deemed sufficient for proof and illustration; but it ought to be taken into view as a consideration of much importance; when we are inquiring in which of the two methods contemplated the cause of God may be most extensively promoted.

The writer has now brought to a close—and he wishes he could have done it in a narrower compass—a statement of the reasons why he believes that the orthodox Christian sects will best consult their own peace and edification, and best promote the cause of God in the world, if, while they retain and carefully cultivate the spirit of brotherly love, and aid and encourage each other in doing good, they maintain their separate standings and distinctive characters—None, it is presumed, will deny that the subject of this essay is important. To the writer it appeared so in the highest degree; and he also thought that a discussion of it would be peculiarly seasonable at the present time. He cannot but think that the popular sentiments, relative to this subject, are in several respects incorrect, and their tendency dangerous. He is in a special manner solicitous that the Presbyterian church, to which he belongs, should be aware of its situation and mindful of its duty. It has standards of doctrine, government, and discipline, which its members profess to believe have been derived from the unerring word of God; and if so, they are not to be sacrificed or compromised under the delusive notion that by doing so Christian charity will be consulted and promoted—Every truth and duty taught and enjoined in the word of God is consistent with every other.

The writer also believes that the Presbyterian church is bound to institute and prosecute missions, both domestick and foreign, in her separate and distinctive character, with a responsibility, immediately to herself, of all her missionaries; a responsibility for the doctrines they teach, the labours they perform, and the character they sustain. But this is a topick on which, if permitted, the writer may hereafter offer his thoughts more at large.

Miscellaneous.

For the Christian Advocate.

Patriotism is not Piety.—

The converse of the above position, Mr. Editor, I am willing to admit, and even disposed to maintain—I do maintain that piety is patriotism; nay, that it is the very best patriotism. The truly pious man will, as an inseparable part of his character, love his country, seek to serve it, and to do it all the good in his power. The sacred precept which requires him to love his neighbour as himself; the benevolence of the gospel which rules in his heart; the Divine injunction which requires him to be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord’s sake, and his exemplary regard to all the laws of God—will unitedly conspire to render him one of the best members of any commonwealth to which he may belong. The fervent and effectual prayers, moreover, which he will constantly offer up for the Divine blessing on his country, and on its rulers and legislators, and in answer to which this blessing is often in fact conferred on a people, as well as on individuals—this will render him a better citizen, or subject, than any man will ever be without genuine piety: for there can be no equivalent for the blessing of God; nothing that can possibly come in the place of it—to render either a country prosperous, or an individual happy.

But on the other hand, patriotism is not piety. Men may be patriots, and thousands doubtless have been so, from mere worldly views—from an ardent love of liberty; from a natural and strong attachment to country—the place of their birth, the land of their fathers; from a regard to their own future welfare and prosperity, and that of their descendants and friends; from the love of fame, distinction and renown—that their names may be blazoned while they live, and may descend with honour to future generations. Patriotism (in perhaps nine cases out of ten) actually proceeds from these feelings and motives; and from these principles men may live and act with an incorruptible integrity, and may obtain, and richly deserve, the confidence, the honours, the offices, and the applause of their country, and may have their memory embalmed as benefactors of that country, at and after their death. Nay, sir, I do for myself believe, that when men serve their country faithfully and eminently, from no higher motives than those last mentioned, God often, in a most remarkable manner, gives them their reward in this life. He gives them what they seek and prize—the wealth, the confidence, the love, the applause of men. But will he give them what they never sought, and never prized?—his favour beyond the grave, the eternal enjoyment of himself in that heavenly world, in regard to which he has declared that “except a man be born again he cannot see it”—Cannot, because he has no preparation for it, and could not enjoy it if admitted there; as well as because he has never possessed that vital union with the Saviour, by which alone any one becomes entitled to the heavenly inheritance; and therefore if admitted there, would be admitted in violation of the truth and justice of God.

Mr. Editor, I wish to state plainly, that I have been led to make these remarks, in consequence of what I have heard much of, and seen much of, in newspapers and pamphlets, within a month past, relative to those two illustrious patriots, who expired on the late Jubilee of the American Union. I honour them as much as any man, and rejoice as much as any man, in seeing that they receive the praise which they so richly merited, by the services which they rendered to their country. But I solemnly protest, as a Christian, against the fashionable practice of representing that a place in the heavenly world has been awarded, and must in justice be awarded to them, because they were patriots of unvalued worth and eminence. Do I then undertake to say that they have not been admitted to heaven? God forbid. I have no right to say this, in regard to them, nor to any of my fellow sinners. I know not what God may have done in preparing any man, even in his expiring moments, for his blissful presence. I have no right, and I disclaim it utterly, to pronounce unfavourably on the future destiny of any individual of my race. We cannot tell, as our Saviour could, whether a man is, or is not, “a son of perdition.” But this I do say, that my Bible teaches, and I firmly believe, that “except a man be converted, and become as a little child, he shall in nowise enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Whatever services a man may have performed for the benefit of his country, or his race, they will not entitle him, on the ground of merit, to a throne in heaven.—To teach this is downright deism; it is broad infidelity; and I exceedingly grieve to see that there is so much of it current in our country. It will never be by his own merit, but only for the merit’s sake of our Lord Jesus Christ, that a mansion in glory will be assigned to the best man that ever lived—And truly rejoiced was I, to see this truth distinctly recognised by the only surviving subscriber of the Declaration of American Independence, the venerable Mr. Carroll. Be he Roman Catholic, or whatever else he may be nominally, in this he speaks to my ear like a true Christian, and I hope he is one. It is inward principle, and not outward action, on which a man’s character depends, in the sight of the all seeing and heart searching Jehovah. If a man does important services to his fellow men in his day and generation, from a principle of true love to God, as well as man, he will receive a heavenly reward. If not, he may, as already intimated, have his reward in this world, but he will have none in the world to come.

A Plain Christian.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

TRANSATLANTICK RECOLLECTIONS.

No. VIII.

"Forsan et hae olim meminisse juvat."

Perhaps some may have thought that I spoke too warmly in my last communication, on the subject of permitting those to remain within the pale of our church who are opposed to our standards of doctrine and discipline; and surely this is to be expected from those who think that a man may warrantably overturn the system of our church, provided that he does it in a brotherly manner. But how differently did David feel, when he complained so pathetically, on the treatment of such a brother: “Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.”

I feel and speak, Mr. Editor, on this subject from experience; and whatever I have said, or shall say, was and will be intended, not to hurt the feelings of any of God’s people, but solely for the peace and purity of God’s church.

A number of years have now elapsed, and their transactions are long ago recorded in Heaven, since certain members of the General Synod of Ulster, in the north of Ireland, complained that their consciences were grieved and burdened, by reason of being obliged to adopt “a Confession of Faith.” They spoke fluently and pathetically, and they spoke with effect, on the hard-ship of being necessitated to adopt a human and therefore a fallible Confession of Faith, when they had the Holy Scriptures, in all their fulness and purity, to which they were willing at any time to subscribe. Neither, they observed, did those unerring records of Heaven require or impose such a duty upon them; and surely it was hard that brethren should impose a task upon their consciences which was not required by the law of God, and which to them was difficult to bear. They did not wish to be understood as insinuating any disrespect to the Synod’s Confession of Faith, or that it contained a single doctrine which was not to be found in the Bible; but the Bible was the religion of Protestants, and by the Bible alone they wished to be bound. To say the least, the Confession of Faith was useless, and in some cases it might be injurious. If it contained nothing but what the Bible contained, where was its use? And if it contained less or more, its tendency was damnable, the Scriptures being the judge. And who! oh who!
dare say that man, partial, ignorant, fallible man, could compile any synopsis which would exactly embody the mind of the Spirit of God? Looking upon it in this light, then, they believed, nay, they were assured, that their brethren in Christ Jesus would not impose upon them as a duty, what must of necessity grieve their consciences, and perhaps endanger their final salvation; especially as they adhered to the doctrines and discipline of the Presbyterian Church.

The appeal was too much for the Synod. Some of its most guileless and holy members took the part of the appellants. They indeed revered, and ever should revere, and hold by the “Confession of Faith,” as the palladium of their church’s safety and glory. They thought, indeed, that there was illogical reasoning in their brethren’s arguments; but since they held the same faith, and pledged themselves to support the same church government, and since their consciences were so laudably tender—for it was certainly a laudable tenderness to be afraid of adding or deducting from the word of God—and since they were willing to pledge themselves to admit none but such as should be Presbyterians in doctrine and discipline into the church, they would move, “that it should be voluntary with the respective Presbyteries of the Synod, to require their candidates to subscribe or not to the Confession of Faith. This, after some debate, was carried, at least in substance; and from that time until lately, the Synod was divided into subscribing and non-subscribing Presbyteries.

But what was the result of this? Oh! it is a tearful tale, but it is a true one, that Arianism and Socinianism, and, indeed, the admission of every error into the church, was the consequence. Yes, and some of the very men too who pleaded so warmly for the exemption, because their consciences forsooth were so tender, were at that moment Arians and Arminians in their heart. Immediately after it was known that such a Presbytery was a non-subscribing one, the heterodox of all kinds and grades flocked to it, and as they believed the Bible, and were willing to subscribe to all its doctrines, they were admitted without controversy, however gross or erroneous were their sentiments. But great as was the defection, there were many men in the Synod, and several Presbyteries, that did not “bow the knee to Baal,” and, for the sake of those, God was pleased to continue to be merciful to them. It is supposed that the “Presbytery of Antrim,” a body avowedly Arian, had a hand behind the scenes, in bringing about the above event. Hence, the non-subscribers began to be looked upon by them as brethren; the licentates of those Presbyteries began to be eligible to the congregations of the Arian Presbytery; and, finally, they became so bold as to avow heresy in almost all its forms. Their boldness, however, was fatal to them; for when “the enemy began to come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifted up a standard against him.” After things had remained in this situation for some years, Dr. Bruce, of Belfast, famous for his talents and erudition, but infamous for his heretical opinions, published a volume of Sermons, in the introduction of which he exultingly announced, that “Arianism was making slow but certain progress in the Synod of Ulster.”

This scandalous charge immediately fired the zeal of the orthodox party; they came out the very next Synod in their might, or rather in the might of their God and of his Christ, and they not only carried a motion, giving the lie direct to Dr. Bruce’s assertion, but repealed their former law, which gave permission to Presbyteries to omit at discretion a subscription to the Confession of Faith."

I believed, at the time this privilege was granted, that its tendency would be fatal, and subversive of the peace and purity of the church; but some did not think so, and were willing to try it, who have since seen their error, and have deeply repented of their concession. This, then, is "an evil under the sun," which I have seen in my own days; and I have simply related it as I have seen it. I do not pretend to say that it is calculated to teach us any thing more important, than if I had informed you that the consequence of a child's putting his hand into the fire was—that he got it burned; for to me the event, in either case, was equally to be expected; and yet I thought it proper to record it among my Recollections, as at least a memorable era in the Irish Synod.

Presbyterianism in Scotland and in the north of Ireland, is substantially the same, though differing in many respects widely, from Presbyterianism in this country. I wish to be understood, particularly in what I shall say in future upon this subject, as having reference to the "Associate Reformed Synod of Ireland." This body comprised something more than one hundred congregations, at the period to which these Recollections allude; to which they have added since, by Missionary exertions, perhaps ten or twelve others, eight of which have already settled and installed Pastors. In this Synod there is nothing preached but the doctrines of the Confession of Faith. Its most critical and insidious enemy might travel from congregation to congregation through all its bounds, and I would defy him to say, that there was one man unfaithful to the standards of his church. The doctrine which he would hear from one pulpit, he would hear echoed and re-echoed in all its fulness and purity from all. It differs then from this country in this—that you will not hear Hopkinstonianism here, Arminianism there, and Calvinism in a third place; but in all and each, the pure and simple doctrines of the New Testament. This is the difference as to the preachers. As to the people, there is still a greater difference. Brought up from infancy to know and respect religion, its doctrines are familiar to them, and these doctrines, as might be expected, they love just in proportion to their knowledge of them. Hence, no sermonizing is so popular as that which enlightens while it feeds, and feeds while it enlightens the soul. They literally love to hear the strictest doctrine of the church, however humiliating to human pride, in its plainest garb. So much is this a fact, that I do conscientiously believe that no sermon would be so popular with them, as an able and lucid exposition of the peculiar and discriminating doctrines of grace. Their motives in going to church seem, in some measure, essentially different from many who belong to the Presbyterian congregations of America. Their primary motive is, to render thanks to God for the mercies of the past; to lament their iniquities, and to implore their Heavenly Father, for Christ's sake, to pardon what his pure eyes have seen amiss; and to grant them spiritual strength to guide and direct them in future. As subordinate to this, they go to receive spiritual information. They expect their minister to be a man "mighty in the Scriptures," able to unfold their doctrines, and to deduce those practical lessons from them, which are so cheering and consolatory to the drooping spirit; and hence, they go as learners to receive information. Nothing is less expected than a sermon to arouse the feelings, without enlightening the understanding: in fact, they are Christianized, if I may so speak, not by the instrumentality of sound, but sense. It is not merely the passions, but the whole man that is influenced; and hence, he continues to be what he professes, after his feelings have subsided. It is true, they may not be enabled to say, that on such a spot, and in such an hour, they became "Sons of God;" though they believe they are such, and they pray and strive to continue such. It is the "witness of the Spirit," and not of time and place, upon which they depend, as a proof that they "have passed from death unto life." It is the state of the soul, and not of feelings, which may be only corporeal, upon which they build their dearest expectations. Hence, it is an occurrence, so rare as hardly to afford an exception to the general rule, to hear of heresy getting among them, or of one of them turning from the doctrines of the church. So remarkably is this the case, that no sect has ever been able to get a footing among them that held a different doctrine. You might as well try to make the multiflora bloom and blossom upon the unsheltered top of the Andes, as to propagate Arminianism, or Arianism, or even Hopkinsianism, among the Irish Seceders. On this subject I speak advisedly, deliberately, and knowingly.

I trust I shall not be understood as meaning, even by implication, that the ministers in this country are generally dispensers of that airy and inflammatory aliment, which stimulates the soul without purifying and strengthening it; or that the congregations are chiefly composed of such as have merely, as it were, breathed the intoxicating gas of such preaching, and are therefore Christians only while this continues to make them loud and noisy, rather than still and humble. This is not the fact: there are many able, pious and pure dispensers of the very milk of the Word; and many, very many, who have drunk this milk of the Gospel, in the American churches.

MEMOIR OF MR. DANIEL JAUDON, WHO DIED IN PHILADELPHIA, JULY 23d, 1826.

The subject of this memoir was descended from the Huguenots, or Protestants of France, who were compelled to leave their country by the revocation of the edict of Nantes in the year 1685. The residence of the family was near Rochelle on the Bay of Biscay. It was both an opulent and a pious family; but by the cruel persecution which took place under Louis XIV., all its property was confiscated; and the members thought themselves happy in escaping with their lives into England. After a short residence in Britain, they migrated to America, and settled in Buck's county, Pennsylvania.

Peter Jaudon, the eldest son of the second generation after the settlement in this country, married into the Wayne family of Chester county. He was the father of the deceased, who was born at Mount Pleasant, in Buck's county, July 7th, 1767. His early education was partly in Philadelphia, and partly at Germantown; and was such only as is obtained in a well taught English school. At the age of sixteen, he engaged in the study of medicine; which, however, was soon interrupted by the death of the physician who had received him as a pupil. He then taught an English school in the country, for the space of two or three years. But his father having removed to the Northern Liberties of Philadelphia, and become a member of the Second Presbyterian congregation, earnestly solicited the then junior pastor of that congregation, the Rev. Ashbel Green, to assist his son in the acquisition of classical learning, on which at this time he was eagerly intent. He studied the Latin language with great assiduity for nearly two years, and acquired such a knowledge of it as to be able to write it with correctness and facility. His method of study, under the direction of his teacher, was, to make himself perfect in elementary principles, and then to attain a like perfection in every gradation of advance before he proceeded to a new step; and this method he afterwards observed, in conducting all the studies which he superintended in the Female Academy which he taught for thirty years; and from which his pupils reaped uncommon benefit, as well as himself an unrivalled reputation as a teacher. It was his intention, while engaged in classical studies, to devote himself to the gospel ministry. But the interruption occasioned by the yellow fever of 1796, and some other hindrances, caused him to resign his views to the ministry, and to relinquish his classical studies. He married, and engaged as the teacher of the English department in the college and academy of Philadelphia, in the beginning of the year 1794. In this employment he continued till some time in the year 1796, when he established his Seminary for Young Ladies; in the superintendence and instruction of which he spent the remainder of his days.

The confinement and exhausting nature of his occupation, prosecuted as it was by him with unceasing industry and conscientious vigilance, impaired his health; which was habitually delicate, and sometimes seriously interrupted, during the last fifteen years of his life. With a view to recruit his strength and spirits, it was his custom to spend the time of the summer vacation of his seminary in travelling. He returned from an excursion for health to the noted resort at Long Branch, on the sea coast of New Jersey, on the 7th of July, the day on which he completed the 59th year of his age. He supposed that he had derived sensible benefit from this excursion, and spoke of his feeling unusually well. But truly in the midst of life we are in death—The very day after his return, he was seized with a bilious remittent fever, which afterwards assumed a typhus or putrid character, and, notwithstanding all the medical skill that was employed to arrest its progress, it terminated his mortal existence in about two weeks. On the 25th of the month his remains, attended by his mourning family, and a concourse of sympathising friends, were committed to their kindred dust.

Such is the brief narrative of the descent, parentage, education, occupation, death and burial, of Mr. Daniel Jaudon—A narrative which the writer has chosen, not to interrupt with remarks; and which it will be perceived contains nothing of the nature of adventure, or of striking peculiarity—No interesting scenes or changes; nothing of strange occurrence; nothing but the recital of events which mark the ordinary course of human life: And yet it is the narrative of a life distinguished by piety, and by uncommon usefulness—Of a life which many monarchs, and heroes, and sages, who have filled the world with their fame, will one day regard with envy, and wish in vain that such had been their own.

The distinguishing features of Mr. Jaudon's mind were manifested in sound sense, clear perceptions, accurate discrimination, and correct judgment. He had acquired a considerable fund of knowledge on a variety of subjects; but the books which he chiefly read, were of the religious kind; and those which either immediately or remotely related to his professional occupation, as a teacher of youth. He was thoroughly grounded and settled in the principles of evangelical piety, or those which are usually denominated the doctrines of grace—the doctrines of the Protestant reformation. Yet he was not a bigot. On the contrary, he cherished the most friendly feelings toward all who appeared truly to love the Saviour, by whatsoever name dis-distinguished; took pleasure in their company and conversation; and joined with them cordially, in forming and executing plans of benevolence and public utility.

The piety of Mr. Jaudon was of the most excellent kind. It pervaded his whole heart, character, and life. It was deep, fervent, and humble. There was in it no approach to enthusiasm; and nothing like self-complacency, or spiritual pride. Few men were more modest or self-emptied than he; and yet he was remarkably firm in principle, and active in doing good—viewing himself and all that he had, as devoted to the service and glory of God. He was eminently discreet and prudent; desirous of avoiding the appearance of evil; and anxious to adorn the religion he professed, by a temper and deportment becoming the gospel of Christ.

He first made a publick profession of religion in the year 1792, when—not having been baptized in infancy—he was publicly baptized, and admitted to full communion in the Second Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. In process of time, his piety and prudence pointed him out as one well qualified to exercise the office of a ruling elder, to which he was accordingly chosen and set apart; and some years afterward, he was appointed to discharge the duties of a deacon, in connexion with those of an elder. In distributing the alms of the church, and in visiting, counselling, and consoling the poor—especially the pious poor—of the congregation to which he belonged, he was faithful, diligent, tender and sympathizing. Long will his kindness, condescension and benevolence, be remembered by the poor and afflicted, and his memory be emblazoned by their gratitude and love: And long will the session of the church of which he was a member, regret the loss of a most valued associate; who aided them by his wise counsels, and took his full share in every official duty, common to them and him in the government and discipline of the church, and in promoting its interests and edification.

The subject of this memoir had no taste for publick and promiscuous companies; and of course avoided them, as much as he conveniently could. But he was peculiarly formed for private friendship; he relished its pleasures highly, and shared largely in all the delights and benefits which it affords. He had a number of attached religious friends, with whom he lived on terms of great intimacy; to whom he was wont to unbosom himself freely; and to whom he imparted not less of happiness and profit than he received. He was also a most efficient member of several pious and benevolent associations, which we cannot particularize. We must, however, not omit to notice distinctly, his activity and usefulness, as a member of the Magdalen Society of Philadelphia. In that society, his zeal and efforts to reclaim, and to restore to virtue, the unhappy subjects of the society’s care and benevolence, were peculiarly great; and under the divine blessing they were, in several instances, happily successful. His was the office, more frequently perhaps than that of any other member, to converse with the wretched wanderers from the paths of rectitude and purity; to endeavour to convince them deeply and effectually of their folly and their guilt; and when humbled and penitent, to direct them to that precious Saviour, in whose atoning blood all their stains and pollutions might be washed away. Some of them, there is good reason to believe, were, through the instrumentality of this devoted man, made the subjects of the renewing grace of God; were restored to reputable society, and made candidates for meeting with their kind benefactor in the mansions of eternal purity and peace.

In all the relations of husband.
father and friend; let it suffice to say in general, that Mr. Jaudon was truly exemplary—eminently kind, affectionate and faithful. By the smiles of a gracious Providence on his unceasing industry and care, he acquired a handsome property; and has left a comfortable provision for his desolate widow and a family of nine children—five sons and four daughters—who we trust will recollect, that in his example, instruction, counsel, and prayers, he has left them the best part of their inheritance. Two of his sons were liberally educated, and a third was, at his death, engaged in acquiring the elements of such an education.

It remains to take a brief view of this excellent man, in his professional occupation, as a teacher of female youth. Here was the chief field of his usefulness; and he was very sensible that whatever good he might do in promoting the temporal and eternal happiness of mankind, by improving, for that purpose, every method and every occasion which might incidentally be offered, still it was in his professional employment, that he was to expect and seek to serve God and his generation, with the most extensive effect. Under this conviction, Mr. Jaudon endeavoured to qualify himself as a teacher, to the extent of his powers. He not only made himself perfectly familiar with every branch of study which he was to teach, but he sought for the best method of communicating knowledge to his pupils, and the best system of government and discipline for his seminary. He read on these subjects every book to which he could obtain access; conversed freely with all from whom he could receive useful information; and observed carefully how various institutions of learning were conducted, that he might transfer from them to his own, every thing which he thought might be profitable. In some of the branches which he taught, he compiled, with great diligence and accuracy, a system of his own for the benefit of his pupils; and in his selections from the labours of others, he was careful that none but the best books extant should be put into the hands of those whom he taught. Indeed his reputation as a teacher became such, that the publishers of school books in our country, often solicited his recommendation, regarding it as one of the most valuable they could receive.

But the scholars of Mr. Jaudon received benefit, from something more than his choice for them of the best methods and systems of instruction. These are of little use, without a laborious and constant attention by the preceptor, to see that each individual pupil actually learns what a good system is intended to teach—it is this detail of attention and inspection, and patient and persevering industry, in communicating knowledge and seeing that it is acquired, which profits the learner, while it is also sure to exhaust the teacher; and this was eminently exemplified in Mr. Jaudon. Aided, as he always was, by able assistants, he still spared no exertions of his own, and constantly wasted his strength and spirits, in a pointed attention to every thing which passed in his school. Hence he was able to offer his scholars, at his stated examinations, to any trial on the branches studied, to which the visitors might choose to call them; and to the visitors the examination, whenever they could be persuaded to assume it, was wholly resigned. His pupils were prepared, not merely to answer a set of questions to be asked by their teacher, but to discover a real knowledge of the subject of study. It was not a book, but a branch of science, on which they presented themselves for trial; and if questions were intelligibly and fairly put, it mattered not, as to the method in which, or the person by whom, it was done.

The result of all this qualification, and diligence, and conscientiousness in the principal of a publick school, was such as might be expected. It came to be considered as a high privilege to obtain a place in his seminary. He was often obliged to refuse the most pressing solicitations for immediate admission, and to register the names of the applicants, as candidates for entrance, so soon as a place for them should be made by the dismission, on the completion of their course, of those who composed his highest class.

An institution of this character, continued for thirty years, could not but send forth into society, a large number of the best educated women: And it is accordingly a well known fact, that a very considerable proportion of the women of this character now in the city of Philadelphia, and many in other places, have been the pupils of Mr. Jaudon. To them his memory is exceedingly precious—They cherish it with a love and veneration, far more estimable than the shouts and illuminations which celebrate the exploits of the military hero.

But Mr. Jaudon was never satisfied with the mere intellectual attainments of his scholars, distinguished as they certainly were. He looked at every pupil as the possessor of an immortal spirit, destined to happiness or misery inconceivable and endless; and as probably one, too, whose moral and religious principles and character would have a lasting influence on her offspring,—an influence which might extend, not only to the latest generations on earth, but to all the ages of eternity. Hence it was, that with unceasing solicitude, he sought to promote the spiritual interests—the salvation of the immortal part—of all who were committed to his care. This he attempted by a plan which neither gave up the essentials of religion to the claims of a misnamed charity, on the one hand; nor, on the other, intrenched farther than was unavoidable, on the peculiarities of the different religious sects to which the parents of his pupils belonged: And he had the satisfaction to find, that the execution of this plan rarely, if ever, gave offence to any of the parties concerned. It was his invariable practice, to open the morning and afternoon exercises of his school by singing a psalm or hymn, in which he was cheerfully joined by his pupils; and after this, by solemn prayer, in which he fervently implored the divine guidance for himself, and the divine blessing on them. Between these exercises, he frequently delivered a short lecture to his scholars on their religious concerns; insisting only on the leading and essential topicks of doctrinal and practical piety. A portion of scripture was always a part of the lesson assigned on Saturday, to be studied on Sunday, and recited on Monday: and it was generally required that each young lady should repeat the text from which she had heard a discourse on the previous Sabbath. Such was the method in which he laboured to benefit his interesting charge, in reference to their spiritual welfare, while he was imbuing their minds with useful and ornamental science: and it is believed that there are hundreds now living, who would feelingly acknowledge the benefit which they received from their venerated teacher, by thus mixing moral and religious instruction and counsel, with the studies by which their intellectual furniture was constantly increased.

The death of such a man as Mr. Jaudon is a publick loss, which is deeply felt and deplored by many beside his family and his pupils. But he had finished the period allotted for his labours on earth, and has entered, we doubt not, into "the rest that remaineth to the people of God." It is hoped that this memoir will not only gratify the wishes of kindred and friends, but serve the higher purpose of present ing a useful example, for the imitation of others. It may serve to show that good sense, sound discretion, diligence in duty, and fervent piety, may effect more—unspeakably more—both for the good of mankind and the advantage of the possessor, than is ever achieved, in the absence of these qualities, by the most brilliant genius, the most vigorous intellect, or the profoundest erudition. There are many who may be, what Mr. Jaudon actually was—let them be so, and they will be useful and beloved while they live, and their death will be to them an eternal gain.

THE REV. MR. STEWART'S PRIVATE JOURNAL.
(Continued from p. 367.)

Mission House at Honoruru, Oahu, (I. 1.) April 1st, 1825.

I closed a journal of the three last months for you on Saturday last, and will commence a continuation of it, by mentioning a circumstance which, though disastrous in a more important respect to others, has eventuated propitiously for the regularity of our communications. Ten days since, the whale ship Thomas, Captain Coffin, of Nantucket, left this port for America. I was accidentally prevented putting a packet on board of her, though most of the missionaries sent large communications. Mine went however only a week later by the brig Tamaahmah, Capt. Meek, bound to the coasts of Peru and Chili, where they were to be committed to the care of Com. Hull, and forwarded by him to Mr. Southard. This morning the Thomas returned, having sprung a leak, and having been kept afloat only by the most active and unremitting exertions of the crew. She is in so bad a state as necessarily to be condemned, and it may be many months before an opportunity for forwarding the contents of the letter bag may offer. As my packet by the brig has gone by a circuitous route, I will just mention, that in addition to the journal, it contained letters for Mr. Southard, Dr. Green, Mr. Evarts, Mr. A. L. Stewart, and Mr. George Pomroy.

Sabbath Evening, 3d. This afternoon, Mr. Chamberlain and myself, accompanied by Richard Karaimoku (one of the lads educated at Cornwall), walked to a valley about four miles west of Honoruru, to hold a religious service with its inhabitants. A messenger from Karaimoku had preceded us, giving information of our design, and in obedience to his order, an audience of 70 or 80 were assembled at the house of the headman or overseer of the settlement, to whom I preached from the words, “Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners.” The attention to the exercises was very orderly and respectful, and we made an appointment to meet them again on the ensuing Sabbath.

Mr. Loomis for some months past has gone on horseback, every Sabbath, to two or three villages, several miles distant in the opposite direction. Karuahonui and Kain, the husbands of the queens dowager, Kaahumanu and Tapuli, conduct a meeting at two places, Waititi, and Mr. Bingham preaches twice in the chapel here—So that beside the English service, which devolves regularly on me, public worship has been held seven times to-day, in six different places, along an extent of coast little short of 15 miles. It is probable that hereafter this will, in a greater or less degree, be the systematic distribution of the labours of this station on the Sabbath—And thus a good portion of the leeward side of Oahu will be blest with the proclamations of that word, by which alone “the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.”—By these “Sabbath day’s journeys,” an inroad will be made, as we hope, in the pollutions of the land, and an "highway" formed, which shall be called "the way of holiness," where "the unclean shall not pass over," but where the redeemed shall walk, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads.

Monday, 4th. The young king and a favourite companion near his age, are at present my private pupils in English and writing. His majesty was necessarily excused this morning from any exercise in the last, on account of the painful condition of his hands and fingers, from one of the most infective and disgusting of cutaneous diseases. Were his a singular case, a regard for the dignity of the throne might have led me to pass it unnoticed; but the prevalence of that contagion is so common, and I might say universal, in all ranks here, that it is without reproach, except in the eyes of a foreigner; and I should be doing injustice to your desire of having a sketch of the "manners living as they rise," were I to say nothing on a subject which daily and hourly obtrudes itself on the observation. I was somewhat startled, a day or two after our arrival at the islands, to have the question put to me, "whether I had any thing that could cure the itch?" after shaking hands with a high chief who I immediately perceived to be greatly infected with it. As the etiquette of the court seemed to require that manner of salutation, I thought it would be impossible for me to escape even a week; but I have shaken hands with thousands since, as then, with perfect impunity. As all the missionary family have been generally fortunate, I am satisfied that the disease here is much less contagious than that known in America by the same name.

In general it appears also to be less irritable and troublesome, though I have seen cases, in which it was accompanied by great swelling and inflammation, and by a loathsome suppuration. Most of the chiefs are at present free from it, and the king is under a course of sulphur; but the common people every where are covered with it. Few of them seem to regard it as an evil, or take any measure to divest themselves of it. Like that of most other diseases, its introduction is ascribed by the natives to their intercourse with foreigners; but I suspect it has existed among them from "a period to which the memory of man runneth not the contrary."

Not to mention the frequent and tedious marks of that disease of abominations, which more clearly than any other proclaims the judgment of a God of purity on the workers of iniquity, and which, while it annually consigns thousands of this people to the tomb, converts thousands more while living into walking sepulchres—the inhabitants of this island generally, are subject to many disorders of the skin. The majority of those you meet are more or less disfigured by eruptions and sores, and some are almost as scabby and scaly as lepers. The number of either sex or of any age, who are free from blemishes of the kind, is very small indeed—so much so, that a smooth and unbroken skin is much more uncommon here than the reverse is at home. I am not physiologist enough to say to what cause this fact is attributable; perhaps to the very free use which the natives make of salt with their food, in conjunction with the habit of constant sea-bathing. Taro, too, when used in the form of poi, (the principal article of diet in all classes,) though of easy digestion, probably has a great tendency to grossness of blood. Whatever the cause or causes may be, the effect certainly detracts much from the good appearance of the people as a nation. While on the subject... which introduced these remarks, and for the same reason which led to them, I may be excused for touching on one nearly allied to it, according to our ideas, in point of offensiveness: a clue to which may be given, without the mention of names, by referring you to the spiritued effusion of a genius, beginning, "Ha, whare ye gaun'g, ye crawlin ferlie?"

Had the bard of Ayr lived on these coral bound isles, the novelty of the sight at least, would never have caused him to immortalize by his song, the excursion of one of that disgusting race. In our humble kirk, in place of one on "Miss's bonnet," dozens may at all times be seen sporting among the decorated locks of ignoble heads, while not unfrequently a privileged few wind their way over the garlands of princes of the blood, or triumphantly mount the coronets of majesty itself! As to the servants of the chiefs, and the common people, we feel ourselves fortunate indeed, if after a call of five minutes, we do not find living testimonies of their visit on our floors and chairs, and even on our own clothes and persons. The bare relation of the fact, without the experience of it, is sufficiently shocking. But the half is not told. On other points we let truth run to a climax, and why not on this? The lower classes of people not only suffer their heads and tapas to harbour the most filthy of vermin, but they openly and unblushingly eat them! Incredible as it may seem to you, my dear M., I have hundreds of times seen the natives of both sexes and of all ages, not only searching each other's heads with the avidity of epicures, whose appetites have been excited by the fumes of some luxurious dish, but also prying into every corner and crevice of the tapas, in which they had been sleeping, for the purpose of amusing their digestive powers, while breakfast was in preparation, by the delicate members of an animal, whose vulgar name is too disgusting to be mentioned! After this it is but a trifle to say, that except in the immediate vicinity of the court, you can scarce pass a circle, in which one or more will not be engaged in picking and eating fleas, from the hair of a favourite dog. Yet so fastidious are they in point of cleanliness, that you might almost as efficaciously administer an emetic to any one of them, as to place before them a dish, in which a fly had been suffocated or drowned! So much for the force of custom and the power of habit. They have been called a cleanly people in their persons and their food; but with these facts to the contrary, which cannot be denied, and to which may be added long and dirty nails, &c. &c. it will be difficult to prove their right to the epithet, either in appearance or living, notwithstanding the practice of spending near a half of their time in the dashings of the surf, or the foamings of a mountain torrent—and to the punctilious observance of the ceremony of washing, at least the ends of the fingers, before and after partaking of any meal.

Wednesday, 6th. Yesterday afternoon the ship Tartan, Captain Gerry, of Boston, last from the coast of South America, came to an anchor off the harbour; and this morning, much to our joy, we received from her the packet of letters, &c. forwarded by Mr. Southard, in the frigate United States, more than a year ago. It was a satisfaction almost greater than you can conceive, again for the first time in more than two years, to recognise the hand-writing of some of our dearest friends—your own, that of Mr. Southard, Dr. Green, Mr. Smith, Mrs. Elihu P., Emma, &c. &c. No letters could have been more cordially welcome, though most, if not all the intelli-
the contained in them, had been

got to us near eight months

by the Tamaahmaha.

From the frequent notice I take the arrival of vessels, you will receive that the islands have very considerable intercourse with various parts of the civilized world.

The last three years, I presume

less than one hundred ships

annually visited this group;—a ly whale ships, on their pas-

to and from the coast of Ja-

Not many merchantmen. The

eer portion of the whole, call to refit their vessels and pro-

refreshments. However dele-

us in a moral, in a fiscal point

ew, this intercourse is of very considerable advantage. The har-fees are eighty dollars for the

and sixty for the outer port,

the pilot receives a dollar a

on the draught of every vessel coming in and going out. At market, which is held by the

nor of the port, at which only thing can be purchased, the

of provisions is fixed at 5 dol-

for a pig or goat, a dollar for 4

a barrel of fruits or a

11 a dollar for 5 heads of cab-

plantains and bananas a quart a dollar a bunch, &c. &c.

The trade with the nation is prin-

cally carried on by four American mercantile houses—two of Bos-

one of New York, and one of tol, R. I. Each have agents stores in the town, and each ally have a brig or ship in the

our, besides others which are

ently passing and repassing

the north-west and Spanish

sts to China. I have seen it ed in a late London paper, that annual demand for foreign

s at the islands, was not less

100,000 Sterling—100,000

d be a high estimation of it,

the chiefs are so much in debt

resent for their vessels, &c.

for a time, at least, I think the demand will decrease rather than increase.

The government, during the last year, have employed one or two of their vessels in the sealing business, with tolerable success. One

brig came in with 8,000 skins on board, which sold here for 150

each. As to exports, sandal wood and salt, are the only articles the lands afford, with which the natives themselves could carry on a trade abroad. Tamehameha I. did fit one vessel freighted with sandal

wood, for Canton, but by some intrigue of which he was made the

the dupe, she came back, after having posed her cargo, without any thing in return, and with a bill of veral thousand dollars against him, for repairs, port charges, &c.

Until then, it appears he was ignorant of the revenue which maritime states derive from their ports,

and his native shrewdness led him

to make the most politic improve-

of the failure, by attaching

heavy harbour fees to his own

which till then had been free to all ations. During the reign of the late king, one voyage also was made to Kamschatka. The cargo exported was salt, but the result of the voyage was very insignificant

point of gain; and with it the spirit of enterprise in this respect ceased, till the late cruises to the Galapagos Island, and the undertaking for seal. But I have wandered from the subject I intended

niciping, after speaking of the ar-ival of the Tartan, which is the simple fact of having our ensign ent-

nished this morning by a fleet of near a dozen ships, all whalemen,

ound on their northern cruise, except one, an English merchant

ship, on her way from the gulf of Calfornia to Batavia and Calcutta.

Friday 8th. I was roused this orning by the exclamation, "the Royal George is lost!" and on reaching the window, regretted exceedingly to see the fine English.

ship (formerly a sloop of war) of that name—one of the number referred to above—high on the reef, a mile or two west of the mouth of the harbour, a complete wreck, without a mast standing. It appears she was run ashore through the carelessness of the first officer, while the captain was on board another vessel. The night was not very dark, and the wind fresh off the land; so that the person having charge of the ship, seems to be inexcusable. The vessel, with every thing she contains, will be entirely lost. Stripped of her loftiness and her pride, and high amongst the breakers, she looks lonely and desolate indeed. The sight has deeply impressed my mind with the meaning and the force of the figure of the apostle, taken from such a scene—the shipwreck of faith. If the destruction of a noble but perishable piece of human workmanship can thus fill the mind with gloom, ah! what will be the thoughts of those who at last find themselves making an irrevocable and everlasting shipwreck of the soul, amid the billows of eternity!

Wednesday, 13th. One of the native schooners arrived yesterday, bringing letters for the mission and the chiefs from Lahaina. Among others, were two from our little friend, the Princess Nahienaena, to Karaimoku, Kaahumanu, and her brother, the young king, which I have seen, and a translation of which I will give you, as a specimen of her composition. They are entirely her own—were fairly and handsomely written on gilt-edged letter-paper—correctly folded, and sealed with wax; you will recollect she is only nine years old. The first letter is addressed to Karaimoku, whose favourite name is Pauia; it is dated Lahaina, Maui, and is as follows:

"Very great love to you, O Pauia, sick at the place where you dwell—we have heard of the death of your adopted (or foster) child, (referring to the late king)—we know from the letter of Boki, brought by the English ship now here, also the death of your sister, Kamehumalu—Your sovereigns are dead—both of them—Rihorihon with Kamehumalu—great sorrow, great love to them—great love to you also. You are sick—think of God—from God only is health—from him also is cometh every blessing both for the body and the soul.—Love to you, from"

"Nahienaena."

The second letter begins with a salutation to Kaahumanu and Karaimoku, but after the first paragraph, is addressed exclusively to her brother, the present king.

"Lahaina, Maui, "Aperitu, 7th, 1823.

"Love to you two,

"Kaahum, you with Pauia, great sympathy for you both in your sickness. I wish you two to be our (herself and brother) parents; it is not good to be without parents. And where art thou, my brother? Listen thou to the word of our eternal Lord. The lord (Rihorihon) of us two will never return—he is dead! The word of our true Lord remains, and let us both regard it. I pray to God. Let us both pray that Jehovah may cause us to be good, through Jesus Christ, the deliverer from sin. The eternal Lord do not be deaf to me; it would be an evil thing—listen therefore to my good advice. Love to you, O Kauikauli—dead is our king at Lonadona (London), and dead also is the mother, Kamehumula—though she is their half sister of us two.

"Nahienaena."

They do credit to her mind and heart, and we rejoice to see them breathe so much the spirit of her lamented mother, Keopuolani; she is a lovely and promising child, and her brother is scarcely less so.
Sabbath Evening, 17th. Nearly two years have elapsed since we landed on these distant and heathen shores. In all my communications since, on recounting the dispensations of Providence to me and mine, I have been called to mention nothing but “blessings undisguised.” We have endured many petty privations, felt some anxieties, known some sorrows, and shed some tears; but they were all such as to be classed among the “lighter afflictions” only, and were too trifling to be mentioned in connexion with the general prosperity and overbalancing happiness we have enjoyed. During the last few days, however, the hitherto unclouded sky has gathered blackness, till this morning our fears were made exquisitely awake by it, to apprehensions of an overwhelming calamity. But the darkness of the day has, in much mercy, been scattered, and the rainbow of promise and of peace is depicted on the blackness of the averted storm. You, my beloved sister, will not think the figure I have thus inadvertently introduced, too strong, when I tell you, that Harriet has been restored to her husband and her children, after seemingly trod on the borders of the grave. About twenty hours after the birth of her daughter, she was seized with a spasmodic affection of the chest—which, though itself of transient duration, apparently left an unfavourable effect on her general health. She regained her strength very slowly, so much so, as not to be able to walk or ride out, till about ten days since. Early last week her appetite failed, and the strength she had previously acquired rapidly diminished. Two nights since, the oppression at the breast was again experienced, and immediately followed by a fever; and that again by an exhaustion, which, last night and this morning, seemed to threaten the extinction of life itself. On returning from the preaching of the English sermon, I found her, as I thought, evidently worse; she complained of a death-like coldness of the extremities—her pulse were few and feeble, and her eye ghastly and unnatural. She thought herself dying, and desired that the family might be assembled, and prayer made to God for the light of his countenance on her soul, as she passed through the dark valley. In the course of an hour, however, a happy alteration in her state took place; every symptom became decidedly favourable, and after a comfortable afternoon, she is now, for the first time for forty-eight hours, sleeping sweetly, with the prospect of a quiet and refreshing night. (To be continued.)

CONTROVERSIAL TRACTS ON CHRISTIANITY AND MOHAMMEDANISM.—
By the late Rev. Henry Martyn, B. D. of St. John’s College, Cambridge, and some of the most eminent writers of Persia, translated and explained: to which is appended an additional Tract on the same question; and, in a Preface, some account given of a former controversy on this subject, with Extracts from it. Dedicated to the Right Hon. the Earl of Liverpool, K. G. &c. By the Rev. S. Lee, A.M. D.D. of the University of Halle, Honorary Member of the Asiatic Society of Persia, Honorary Associate of the Royal Society of Literature, N.Y.R. S. &c. and Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge. With a Portrait of Mr. Martyn.

Few of our readers, we presume, are unacquainted with “ A Memoir of the Rev. Henry Martyn," the distinguished British missionary, who translated the New Testament into the language of Persia, and died in prosecuting an over-land journey from that country to England. The book before us, as the title intimates, owes its existence to that publication. Mr. Lee remarks in his preface, that "it appears from Mr. Martyn's memoirs, that he left the Bay of Bengal in January, 1811, and arrived at Shiraz in the June following. After disputing several times with the literati of that place, he was informed, on July 3rd, that Mirza Ibrahim, the preceptor of all the Moolas, was then writing a book in defence of Mohammedanism; which appeared accordingly on the 26th of the same month. "A considerable time had been spent," it is said, "in its preparation; and, on its seeing the light, it obtained the credit of surpassing all former treatises upon Islam." After supplying the epigraph, or inscription, of Mirza Ibrahim's tract, which had been omitted in Mr. Martyn's memoirs, and correcting some errors made by Mr. Martyn himself, in dating his own tracts in conformity with the Mohammedan method of reckoning time by their Hegira, or the period of Mahomet's flight from Mecca to Medina, Mr. L. proceeds—"His answer," says Mr. Martyn's biographer, "was divided into two parts: the first was devoted principally to an attack upon Mahometanism: the second was intended to display the evidences and establish the authority of the Christian faith. It was written in Persian, and from a translation of the first part, which has been found, we perceive that Mr. Martyn, "having such hope," used great plainness of speech, whilst, at the same time, he treated his opponent with meekness and courtesy, &c."

"This," observes Mr. L., "is not quite correct. Mr. Martyn's replies consisted not of two, but of three parts, as the reader will perceive, from the following translations. Nor do they treat of the evidences of Christianity, at least in the sense in which that word is usually received. Towards the end of the third tract, indeed, some of the evidences in favour of Christianity are proposed: but with this Mr. Martyn's biographer seems not to have been acquainted—It will not be necessary for me to say anything on the merits of these tracts: the reader is at liberty to form his own opinion respecting them. I can only say, that, in translating them, I have endeavoured to give the sense and spirit of their author, without confining myself to a merely verbal rendering of the originals. Mr. Martyn's translation of the Arabic tract of Mirza Ibrahim, as also of two of his own, I had before me: but, they are written with so many erasures and cancells, and are, in other respects, so difficult to decipher, that I made very little use of them."

After bespeaking from the reviewers who may criticise his translations, "the language of the gentleman and the scholar, which," he says, "it is to be regretted do not always adorn their pages," Mr. L. goes on to give some account of Mirza Mohammed Hamedan, a highly distinguished Moola, who wrote and published a reply to Mr. Martyn's last two tracts, about two years after his leaving Persia, and resigning the controversies of earth for the peace of heaven. "Hearing," says Mr. L., "a little more than twelve months ago, that his Excellency Mirza Salih had come to this country, in the character of envoy extraordinary from the crown prince of Persia to his Britannic majesty; and having made his acquaintance during a former residence in this country, I addressed a Persian note to him, requesting

* A Moola is a Mohammedan Doctor, or teacher of their literature, laws and religion.
ould do me the favour to give a short account of the Mirza of Hamodán." We have a copy, in the Persian character of both these notes, with an English translation of the last. The Persian envoy very courteously complied with the request of Mr. who remarks, after giving a quotation of the envoy's note, "If I understand this aright, the author of that tract is at the head of the sects, or Mysticks of Persia; that a good moral character, and in favour at court. That he is to the charge of bigotry is, I see, apparent on the face of his apparent, and that he has more than expressed himself in a very coming manner, is also clear."

We learn from the memoir of Martyn, that while he was end in his controversy with Mir-ahraim, another Mohammedan, Aga Acber, officiously intruded, and wrote a tract on the sects of Mohammed. This, it says, was considered, at the of its publication, and by the ammedans themselves, as so and injudicious, that some of endeavoured to suppress it.

L., however, has obtained a and has given, in an append extended extract from it—Persian original on one page, an English translation on its site: and this he has followed notes of his own, showing the futility of all that has been, be said, by the Mohammedans, to prove that numerous cles were wrought by their het; especially as he himself never pretend that he wrought that were visible to others; ex the production of the Koran, which he declared to be a ding miracle, and challenged world to produce a composition could claim to be its equal. In c Appendix, Mr. L. gives opinion "as to the manner in which Mohammed obtained his in- respect to the Scripures and traditions of the Jews and Christians." This is a learned and instructive disquisition. Indeed, we consider these appendixes as containing some of the most valuable information and remarks comprised in the volume before us.

It will be noted, then, that, according to the statement now made, the body of this work consists of Mirza Ibrahim's defence of Islamism, translated from the Arabic; three tracts of Mr. Martyn, in reply to that defence, translated also from the Persian; the rejoinder of Mohammed Ruza of Ramadan, in reply to Mr. Martyn, about two years after his death, translated likewise from the Persian; and two appendices, the first relating to the alleged miracles of Mohammed, and the second to the manner in which he obtained some knowledge of the Bible. We give this distinct view of the body of the work, because it is that which gave occasion to the whole.

But we are now to state, that the work consists of two other parts, which we certainly regard as the most valuable of the whole; namely, a preface, consisting of 127 pages; and a conclusion, entitled, "The question discussed in the preceding pages, resumed by the translator," consisting of 183 pages. The important and benevolent object of Mr. L. in this laborious undertaking was, to furnish information that might be useful to missionaries, and to those who conduct missionary operations. To accomplish this he thought it proper, not only to furnish the whole controversy, as conducted by Mr. Martyn, but also as managed by a Popish missionary, long before Mr. Martyn's arrival in Persia; and to accompany the whole with his own reply to all the arguments of Musselmen, and his judgment of the manner in which the controversy with them ought always to be managed. This concluding discussion of Mr. L. is in a. high degree lucid and satisfactory.

The preface, after a few general remarks, relative to the design of the whole work, is entirely employed in giving an account of the controversy in Persia, on the subject of the Christian religion, previously to the time of Mr. Martyn. "The books of this controversy," observes Mr. L., "which have come into my hands, are three. One composed in the Persian language by Hieronymo Xavier,* a Catholick missionary. Another, containing a reply to Xavier's work, by a Persian nobleman, named Ahmed Iben Zain Elabidin, written also in Persian. And the third is a rejoinder in Latin, by Philip Guadagnoli, one of the professors attached to the college de propaganda fide, in defence of Xavier's work." It appears that the treatise of Xavier, was written in the form of a dialogue, between a Padre, or Christian priest, and a Persian philosopher. The substance only is given by Mr. L.; but it certainly contains an able argument in favour of Christianity, as superior to Mohammedanism; and would have been much less vulnerable by his antagonist, if it had been left free from the peculiarities of Popery. The reply made by the Persian nobleman, Zain Elabidin, Mr. L. considers as far the ablest defence of Mohammedanism that he has seen; decidedly superior to any thing alleged by the opposers of Mr. Martyn. He replies to it himself, separately from what appears in the conclusion of this volume. Of the reply of Guadagnoli, he gives but a short and summary notice.

We have already intimated that the discussion of the subject of controtroversy between Mohammedans and Christians, from the pen of Mr. L. himself, is, in our judgment, the most valuable part of the whole volume. The tracts of Mr. Martyn are excellent; but they were written under many disadvantages. It is indeed wonderful, to think how much was performed by that extraordinary man, within the compass of little more than a single year: for within that space, notwithstanding interruptions from ill health, and the verbal disputes which he was obliged almost constantly to maintain with erudite or captious Mohammedans, and the writing of his three tracts in the Persian language, he translated into that language, from the originals, the book of Psalms, and the whole of the New Testament.

Perhaps some of our readers may be a little surprised, that we should take so much interest as we have already manifested, in a controversy with the disciples and followers of Mohammed. They may think that this cannot be a subject for much argument; or, at the most, for argument of much difficulty. But they who judge thus, must do so because they are not acquainted with the topicks on which the controversy hinges, and the subtleties with which a learned Musselman will defend his faith. We confess for ourselves, that we had not an adequate idea of these subtleties, nor of the address and learning of those who use them, till we had read the book before us. We really think that a Soofee Moolah, of the first order, such as the one who wrote the last reply to the tracts of Mr. Martyn, is about as slippery a disputant as a man can ever be called to handle. He has all the controversial art of a school philosopher, and all the cunning of a special pleader. What with his metaphysick, and his learning, and his Soofeeism, and his arrogance, and his prejudices, taken altogether, he seems to us the most un-

* We know not whether this man was a relative of the celebrated Francis Xavier. Both were Papish missionaries, and both Jesuits. But Francis was, we believe, never in Persia; and he died in 1552, more than fifty years before the publication of the work here mentioned by Mr. L., which was in 1609.
Literary and Philosophical Intelligence.

Y man on earth, humanly
king, ever to become a convert of Christianity; and we deli-
ently think that the conversion of either heathens or Jews. We not to be understood as intiating that there is any real weight in what even the most Musselman has to offer in
of his religion—any thing
which could prove seriously stom-
to a well informed Christian.
mainly not. To such a Christian,
it can offer is easily seen to ly empty and vain. But still,
of such a character as is not ea-replied to, when the reply is made to the Musselman him-
and with a view to his conver-Hic labor, hoc opus est. And we are persuasively assured
, who are to encounter the fol-ons of the Arabian impostor,
to prepare for the conflict,
other like a regular train-
and discipline for the
ose; and that the friends of ions should aid them in the uration, by all the means they have at command. This has our principal inducement to the book under review to the ledge of our readers. We can indeed do little more than commend it to their notice. We have given a general view of its contents, but any thing like a complete analysis
of this learned work, to say nothing of extended extracts, would exceed the space which we can allow to a review of any work, in our scanty pages. It ought, however, to be known that the book, if it be possessed, must be sent for to Britain.
We have heard of but one copy,
beside that which is before us, in the United States; and we are very sure it will never be reprinted in this country. It could not indeed be reprinted, if there were a general demand for it, without such a font of Persian types, as is not to be found among us at present.—Of Arabick, Syriack, and Hebrew, we have probably enough for a reprint.
But the book, which is a costly ought to be in all our publick
libraries, and to be easily accessi-
able to missionaries and their patrons.

(To be continued.)

* The price of the volume, as marked
on the cover, is $1 5s. sterling, in boards.
It consists of 711 octavo pages, elegantly printed on letter paper, with a beautiful engraving of Mr. Martyn. It was printed at the University press, Cambridge.

Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, etc.

a Steam Boiler and Locomotive En-
Mr. Gurney of Argyle Street, has constructed a steam boiler of incridible lightness, power, and
th. The apparatus is founded on philosophical principles, and perl by an evident intimacy with the
and properties of heat, and we per-
that some important facts observed peculiar action of the oxy-hydrogen pe, have suggested many adapta-
of unequivocal value and advantage.
boiler has been in actual use for time to prove its advantageous practi-
and is now working an engine in umatory lately occupied by Mr.
s, in the Regent's park; it weighs pounds, and generates sufficient to work an eight horse engine—it observed here, that a boiler made common principle, to equal the same power, must weigh at least from four to five tons; the saving also in the expense of manufacture and fuel appears to be considerable. This boiler was invented for the express purpose of propelling carriages on common roads, but promises to be as economically applicable to steam engines generally, as it is to the purpose for which it was expressly constructed. It is well known to our scientific readers, that every attempt to propel carriages on common roads by steam power has failed, in consequence of the great weight, or imperfect application of the steam engine,—it may fairly be stated, that the objection in regard to weight for locomotion, is now completely removed by this boiler—the second, also appears to have been conquered, since Mr. Gurney's carriage has been actually tried on the road, and found to travel with great case. The carriage will be before the public in a short time.

Sir John Sinclair strongly recommends the use of oil as a manure, having seen excellent effects resulting from it on the Continent, and in some recent experiments in Great Britain. It is applied in the proportion of two gallons of coarse whale oil to twenty bushels of sashes.

In the address of Colonel Williams, our representative to the Republic of Guatemala, upon his presentation to the President of that Republic, allusion was made to the Canal by which it is proposed to unite the Atlantic with the Pacific Ocean. We now learn that subsequent to this address, the Government has granted a charter to an American Company to cut that canal, a copy of which has been received in this country.

There was lately found in the town of Mumakating, on the summit of the Delaware and Hudson canal, near the Branch turnpike, by Mr. Horace Adams, whilst digging the canal, 9 or 10 feet below the surface of the earth, a part of the bones of a Mammoth, consisting of one of the hip bones and a number of the joints of the back. The weight of the hip bone, when first taken out was 35 pounds, although much depreciated in weight, on account of the great length of time it must have lain in the earth. It is thought from the dimensions of this bone, that the animal must have been 8 or 9 feet across the hips when living. The socket of the thigh bone is 28 inches in circumference. The length and height of this animal cannot be ascertained until more of the bones are found. The above described hip bone can be seen at the house of John C. Reynolds, innkeeper, near where it was found.

Map of New England.—A map of the six New England States, on a scale of eight miles to an inch, including the boundary lines of all the counties and towns, the principal streams, roads, bridges, churches, villages, and various other objects, has been announced as nearly ready for publication.

Norfolk, August 17.

New Steam Engine.—It affords us much pleasure to notice briefly an ingenious invention by a townsmen of ours, Mr. Matthew Cluff, which dispensing with all complicated apparatus, and even that of ordinary pistons and valves, at once applies this valuable agent to the purpose of impelling a wheel of any diameter with an equable motion, capable of being applied to any species of machinery. We yesterday saw the model (upon a small scale) in operation, and were struck alike with the simplicity of the machine and the ease and regularity of its movement. A very correct idea of it may be formed by supposing one end of a plain tube, of any dimensions required, to be inserted into a boiler, round which a fire is made, and the other end entering near the bottom, a reservoir of water heated by the steam continually passing into it through the tube. In the reservoir a wheel with buckets, similar to that of an overshot mill, revolves on a common axis, deriving its motion, (which is rapid and of a power susceptible of any augmentation desired) from the steam which in its ascent from the bottom of the reservoir where the tube enters, continually fills the buckets and gives the wheel the necessary impulse.

We understand that Mr. Cluff intends to apply for a patent for his invention, and will probably test its value by erecting a machine without delay.

A silver mine has been discovered in Adams county, in the state of Pennsylvania, and an attempt is making to form a company to work it. The ore is said to be of considerable richness.

Two shocks of an earthquake have recently been felt at Richmond, Va. The first about nine o'clock on a Wednesday evening, and the other about noon, the day following.

A volume by the Rev. Dr. Alexander, Professor in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, on the canon of the Sacred Scriptures, will, we are authorized to say, proceed from the press of Mr. Borrenstein, in that village, in the course of the present month.

A very neat edition of Blanco White's "Practical and Internal Evidences against Catholicism," has just been republished, price one dollar, at Georgetown, District of Columbia, by James C. Dunn.

Religious Intelligence.
Dr. Chester, and Dr. Axtell, with instructions that they report during the sessions of the present Assembly.

The business of the Western Theological Seminary was made the order of the day for Tuesday morning next.

The receiving of the report of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, was made the order of the day for Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Armstrong had leave of absence until Monday morning.

The Presbyteries were called upon to report on the alteration proposed by the last Assembly, to be made in the 2d section of the 18th chapter of the Form of Government. These reports were received and committed to Dr. Ely to report the result.

The permanent clerk informed the Assembly, that there had been put into his hands an appeal from a decision of the Presbytery of Bath, by Mr. Charles Yale; two appeals from the Synod of New Jersey by the Rev. Josiah B. Andrews; and another from the Synod of New York, by Mr. Pope Bushnell. The above appeals were referred to the judicial committee.

Resolved, That the Act of the Assembly of 1820, in relation to the appointment of a printer and agent of the Assembly, be rescinded, and that the management of printing for the Assembly, and distributing its minutes, be referred to the Stated Clerk.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock. Concluded with prayer.

May 30, 9 o'clock, A. M. The Assembly met, and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Rev. William Moderwell, of the Presbytery of Hopewell, Rev. James Sabine of the Presbytery of Londonderry, and Rev. Ashbel G. Fairchild, of the Presbytery of Redstone, appeared in the Assembly, and their commissions being read, took their seats as members.

The committee of overtures reported, that they had overruled an application from the Synod of the Western Reserve for permission to conduct their own missionary operations. The Assembly took up this overture, and resolved that the request of the Synod be and it hereby is granted; and said Synod is directed to report its missionary labours annually to the Board of Missions.

The Assembly proceeded agreeably to the order of the day, to receive the Synodical and Presbyterial Reports, which were handed to the committee appointed on this business.

Resolved, That it be the order of the day for Wednesday morning next, to receive the Reports of the committees on the Synodical Records.

Dr. Blythe, Dr. Laurie, and Dr. Jamesway, were appointed a committee on the subject of the American Colonization Society.

A nomination was made of persons to be chosen delegates to the several ecclesiastical bodies connected with the Assembly.

Mr. Lord had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly. Mr. Maxwell was appointed in his place on the judicial committee.

Dr. Ely, to whom was referred the reports of Presbyteries on the alteration in the Constitution of chap. 12, sect. 2, proposed by the last Assembly, reported, that written reports prove 48 Presbyteries, and oral reports 9 Presbyteries, to have consented to said amendment; making 57 that are in favour of its adoption. Seven Presbyteries have decided against the amendment, and 21 have made no reports on the subject. Whence it appears that said amendment is adopted by a constitutional majority of the Presbyteries under the care of this Assembly.

This report was adopted, and it is hereby declared that chap. 12, sect. 2, of the Form of Government, is constitutionally amended, as to read as follows, viz.

The General Assembly shall consist of an equal delegation of bishops and elders, from each Presbytery, in the following proportion, viz. Each Presbytery consisting of not more than twelve ministers, shall send one minister and one elder; each Presbytery consisting of more than twelve ministers, and not more than twenty-four, shall send two ministers and two elders; and in the like proportion for every twelve ministers in any Presbytery. And these delegates so appointed, shall be styled Commissioners to the General Assembly.

The Committee of overtures reported an overture, No. 2, which was referred to the Board of Missions.

The committee appointed to make arrangements for the prayer meeting on Wednesday evening, made a report, which was accepted and adopted.

The Stated Clerk reported, that he had collected in bundles, as complete sets of the minutes of the General Assembly as it is possible now to obtain; and has connected with each set a bound copy of the Digest, which he proposes, with the leave of the Assembly, to sell to any of the ministers and elders of the Presbyterian Church for the sum of one dollar, which shall be paid into the missionary fund of the Assembly.

Whereupon it was resolved, That the Assembly approve of the conduct of the Stated Clerk, and grant him the leave desired.

Adjourned till 9 o'clock, on Monday morning. Concluded with prayer.
Religious Intelligence.

May 22, 9 o'clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Dr. George Pomeroy, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of Otsego, and Mr. Moody Hall, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of Union, appeared in the Assembly, and their commissions being read, took their seats as members.

Following the order of the day, an election was held for delegates to attend the several ecclesiastical bodies connected with the Assembly. The ballots were taken and committed to Mr. Judd, Mr. Miles, and Mr. Coe, to count them, and report the result to the Assembly.

The judicial committee made a report in the case of Mr. Pope Bushnell, which was laid on the table.

Mr. J. W. Cuninghame and Mr. Callender had leave of absence after to-morrow morning.

It being the order of the day, the Assembly proceeded to receive communications on the state of religion; and having made considerable progress in this business, the Assembly adjourned till 4 o'clock this afternoon. Concluded with prayer.

Four o'clock, P. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

The Assembly resumed and finished receiving reports on the state of religion.

Adjourned till 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. Concluded with prayer.

May 23, 9 o'clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. Buchanan resigned his seat to Mr. Amos Blaymaker, the principal mentioned in their commission.

Mr. Green obtained leave to resign his seat to Mr. Joseph Burbeck, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Resolved, That the Board of Missions be requested to present the thanks of the Assembly to the Rev. Joseph McElroy, for his missionary sermon delivered last evening, by the appointment of the Board.

The committee appointed to count the votes for delegates to the several ecclesiastical bodies connected with the Assembly, reported, and the following persons were declared duly elected, viz:

The Rev. John Johnson, to attend the next meeting of the General Association of New Hampshire, and of the General Convention of Vermont; the Rev. Wm. B. Dewitt, his alternate:

The Rev. Thomas M'Alley, D. D. and Mr. Eleazer Lord, ruling elder, to attend the next meeting of the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church; and the Rev. Stephen N. Rowan, D. D. and Mr. Benjamin Strong, ruling elder, their alternates:

The Rev. William Neill, D. D. and the Rev. James P. Wilson, D. D. to attend the next meeting of the German Reformed Synod, and the Rev. Reuben Post, alternate to either of them who may fail:

Agreedly to the order of the day, the business of the Western Theological Seminary was taken up. A report from the Board and the minutes were read. The report of the Board recommended, by a vote of eight to five, that Alleghany Town, opposite the city of Pittsburgh, should be the site of the Western Theological Seminary.

The following motion was then made and seconded:—Resolved, That the Western Theological Seminary be and it hereby is located at Alleghany Town.

This motion was discussed at considerable length.

A letter was received and read from the Female Tract Society of Philadelphia, presenting to the Assembly 4000 religious tracts, to be given to the missionaries of the Assembly, for distribution in destitute parts of the country.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Assembly be presented to the Philadelphia Female Tract Society for their generous donation; and that the Tracts be entrusted to the Stated Clerk, for distribution among the missionaries, agreeably to the intention of the donors.

Adjourned till this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Concluded with prayer.

Four o'clock, P. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Rev. Absalom Peters, from the Presbytery of Troy, and Mr. Wyllis F. Clarke, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of Bath, appeared in the Assembly, and their commissions being read, took their seats as members.

Dr. Chester had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly, after this afternoon.

Agreedly to the order of the day, the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, made their annual report, which was read, and committed.
1826.

Religious Intelligence.

Mr. McElroy, Mr. Hoge, Mr. Junkin, Mr. McIntosh, and Mr. Curry.

The Assembly resumed the consideration of the motion relative to the site of the Western Theological Seminary. The subject was again discussed at considerable length.

A nomination was made to fill the vacancies in the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary at Princeton.

Adjourned till 9 o’clock to-morrow morning. Concluded with prayer.

May 24, 9 o’clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Dr. Rowan obtained leave to resign his seat to Rev. Robert McGarrett, the alternate mentioned in their commission. Mr. Joseph C. Hornblower, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of Newark, appeared in the Assembly, and his commission being read, took his seat as a member.

Mr. Bascom had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

The committee appointed to prepare a narrative on the state of religion, presented their draft, which was read, and returned to them, that they might make such amendments in their statement of facts as members of the Assembly may suggest; and read the narrative at the prayer meeting this evening.

Mr. McGarrett was appointed on the judicial committee in the room of Dr. Rowan.

The Assembly resumed the consideration of the motion relative to the site of the Western Theological Seminary. After considerable discussion, a motion was made and carried, to postpone the motion to fix the site of the Western Theological Seminary at Alleghany Town, in order to take up the following, viz.

Resolved, That the Western Theological Seminary shall be located either in Alleghany Town, in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, or at Walnut Hills, in the vicinity of Cincinnati, or at Charleston, Indiana, as the General Assembly of 1827 shall decide.

A communication was received from the Presbytery of Hanover, relative to the Theological Seminary under their care, which was committed to Dr. Alexander, Dr. Laurie, Dr. Janeway, Mr. Sabine, and Mr. Gilderleeve.

Adjourned to meet this afternoon at 4 o’clock. Concluded with prayer.

Four o’clock, P. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Assembly received the ballots for persons to fill the vacancies in the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, which were committed to Mr. Casey, Mr. Boston, and Mr. Falschild, that they might canvass them and report the result to the Assembly.

The motion under consideration relative to the location of the Western Seminary was again considered, amended, and adopted in the following words, viz.

Resolved, That the Western Theological Seminary shall be located either in Alleghany Town, in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, or at Walnut Hills, in the vicinity of Cincinnati, or at Charleston, Indiana, as the General Assembly of 1827 shall decide.

A reference from the Presbytery of Philadelphia on the propriety of their ordaining to the work of the gospel ministry, a licentiate under their care, who now holds the office of a chaplain in the navy of the United States, was considered: whereupon the Assembly resolved,

That this judicature of the Presbyterian Church feels a deep and lively interest in the spiritual welfare of the mariners of this country; and especially of those who are engaged in the naval service of our union; and that the Assembly therefore will rejoice, if any Presbytery under its care has the opportunity of ordaining any well qualified persons, men of piety and learning, with a view to their rendering permanent ministerial services to large congregations of our fellow citizens who dwell in ships of war.

The committees appointed on the Records of the Synods of Ohio, Virginia, Albany, Pittsburgh, Gennesee, Philadelphia, New Jersey, New York, Tennessee, Kentucky, and the Western Reserve, reported respectively, and the Records were approved.

The committees on the records of the Synods of Geneva, North Carolina, and South Carolina, and Georgia, reported respectively, that the Records of these Synods had not been put into their hands. Satisfactory reasons were assigned for the absence of these records, and the committees on them were discharged.

The Trustees of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, made a report agreeably to charter, which was accepted, and committed to the committee on the report of the Board of Directors. Mr. Hamill, of Norristown, obtained leave to resign his seat to Mr. Jacob Mitchell, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Mr. Semple, Rev. James Kemper, and Mr. Caleb Kemper, obtained leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at 9 o’clock. Concluded with prayer.

May 25, 9 o’clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. James Warren, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of Newark, appeared.
the Assembly, and his commission being read, took his seat as a member.

The prayer meeting was attended last evening agreeably to appointment.

Mr. Burr obtained leave to resign his seat to the Rev. Aahbel Green, D. D. the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Mr. Leake obtained leave to resign his seat to the Rev. John F. Clark, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Mr. Mollison obtained leave to resign his seat to Mr. David McKean, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Dr. Martin obtained leave to resign his seat to the Rev. James Magraw, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Mr. Woodbridge obtained leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

The Board of Missions reported, and their report was committed to Mr. Clinton, Mr. Merril, and Mr. Miller.

The committee of Overtures reported several items of business, marked Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, which were put on the calendar.

The committee appointed to count the ballots for Directors of the Theological Seminary, made a report, from which it appeared that the following ministers and elders were elected for three years, viz.,

Elders.—Alexander Henry, Robert G. Johnson, George C. Barber.

Overture No. 8, was taken up. This Overture is as follows, viz.,

The accompanying basis of a union between the United Foreign Missionary Society, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, having been unanimously agreed upon by the managers of these Societies respectively;—the same having received the cordial approbation of the United Foreign Missionary Society, at its late annual meeting; and the Rev. Dr. McAuley, Rev. Messrs. M'Elooy, M'Cartee, and Mason, together with Joseph Nourse, and Zechariah Lewis, Esq; being appointed a committee to present the articles of union, already referred to, to the General Assembly, and endeavour to obtain their consent to the same;—said committee beg leave to discharge the duty thus imposed upon them.

The above overture was read and committed to Dr. Richards, Dr. Axtell, Mr. Peters, Mr. Reid, and Mr. Jennings, with instructions to report to-morrow morning.

Overture No. 10, was taken up, viz., A reference from the Presbytery of Philadelphia, relative to the ordination of Mr. John Chambers by the Association of the Western District of New Haven county, Connecticut. The papers on this business were read; after which the subject was discussed at considerable length.

Mr. White obtained leave to resign his seat to the Rev. Amzi Babbit, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Adjourned to meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Concluded with prayer.

Four o'clock, P. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. Kirkpatrick had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

The Assembly resumed the consideration of the reference from the Presbytery of Philadelphia, relative to the ordination of Mr. John Chambers, by the Association of the Western District of New Haven county, Connecticut. After considerable discussion the Assembly adjourned till to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock. Concluded with prayer.

May 26, 9 o'clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. Poor and Mr. Brown had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

The committee to which was referred the Synodical and Presbytery reports, made the following report, which was accepted and adopted, viz.

It appears that there are under the care of the General Assembly, 14 Synods comprising 85 Presbyteries; and that 68 Presbyteries have sent up to this Assembly reports more or less complete. These Religious Intelligence.

The resolution of the last Assembly, requiring the Presbyteries to appeal to the commissions of their Commissioners, the distance that each will have to travel in coming to the General Assembly, was repealed.

The Committee to whom was referred the communication from the Presbytery of Hanover, respecting the Theological Seminary under their care, reported in part, that they have had under consideration the first inquiry contained in said communication, viz. Whether the General Assembly is willing to receive in trust, the permanent funds of the Institution, and manage them for its benefit; and recommend to the General Assembly the following resolution for adoption.

Resolved, That said inquiry be referred to the Trustees of the General Assembly to report thereon.

This resolution was adopted; and the inquiry of the Presbytery of Hanover was accordingly referred to the Trustees of the General Assembly.

The committee appointed on communication from a committee of the managers of the United Foreign Missionary Society, made a report which was put on the docket.

The judicial committee reported an appeal by Pope Bushnell, an appeal by Harvey Chapin, two appeals by Joshua B. Andrews, and an appeal by Charles Yale, with papers of directions in each, to be used by the Assembly, in hearing these appeals.

The several appeals reported by the judicial committee, were put on the docket.

The narrative of the state of religion was taken up, and being read by paragraphs, and amended, was adopted.

Resolved, That it be committed to the Stated Clerk, and that he have 1000 copies printed, and distributed among the members of the Assembly. Adjourned till 4 o'clock this afternoon. Concluded with prayer.

Four o'clock, P. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. Zachariah Lewis, a ruling elder from the Presbytery of New York, appeared in the Assembly, and his commission being read, took his seat as a member.

Mr. Gilbert resigned his seat to the Rev. Ebenezer Dickey, D. D., the principal mentioned in their commission.

Mr. John Belville the alternate of Mr. Kirkpatrick, who yesterday obtained leave of absence, appeared in the Assembly, and took his seat as a member.

The committee to whom was referred the report of the Board of Missions, recommend that the proceedings of the Board of Missions should be approved.
and that the Trustees of the General Assembly should be instructed to issue warrants to pay the several sums due to the missionaries.

This report was adopted, and the Trustees were directed to issue warrants accordingly.

An extract from the minutes of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, was laid before the Assembly, recommending that the Plan, Article VI. Sect. 4, should be amended, so as to read as follows, viz.:

"Every student shall be obliged to write on such Theological and other subjects, as may be prescribed to him by the Professors. In the first year, every student shall be obliged to produce a written composition on such subjects, at least once in every month; in the second year, once in three weeks; in the third year, once in two weeks. Each student shall also commit to memory, a piece of his own composition, and pronounce it in public, before the professors and students, as frequently as in the judgment of the professors this exercise can properly be performed, when a due regard is had to the number who must engage in it, and to the other duties of the Seminary."

On motion, it was resolved unanimously, That the above recommendation of the Board of Directors be adopted: and the plan of the Seminary, Art. VI. Sect. 4, is accordingly hereby amended as above stated.

The following Extract from the minutes of the Board of Directors, was also laid before the Assembly, viz.:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the General Assembly to add to the salary of Professor Charles Hodge, the sum of £250 per annum, so as to make his salary £1250 per annum.

Agreeably to the above recommendation of the Board, it was resolved, that the sum of £250 per annum be added to the salary of Professor Hodge.

The Assembly resumed the consideration of the reference from the Presbytery of Philadelphia, in relation to the ordination of Mr. Chambers. After further discussion of the subject at considerable length, the following resolution was adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That a committee of this Assembly, consisting of three, be appointed to attend at the meeting of the General Association of Connecticut to be convened at Stamford, in June next, to meet a similar committee of that Association, if said Association shall be pleased to appoint one; for the purpose of conferring on the grievance of which the Presbytery of Philadelphia complain; and of inquiring whether any, and if any, what further articles, or alteration of the present terms of intercourse between the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and the members of the congregational churches in Connecticut, may be expedient for the better promotion of the purity, peace, and Christian discipline of the churches connected with the two bodies; which further articles or alterations of the present terms of intercourse, if any shall be proposed by the joint committee, shall be submitted to the General Association of Connecticut, and to the General Assembly of 1837, for adoption or rejection.

Resolved, That it be the order of the day for to-morrow morning to elect by ballot the committee contemplated in the above resolution.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock. Concluded with prayer.

May 27, 9 o'clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. Samuel Bayard, the principal named in the commission, appeared in the Assembly, and took the place of Mr. Poor, who yesterday obtained leave of absence.

Mr. Ready, Mr. Strong, Mr. Barrows, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Emlen, had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

The committee on Mileage, made a report, which was adopted. Resolved, That the Trustees of the General Assembly, be directed to issue warrants for the payment of the several Commissioners, to the amount of £1537 41, agreeably to the report of the committee.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Assembly proceeded to receive the ballots, for the committee to attend the General Association of Connecticut, which were committed to Mr. Mc'Cartee, Mr. Hamilton, and Mr. Taylor, to count them and report the result.

The report of the committee on a communication from a committee of the managers of the United Foreign Missionary Society, was taken up, and after mature deliberation, it was

Resolved, That the General Assembly do consent to the amalgamation of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and the United Foreign Missionary Society.

Resolved, further, That this General Assembly recommend the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions to the favourable notice and Christian support of the church and people under our care.

The committee appointed to receive and count the votes for the committee to attend the next General Association of Connecticut, reported that the Rev. Samuel Miller, D. D. the Rev. John McDowell, D. D. and the Rev. Thomas Mc'Ashey, D. D. were fully elected. The Archibald Alexander, D. D. was appointed first alternate, and the Rev. Ashbel Green, D. D. second alternate, to any of the members of the committee who may fail.

Mr. Peters had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

Mr. Moderwell had leave of absence until Wednesday afternoon.

Adjourned till 9 o'clock on Monday morning. Concluded with prayer.

May 29, 9 o'clock, A. M. The Assembly met and was constituted with prayer. The minutes of the last session were read.

Mr. M'Clearn obtained leave to resign his seat to Mr. Charles Pierce, the alternate mentioned in their commission.

Mr. Stewart and Mr. Jacob Gould had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

Overture No. 3, viz. A petition concerning the formation of a Presbytery, to consist of the missionaries and churches in the Cherokee nation, was taken up, and committed to Dr. Rice, Dr. Richards, and Mr. M'Elroy.

Overture No. 4, viz. An application for the division of the Synod of Tennessee, was taken up, and committed to Mr. Reid, Mr. Alexander, and Mr. Hamilton.

Dr. Alexander obtained leave to resign his seat to Dr. Carnahan, the alternate named in their commission.

Overture No. 5, On the observance of the Sabbath, was taken up and committed to Dr. Carnahan, Dr. Axtell, and Mr. Junkin.

Mr. Colton had leave of absence from the remaining sessions of the Assembly.

The Trustees of the General Assembly, to whom was referred the report of the committee on the application of the Presbytery of Hanover, relative to the Theological Seminary under their care, made a report on the point submitted to them, and their report was put into the hands of a committee on this subject.

Overture No. 6, viz. An application for the promotion of a new Presbytery in the county of Chenango, and adjacent parts in the state of New York, was taken up, when the following resolution was adopted, viz.

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners be granted; and the Assembly hereby constitute the Presbytery of Chenango, to be composed of the Rev. Edward Andrews, and the Rev. Asa Donaldson, of the Presbytery of Otsego; the Rev. John D. Wells, of the Presbytery of Cayuga; the Rev. Ebenezer Roosevelt, of the Presbytery of Columbia; and the Rev. Ambrose Eggleston of the Presbytery of Susquehana: and to be bounded on the north by the Presbytery of Oneida; on the east by the Presbyteries of Otsego and Columbia; on the south by the Presbytery of Susquehana; and on the west by the Presbyteries of Cayuga and Oneida.

The Assembly direct the Presbytery so constituted and bounded, to meet in Oxford, on Thursday the 29th day of June, at 11 o'clock, A. M. and that the Rev. Asa Donaldson, or in case of his absence, the senior minister present, open the Presbytery with a sermon, and preside until a moderator be chosen; and the Presbytery of Chenango is hereby attached to the Synod of Geneva.

Overture No. 7, viz. on the qualifications of the lay delegates who may be entitled to a seat in the General Assembly, was taken up, and committed to Dr. Richards, Dr. Axtell, Mr. Johnston, Mr. Hotckin, Mr. M'Cartee, Mr. Bayard, Mr. Maxwell, and Mr. Hornblower.

Overture No. 8, relating to an amendment, in the form of government, Chap. XIII. Sect. 20, was taken up, and after considerable discussion, was committed to Dr. Janeway, Mr. Hodge, Mr. Jennings, Dr. Carnahan, and Mr. Adams.

Resolved, That the Trustees of the General Assembly be instructed to inquire relative to a law of the state of Pennsylvania, which imposes a tax of 2½ per cent on all bequests to any literary, moral, and religious objects, and to report to this Assembly if any, and if any, what measures ought to be pursued to remove the grievance.

The committee on Mr. M'Crimmon's appeal from a decision of the Presbytery of Fayetteville, confirming his suspension from the communion of the church, for having married his deceased wife's sister, reported, that in their opinion, no relief can be given to the said M'Crimmon without an alteration of the Confession of Faith, Chap. XXIV. Sect. 4, the last clause of which declares, that "The man may not marry any of his wife's kindred nearer in blood than he may of his own; nor the woman of her husband's kindred nearer in blood than of her own;" but inasmuch as a diversity of opinion and practice obtains on this very important subject, your committee beg leave to submit the following resolution, viz.

Resolved, That the Presbyteries be and they are hereby directed to take this matter into serious consideration, and send up in writing to the next General Assembly, an answer to the question, whether the above quoted clause of our Confession shall be erased?

The above report was adopted.

The following protest was presented to the Assembly, and ordered to be entered on the minutes, viz.

The undersigned begs leave to make his solemn protest against the decision of the General Assembly, by which they...
The following protest was also offered and ordered to be entered upon the minutes, viz.

The subscribers enter their dissent and protest, against the resolution by which Mr. Josiah Bisell was admitted as a member of this General Assembly for the following reasons:

1. Because he was neither an ordained minister, nor a ruling elder: and consequently he was destitute of the qualifications which the constitution of our church requires in commissioners appointed by Presbyteries, as their representatives in this body.

2. Because he was not even a committee-man, on which ground, some might, in existing circumstances, have been disposed to advocate his admission as a member.
OBITUARY.

DIED, on 23d of June, in Salem, South Carolina, the Rev. William James Wilson, pastor of Salem church, in the 39th year of his age. He had been ordained to the sacred office and installed only three months before and with very flattering hopes of success. An affectionate people now deplore his loss, to them apparently so premature.

Endowed by his God with most excellent talents, Mr. Wilson had cultivated the same with the utmost assiduity. To a mind richly stored with useful and various knowledge, he united a correctness of morals, almost from infancy irreproachable, and a modesty and evangelical piety truly interesting. These qualifications had made a way for him to the hearts of his congregation, and respect, confidence, and love, were the awards of his merit, which it was delightful for them to tender him. To these, his grateful heart responded with warmth and ardour. At once did he attain that, which others with long and painful labour scarcely arrive at—to love, and to be beloved, by his charge—the most eligible situation of the conscientious and devout pastor. But not in his bereaved church only is he lamented; other societies, who had the happiness of hearing and knowing him, also feel the bereavement. Many of his literary friends, alumni of the State College of South Carolina especially, (where he lately shone as one of its brightest lights,) must recognise themselves sharers in the loss. But most of all, a venerable and fond father mourns a beloved and only son—a most sacred sorrow; for so true is it, “that a father always mourns without hope, as to this world.”

The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of August last, viz.

Of Rev. John Breckinridge, Lexington, Kentucky, for the Oriental and Biblical Literature Professorship...
Of Rev. Robert W. James, subscriptions in the vicinity of Indiantown, S. C. on Rev. Samuel S. Davis’s paper, for the Southern Professorship...

View of Publick Affairs.

EUROPE.

London papers of the 23d of July, and Paris papers of the 24th, are, we believe, the latest which have reached this country, at the time we write.

Britain.—It is impossible to describe the distress which existed at the date of the last accounts, in several parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, among the labouring poor; and indeed with many who till lately had not been accounted poor. Instances not a few are mentioned of individuals, and even families, who had scarcely tasted a mouthful of sustenance for two or three days—Some had actually starved to death. Such cases, however, were not numerous. Private liberality had been heavily taxed and magnificently exercised, to relieve the wants of the necessitous. Yet it had never been equal to the demand; and the funds which it had supplied were, in some places nearly, and in others entirely exhausted. What was to be the issue none could certainly predict, but anticipations were of the most gloomy kind. Absolute starvation seemed to threaten a large portion of the population of the United Kingdom. The people, nevertheless, generally bore their privations with great patience. Riots had mostly ceased, and designing incendiaries were disheartened. It seemed to be the general expectation, that the first business of Parliament after it should convene, would be, to take some measures to relieve the general distress. The last accounts, however, state that the ministers of the crown disconcerted the idea of relief from the national treasury. It does indeed seem as if the unequal distribution of property in Britain, had brought the nation very near to a fearful crisis. For a large mass of population to be literally famishing with hunger, in view of others who are wallowing in wealth and luxury, is a state of things which cannot long continue, in a community where so much information is possessed, and where the love of liberty is so ardent, as it is in Britain. Some measures must ultimately, and we think speedily, be taken, to bring the different classes of society, in point of property and enjoyment, nearer together.

The elections for members of parliament seem in general to have resulted in favour of the ministerial party and candidates. Cobbett and Hunt had not only been disappointed, but distanced in the contest. We are not able to say whether the friends of Catholic emancipation have, on the whole, gained or lost, in members of Parliament, by the late elections. The dignified Catholic clergy have recently issued a manifesto in England, stating their religious and political creed; with a view to show that their principles are not dangerous or unfriendly to a Protestant state. The paper is ably and artfully drawn. What effect it will have remains to be seen. Parliament had been a second time prorogued—to the 24th of August—Business of every kind, in the manufacturing and commercial world, was enervated, and in some places almost at a stand. Yet in London money was plenty. The capitalists knew not how or where to employ their funds. The harvest of grain in England, and the crop of potatoes in Ireland, happily for the poor, promised to be abundant.

France.—The last arrivals from Europe bring information that the French armed vessels, in the ports and on the coast of Spain, chase the Colombian privateers that appear there, and treat them as enemies. This doubtful war with Colombia in fact, at the very time that the agents of France are endeavouring to obtain commercial favours from that republic. The truth is that France is sadly embarrassed by her connexion with Spain. She must support Spain, or receive no compensation for her late military operations there, and she cannot support Spain without losing all the advantages of commercial intercourse with her late colonies on the American Continent.

An entire calm seems to prevail in the interior of France. Except the above, we notice nothing in this kingdom, during the past month, of general interest.

—The French chambers were adjourned on the 20th of July, amidst cries of Vive le Roi—Trade and manufactures are in a depressed state, but not accompanied with extreme suffering among the poor, as in Britain.

Spain.—We learn that the king of Spain has manifested the most marked displeasure on receiving the intelligence of the course about to be pursued by the emperor Don Pedro, with respect to Portugal. He acted like himself; that is, very childishly, on the occasion; called all the foreign ambassadors about him, and uttered his complaints to them; and kept his palace in confusion for a whole day. His great fear is, that the liberal party, still existing in Spain, may give him new trouble, if the projects of Don Pedro, in regard to the neighbouring kingdom, should be realized. It is said that his cabinet has addressed notes to the ministers of France, Austria and Russia, to induce their respective governments to prevent, by all possible means, the carrying into effect of the constitution granted to Portugal. How they will "wrap it up" time will disclose.

It also appears that the Algerine cruisers have recently been ravaging the coast of Spain, and that the Spanish monarch has purchased a peace of the Dey of Algiers, at the price of six millions of reals. The declension of commerce at Cadiz is said to have banished a fourth part of the population, and to have reduced the remainder to a state of wretchedness. Insurrection, and the fear of insurrection, in various places, requires constantly the marching and countermarching of troops, to keep the people in awe. In Madrid itself, order is sustained only by military force.

Portugal.—Arrangements seem to be quietly going forward in this kingdom—the alarm of Spain notwithstanding—to carry into effect the new constitution granted by the emperor Don Pedro. He has published a general amnesty to all criminals in Portugal.

Rome.—It is said that the massacre at Missolonghi, has made so deep an impression on the Roman Pontiff, that he has it in contemplation to address a letter, in favour of the Greeks, to all the Christian potentates. But why, we ask, this circumstance was to effect his object? He has had a direct influence with the Grand Senior, to obtain a firmer to suppress the distribution of the sacred scriptures, in every part of the Ottoman empire; and will not the same good friend, again listen to him, when he pleads for the poor Greeks? But most seriously, if the Pope is really animated with a desire to serve the Greeks, we give him credit for his humanity; and only wish that he had, pro hac vice, the influence with Christian princes which his predecessors once had. But he has it not; and those princes will give all his entreaties to the wind, unless they perceive that they can promote some of their own selfish views, by complying with them.

The most vigorous measures have been taken at Rome, for the entire suppression, and prevention hereafter, of all secret societies, in all the states of the church. To favour them in any way, is declared to be high treason, and punishable by death. The bishop appointed by the Pope for Louisiana, has resigned his appointment.

GREECE.—The capture of Missolonghi seems to have had the most disheartening effect on the whole of Greece. The Turkish forces march in all directions, with very little opposition, or even annoyance—Ibrahim Pacha, on his way from Patras to Tripolitza, dispersed, without a conflict, the small Greek bands which lay in his route, took several small fortresses, without resistance, and on his near approach to Tripolitza, the 3000 troops which had been embodied there under Colocotroni, were routed by defect, and 300, and these, with their commander, took to flight. Measures were taken for the reduction of Athens—From what quarter deliverance is to arise for Greece, we know not; and yet we do not resign our hope that it will appear.

TURKEY.—The present Grand Senior, who with the cruelty of an infernal seems to unite much courage and general talent, has made an attempt, which promises to be successful, entirely to annihilate, throughout his whole dominions, the military corps of Janissaries—heretofore the strong arm, and chief reliance of the Ottoman power. It appears the state of things had come to that pass, that the Sultan must either destroy the Janissaries, or that they would dethrone and decapitate him; as their order have heretofore been wont to do, when a Sultan incurred their displeasure. In these circumstances, the present Sultan, by wily management, concealed from him his purpose, till he had made sure of the support of the other troops, Asiatic and Egyptian; and then made a daring attack on the quarters of the Janissaries in Constanti- nople, routed them completely, and spared none till he had obtained a complete victory. He has since abolished the whole order, and sought by every art he can invent, to extinguish it utterly, by rendering it dangerous and disgraceful to show a Janissary the least favour or affection. There are, however, yet remaining in Turkey, a number of Janissary corps and stations, not reduced; and a reaction may possibly take place. If not, it is not easy to say what will be the consequence of this change in the Turkish system. It will probably be followed by important consequences of some kind.

RUSSIA.—It is said in the Paris papers, that accounts had been received there from St. Petersburg, of the date of July 4th, stating that the sentence of the conspirators had been pronounced, and that only seven were condemned to death. Other accounts say, that the Emperor Nicholas is opposed to inflicting this sentence on any of the guilty. We believe the truth is, that there is great and extensive unkindness in the emperor’s dominions, and that he wishes to take that course which will cause the least excitement, but is really at a loss how to act. It is said that when he caused it to be made known to the troops in his capital, that he had satisfactorily adjusted all his difficulties with the Porte, the officers received the information with sullen silence. They no doubt wished for a war, and are disobliged that their wishes have been disappointed.

SWEDEN.—It appears that there has been a failure of the harvest in Sweden, and that a consequent scarcity is fully expected. Great damage has also been sustained by fires raging in the forests, in almost all the provinces of this kingdom.

ASIA.

We believe the Burmese war is terminated. A British paper says—"The following article was taken from the Madras Courier extra, of March 39th, 1826—

"The treaty of peace ratified by the king, and accompanied by the first instalment, twenty-five lacks, of the pecuniary part of the price of it, was delivered to our commissioners, by a deputation of ministers sent from the Golden Court to our head quarters at Yeandaboo, forty-two miles from Ava, on the 24th of February—when royal salutes were fired by our forces, and tokens of friendship exchanged between the two parties, on the occasion."
We have heard nothing very recently of the missionaries; but our understanding is, that they are safe; and that by acting as mediators and interpreters for the Burmees, they have obtained their good will, and thus have brightened their prospects of success in disseminating the gospel among them.

AFRICA.

The British, it appears, are prosecuting their exploring expeditions into the heart of Africa, with great zeal and perseverance; and if the articles which appear in the publick papers may be relied on, the prospect of complete success is better now than at any former period. Morocco is suffering dreadfully by famine and disease.

We learn with pleasure from the African Repository for August, printed at Washington city, that "the governor of Sierra Leone has laid a blockade on the line of coast reaching from that colony to Cape Mount inclusive," and that "Captains Chase and Cottrell have either captured, or 'payed' away every Guineaman, known to be on any part of the coast, between Cape Palmas and Sierra Leone." Our own colony at Liberia, has also interdicted the slave trade, "on the whole line of coast between Cape Mount and Trade Town, both inclusive." In all this we cordially rejoice; but yet it is a fact which ought not to be concealed, that the slave trade is still carried on, to a most shocking extent—probably there is little diminution in the number of slaves now carried from the African coast, and that of any former period—The parties to this infamous traffic are chiefly French, Spaniards and Portuguese.

AMERICA.

PANAMA.—The Congress at Panama has at length been opened. The discourse delivered on the occasion by Senor Vidaurre has been brought to this country; and it is said to be in the hands of a translator for the purpose of publication—It is probably a paper in which many will take a deep interest.

BRAZIL AND BOLIVIAN ARMED.—We have recently heard nothing which we deem worthy reporting, of the war which still exists between these states; unless it be that Admiral Brown is closely blockaded by the Brazilian squadron.

COLOMBIA.—The executive department of the government of Colombia have published a manifesto, relative to the insurrection in Venezuela, of the date of the 12th of July last. The government vindicates itself against all the charges brought against it by General Paez, and calls upon the nation to defend and sustain the sacred code of her liberties. It appears by the last accounts that the cause of Paez is far less popular than we had supposed it to be. It seems that the country in general is not with him, but against him. He will therefore probably be subdued: but as he commands a considerable army of disciplined troops, who appear to be attached to him, much blood will, we fear, be shed in the conflict, unless it shall be prevented by the arrival of Bolivar.

On the 18th of June last, a most terrific earthquake took place at Bogota. Some houses were entirely thrown down, and very many greatly injured. The terror occasioned by the shock was extreme, and yet it is stated that only three lives were lost.

GUATEMALA.—It appears that about a year ago the Government of the Republic of Central America, called for proposals for effecting a navigable communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, through Nicaragua, one of the States of Central America; and that several companies have been formed for the purpose in Europe, as well as one, if not more, in the United States. Official information has lately been transmitted to President Adams, that the contract for this noble and interesting undertaking, has been given to the company in New York, of which A. H. Palmer, Esq. is a leading member. The route of the contemplated canal is by the river St. John into the Lake of Nicaragua, and from the western extremity of that lake, about seventeen miles, to the Pacific. The company is to have the right of toll, and certain other exclusive privileges, supposed to be of great value. A plan of this kind has been long in contemplation; and if it shall be successfully executed, it will produce wonderful changes in the commercial world—A voyage from our country to the Galapagos, or even to the Otaheitean or Sandwich islands, will be about as easy as to Britain, France, or Spain.

UNITED STATES.—At the commencement of the present season, the prospects of our country, in regard to the fruits of the earth, seemed to be gloomy; but it is drawing to a close in a manner which demands our warmest gratitude to the Giver of all good, for the happy change which has taken place. The abundant, and even supernumbant rains, which have fallen, and the warmth with which they have been accompanied, have produced an unusual plenty of almost every vegetable production, and of the best qualities. Losses, indeed, to a considerable amount, have been sustained, as the effects of torrents. But the general benefit is great and unexpected. Nor, as yet, has that scourge of our country, the yellow fever, appeared in any part of our land. Health, as well as plenty, generally prevails. "O that man would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"
THE
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

DECEMBER, 1826.

Religious Communications.

LECTURES ON THE SHORTER CATECHISM OF THE WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES—ADDRESSED TO YOUTH.

LECTURE XXV.

"Christ executeth the office of a king, in subduing us to himself, in ruling and defending us, and in restraining and conquering all his and our enemies."

I have heretofore had occasion to show, that the kingly office of Christ is plainly taught in the holy scripture. To this office he was ordained, or appointed, even from everlasting. It is the general opinion of orthodox divines, that to him the personification of wisdom refers, which we find in the 8th chapter of the book of Proverbs; where it is said—"I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was."—It is clearly the doctrine of scripture, that the universe was created by Christ, and for him; and that he is made "head over all things to the church." "By him (says the apostle) were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him: And he is before all things, and by him all things consist: And he is the head of the body the church."

Thus it appears, that Christ Jesus is the sovereign Lord of creation, and exercises his dominion with a special reference to his church and people. From the nature of the case, he could not exercise his kingly office as a part of his mediatorial character and work, till after the fall of our first parents. Till there were sinners and rebels against God, there was no room for the functions of a Mediator. But immediately after the fall, the kingly office of Christ, as mediator between God and man, began to be exercised. The promise was then made, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head—a promise to be fulfilled in the exercise of divine and sovereign power, which was to be manifested by Christ, as the king of his church.

The throne of this mighty potentate,—this King of Zion,—is in heaven. The Lamb that "is in the midst of the throne, (says St. John, speaking of heaven) shall feed his people, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters." This is now a throne of grace to his people, to which they are invited to approach with a holy boldness, "that they may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." This throne, at the consummation of all things, shall be placed in the visible aerial heavens;—it shall be set as a throne of judgment for angels and men, and they shall stand before it, to receive from Christ the award of life or death eternal.

Even now, the King of Zion sways his sceptre with resistless efficacy, both over his friends and foes. The gospel is the sceptre of his grace, which, accompanied by the power of his Spirit, is made effectual, first to gather, and afterwards to guide and govern, his own people. The power of his anger is that iron sceptre, whereby he dashes his enemies in pieces, and destroys all those who inflexibly refuse his grace. He is called in scripture "the Lord of hosts," and all the armies in heaven, whether saints or angels, obey his commands. Nay, satan and all his host, are not only perfectly under his control, but are the executioners of his wrath on the wicked of this world, who will not have him to reign over them. Satan is permitted (and he only waits for the permission) to inflict on them the judgments which their crimes invoke. At the bidding of the King of Zion, too, the elements of nature, or the meanest of the animal or reptile tribes, become the scourges of mankind.

Christ also receives a continual tribute of voluntary praise, honour and glory, by the saints on earth, and by both saints and angels in heaven: And he levies a tribute of unwilling praise, even on his enemies: He maketh the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder of that wrath he restrains.

The King of Zion has sometimes made his angels his ambassadors. "They delight to do his will—They are all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them that shall be heirs of salvation." How much we owe to their invisible agency, we cannot tell. Both under the old and the new dispensation, they went on many errands of importance, in the administration of the kingdoms of providence and grace: And as we are expressly told that they conveyed the departed spirit of Lazarus to Abraham's bosom, it is reasonable to believe that they act as a guard and convoy to heaven, of other departed spirits of the just.

Angels, nevertheless, are not the ordinary ambassadors of Christ, in his kingdom of grace in our world. Not only would their appearance be terrifying, but not sharing in the feelings and infirmities of human nature, they would not know the wants of man by experience, nor sympathize with him in his afflictions, like one of his own kind. In addition to this, the thought is suggested by inspiration, that the praise will more manifestly be all given to God, when his ambassadors are weak and imperfect men themselves, like those to whom they are sent. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." For these reasons, when the King of Zion ascended on high, led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men, "he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ—Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—I must here magnify my office. I should fail in my duty to you, my children, if I did not teach you to regard every faithful and consistent minister of the gospel, in the performance of his official duties, as an ambassador of the King of Zion. Such he unquestionably is; and you are bound to regard his messages and warnings, as those of the Saviour in whose name he speaks.

Having now disposed of some detached, but important circumstances and considerations, relative to the kingly office of Christ, let us briefly consider the several clauses of the answer before us, distinctly and in order.

1. Christ, as a king, subdues his people to himself. He finds them, like the rest of the world, lying in wickedness,—the captives of Satan,—the slaves of sin,—in thrall and bondage to both. He delivers them by the instrumentality of his word, applied by the power of his Spirit. The word of God is the sword of the Spirit—The Spirit of Christ, therefore, is the agent, and divine truth the instrument, in the conversion of sinners. No other instrument is immediately used, but divine truth; and no agent can render that truth savingly efficacious, but the Holy Spirit—Hence those two remarkable passages of scripture, relative to the regeneration or conversion of the saints—"Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible; by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever—which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."—In the first of these passages, you observe that the word of God is the seed, or instrumental cause, of regeneration;—in the second, after setting aside all human agency, God himself is represented as the efficient cause, or agent in this great work. The Spirit of Christ then, (of Christ as the great king and head of his church) using the word of God, as the sword in his hand, subdues his people to himself. They are made "a willing people in the day of his power."

The will is principally concerned in this work—The people of Christ are not treated as machines: They are not driven into his kingdom. They are rendered willing; and they never act more willingly, nor with greater freedom, than when they become his subjects. He sweetly bows their wills, and draws their affections from obedience and attachment to sin and satan, to supreme love to himself and a prevalent regard to all his requisitions. Thus they are changed; and the bias and current of their souls is altered, from rebellion to obedience, from sin to holiness. They now are subdued to Christ, by the soft but resistless energy of his grace—They "are translated out of the kingdom of Satan, into the kingdom of God's dear Son:" And although they remain still in the world, yet they are not of the world, but true and lively members of Christ's invisible kingdom; and therefore the subjects of hatred with the devoted friends of the world, because different from them in temper and pursuit.

Every subject of Christ's kingdom, as one of the first fruits and exercises of that grace which his Spirit implants, puts forth the acts of a justifying saving faith. Action presupposes an agent:—Saving faith is the act or exercise of a new nature, which must therefore exist before faith can be exercised. Yet as this nature acts as soon as it exists, and acts in the exercise of faith, we are no more obliged to separate regeneration from faith, than to separate any other cause from its necessary and invariable effect—where you find the one, you will certainly find the other. In the present case, it is that faith which flows from a renewed heart which embraces the offered Saviour, and insures to its possessor all the benefits of his purchase. By faith, wrought in the heart and drawn into exercise by the Spirit of Christ, he applies to the soul of each of his subjects the whole of his satisfaction and benefits. In virtue of this application, all demands of law and justice are answered fully;—the happy subject of it receives the complete pardon of sin; the spirit of adoption, whereby the law of God is obeyed from a principle of love; victory over the world; and eventually over the last enemy, death.

(To be continued.)

To the Editor.

In the last letter on the Atone ment, page 486, the word Durra-Butive was not intended to be used in the heading of the third particular. It should have read: “On the plan of the New School, the justice of God has not been satisfied, nor can there be any display of this attribute in the death of Christ.” You will observe, from the illustration and proof, that it was the author's design to show that neither publick nor distributive justice has received any satisfaction, on the principles of the New School.

——

ON THE ATONEMENT.

No. X.

The Love of God.

My dear Brother,—The theories of the two schools in relation to divine love, will be examined in this letter. I shall endeavour to prove that the doctrine of the Old School puts a higher honour on the love of God manifested in the gift of his only Son, as our atoning sacrifice, than that of the New.

In holy scripture, this love is celebrated as the highest and most glorious display of love that was ever made. Accordingly, we contemplate it as that special love, which Jehovah was pleased to entertain for all whom he designed to bring to the enjoyment of everlasting happiness. We believe that, for the consistent and honourable exercise of this amazing and eternal love, and that it might flow out to them in its rich and exuberant blessings, he sent his own Son to be a propitiation for their sins. “Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that God loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.” 1 John, iv. 10.

We believe that, if Jehovah had not conceived this love for his chosen, which prompted him to effect their salvation, he certainly would not have exposed his co-equal Son to shame and suffering, nor permitted his precious blood to be shed by impious men.

But as the New School believe that the death of Christ merely opened the door of mercy for all men, they can attribute the atonement to no higher source than the general benevolence and good will of God. “It is,” says the writer of Dialogues on Atonement, “the love of benevolence or good will. This has for its object all creatures capable of enjoyment or suffering; and regards the happiness of each one according to its real worth. Now the happiness of an individual is not, in itself, any more valuable, if he is elected, than if he is not elected. But God regards things according to their real worth. His regard for the happiness of the non-elect, therefore, is the same as for that of the elect.”

“When this kind of love is exercised towards the guilty, it is called compassion.” “Finally, it is this compassion for sinners, which is expressed by the Father, in giving his Son to die; and by the Son, in laying down his life. And this is the plain import of the text before mentioned, “God so loved the world, that he sent his only begotten Son.” Again: “It is evident, therefore, that God felt no special love for the elect, no love of a different kind, from that which he felt for the non-elect. He loved one as much as he did the other: and in the exercise of that love for all he gave his Son to die for all.” Now here it is asserted that Jehovah loved the non-elect, as much as he loved the elect; and that the compassion which he feels for the guilty of every description, is the spring of that astonishing gift which fills heaven and earth with holy wonder and delight; and, consequently, it follows that the compassion which the divine bosom feels for the wretch on whom sentence of eternal perdition is pronounced, or the compassion felt for the damned, who are “creatures capable of suffering,” gave birth to that stupendous gift, which we are constantly taught by inspired writers to regard as a demonstration of God’s ineffable love to his church.

These are new views for men pro-
On the Atonement.

They may be found in the of the of Arminians; but it is only sert date, that they have been of the pages of the ad- of the doctrines of particu- election and limited salvation. us see whether they will bear est of examination.

Israel was a type of God’s chosen le; and if this representation orrect, then the descendants of ham, considered as an elect peo- were not distinguished from r nations by any peculiar affect of the Most High toward them.

i, however, were not the views heir inspired lawgiver, who cele- es the special love of God to yuan his elect people: “The Lord God hath thee to be a tial people unto himself, above he people that are upon the face he earth. The Lord did not set love upon you, nor choose you, cause ye were in number any people; for ye were the rest of all people; but because Lord loved you.” Deut. vii. 6—8. hold, the heaven, and the heaven eavens, is the Lord’s, thy God; earth also, with all that therein Only the Lord had a delight in fthers to love them, and he chose : seed after them, even you e all people, as it is this day.” 1 x. 14, 15. By these texts we plainly taught that the children ofrael were the objects of Jehos special love; that this love not founded on any good qualitcs which they possessed, but inated in his sovereign pleasure; that the love which God bare to he did not bear to nations whom ad not chosen. Equally adverse e representation of this writer, he testimony of Paul; who ex-stand, not of works, but of him that calleth; it was said, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.” Whatever explanation may be given of the election which the apostle here speaks of, it cannot be denied that he exhibits Jacob as an elect person, and Esau as a non-elect person; that he represents Jacob as distinguished by a love which was not extended to Esau; and that this love was not grounded on the superi- r worth of the younger brother, but issued from the sovereign pur- pose of an infinitely wise God— Here we have an exact type of the love which the Almighty bears to his spiritual church. She was, in the exercise of his sovereign pleasure, chosen out of the common mass of guilt and pollution. She was distin- guished from the rest of mankind by a special love, not on account of the good qualifications, or personal righ- teousness of her members, but be- cause the Lord had a delight to love her; and from this love flowed the astonishing gift of the Son of God to be our Redeemer. In accordance with this representation, the apostle speaks of the love of Christ to his church: “Husbands love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.” The love which a man bears to his wife is unquestionably pecu- liar; such a love as he may not indulge to any other woman. Still more peculiar is that love which the Saviour entertains for his church; a love which he does not bear to others. Now, to this special wonderful love, the apostle traces up the gift which Christ made of himself, and all the blessings of pardon, justification, sanctification, and glorification, which were purchased by his precious blood.

In proof that the death or atonement of Christ, took its rise from the general benevolence of God, that common love in which the reprobate share equally with the elect, an appeal is made to the declaration of our Lord to Nicodemus: “God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.” John, iii. 16. For a moment let us grant—that the term world, in this text, means all mankind, and mark the consequences. What is the proof of God’s love to the world? The gift of his only begotten Son. For what purpose was he given? “That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.” It was his fixed and unalterable purpose, that all believers should be saved. Now, if in this verse the term world means all mankind, it must, in the next verse, be equally extensive in its signification; and then it will follow, that it was the first and unalterable purpose of God in sending his Son into the world, that all mankind should be saved; for the form of the expressions, you will observe, in the two verses, especially in the original, denoting the divine intention, is the same; “that the world might be saved.” Here is universal salvation! But from such a conclusion our brethren turn away, because they know it to be unscriptural. The conclusion, however, must follow, unless we qualify the expressions in the last verse, and show that the term world cannot there mean all mankind, but only such of them as shall believe. In the context, then, we find a reason for limiting a word, which very rarely in scripture signifies all and every man. This term was wisely selected by our Saviour, in preference to the term elect. 1. Because the elect, until called and converted, form a part of the world that lies in wickedness. 2. Because the Redeemer intended to correct the prejudices of Nicodemus, and enlarge his views of the benefits to be derived from the coming of the Messiah. With the rest of his countrymen, he supposed they were to be confined to his own nation. But our Saviour teaches him that they were to be far more extensive in their distribution, by informing him that the love of God, which sent his Son to save sinners, embraced the Gentiles as well as the Jews. It was confined not to one nation, but extended to all nations. It was a love which he bore to the world at large, because every where the objects of it were to be found, mingled with every tongue, and people, and nation. John has himself explained the import of the text, in chap. xi. 51, 52. “And this spake he, not of himself: but being high-priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation; and not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.” If God love all mankind alike, and Jesus died alike for all, why does he not intercede for the salvation of all mankind? That he does not intercede for the salvation of all, he himself has assured us: “I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me.” Now, can it be doubted that he loves those of our fallen race for whom he intercedes, more than those for whom he does not intercede? Indeed, the special love of God to his elect, will clearly follow from an admission of our brethren, to which I have more than once adverted. “Christ, say they, did not die with an intention of saving any but the elect. The Father did not deliver up his son to death with an intention of saving any other of the human family.” The most, then, that can be said, in conformity with their views, is, that Christ designed by his death to make it consistent to offer salvation to the non-elect, and place them under a dispensation of mercy. Here, then, is a vast difference made between two classes of our fallen
For the one Christ dies with tention to save them; for the
he dies with no such inten-
The one, Jehovah chooses to ion in Christ; the other, he not thus choose. To the one, only offers salvation in the ning of the gospel, but, by faith in their hearts, and iting them to the Lord Jehrist, he actually puts them
ession of its rich and invablessings. To the other, the fer of salvation is sincerely
and they are inexcusable in ing it; but God does not im-to them the saving grace of ly Spirit.

d is it reasonable to conclude,
Jehovah feels for those two
s of men, whom he treats so tently, the same kind and the degree of love?

as it not easily seen, from the ear endearments which Jacob ed to his son Joseph, that he him more than his brethren?
is it not manifest that Jehoves those on whom he bestows lar and distinguishing bless-more than he loves those of 19 he does not bestow them?
the Jews saw Jesus weeping omb of Lazarus, they justly
, "Behold how he loved!
They judged of the strength
love from its effects: and less we are authorized to judge
love of God, by the same cri-
. When the God of Israel forth his peculiar love to his nt people, he enumerates of the distinguishing bless-estowed on them: and if the ment of superior external ings was a proof of distinc-
ing regard for the people thus red, then surely the enjoy-
of superior spiritual blessings,
be a proof of distinguishing ward that portion of our race
Jehovah delights thus to fa-
"Behold," exclaims the aposview of these distinguishing blessings, "behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God!" And again: "Herein is love, not that we loved God,
but that God loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."

To this special, this distinguishing love, we attribute the gift of Jesus Christ; and not, as our brethren, to that common love, that general compassion, which, as they say, will be felt even for the dam-
ed, when the sentence of everlasting perdition shall be pronounced on them. "This general compassion differs widely from that astonishing love which inspired writers celebrate in such lofty notes of praise;
that wonderful love which constitutes the theme of that everlasting song which will be sung by saints and angels in heaven, through endless ages. With inspired writers, and in unison with the sentiments of saints around the throne
in glory, we magnify this love, and set it above all displays of general benevolence, that were ever made in creation or in providence.

It has dimensions; a breadth and length, and depth and height, which no created intellect will ever be able fully to comprehend. "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests
unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever." Amen.

Yours, sincerely.

From the Congregational Magazine.

THE SONG OF THE ANGELS.

While winter's stars were beaming
O'er Bethlehem radiantly;
Angelic forms came streaming,
Adown the glorious sky.
And every star seem'd hiding
Its less effulgent ray;
While those blest forms were gliding,
Along their brilliant way.
Like meteors through the night,
Like cressets o'er the sea;
Thus passed those sons of light,
In song and jubilee.

"We sing the song of mirth,"
'Twas thus their voices ran;
"Heaven mingling with the earth,
God reconciled to man."

They ceased their heavenly song,
They passed to heaven again;
But earth those notes prolong,
Prolong their gladsome strain.

From the Evangelical Magazine.

THE BABE OF BETHLEHEM.

Bright was the scene on Bethel's ground,
When seraph's sang Emanuel's name;

The wond'ring shepherds caught the sound,
And hailed the Babe of Bethlehem.

Prophetic vision long had view'd
This branch arisen from Jesse's stem;
The great, the Everlasting God—
The blessed Babe of Bethlehem.

Lo, in the sky a star appear'd,
An eastern star unknown to them;
With brightest hope their spirits cheer'd,
And led the way to Bethlehem.

How did their anxious fears subsaide
As nearer to the place they came;
Directed by their heavenly guide,
Where dwelt the Babe of Bethlehem!

So, when the soul, by grief opprest,
Shines bright through faith's expiring flame,
It sweetly sinks upon the breast
Of Christ, the Babe of Bethlehem.

Miscellaneous.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A PLEA FOR THE WEST.

Mr. Editor,—The Christian Advocate for last April, among other articles, contained a brief review of a sermon, entitled "Lack of vision in the ruin of the people." It was observed, in this review, that it was a great, but common error, to think that moderate endowments will answer for clergymen on the frontiers, and that distinguished eloquence and learning should be reserved for the sea-board and city population.

Permit me, sir, to say, that this testimony to the truth, is highly important; and that it merits the peculiar consideration of all who at present are candidates for the holy ministry in the United States. With others, I once supposed, that mediocrity in every ministerial qualification was sufficient for the frontiers; but I have since learned, both from reflection and experience, that my error was not only common but great.

Desirous of subserving the cause of truth, by increasing the number of its witnesses; and of pleading, in some degree, the cause of our trans-montane churches, I beg leave, through the medium of the Christian Advocate, to offer a few remarks relative to the present subject. In this letter it is not my intention to name the peculiar qualities a minister ought to possess, in order to be eminently serviceable in the Western country; but merely to affirm that he ought to be a man of superior talents, intelligence, and piety. With your permission, sir, I shall be more particular, in one or two subsequent communications.

By men of superior talents and information, we meant persons of solid rather than brilliant parts; better fitted to teach important truths than to gratify a fastidious taste; persons skilful in planning; firm, yet prudent, in executing; wise enough to pursue, when proper, the beaten way; when improper, to open new roads for themselves. And this kind of ministers is needed here, chiefly for a reason assigned in the review already mentioned; namely, that society with us remains to be formed.

In relation to society, it is obviously true, that to make a right commencement is difficult, yet important;
a wrong one easy, yet deplorable. The first impulses, whether given in a right or wrong direction, propel it almost unalterably, and with continually accelerated velocity—At least, a very strong force is necessary to change the original tendency. Often, too, the attempt to re-model society is fruitless; sometimes it is dangerous.

With us (for I am a dweller in the West) the difficult and hazardous experiment is yet to be tried. In most quarters society admits of and demands alteration; and in very many places there is merely a chaotic assemblage of people, exceedingly various—Sometimes altogether dissimilar, in their habits, prejudices, education, politics and religion. To ascertain the nature of these discordant ingredients; to temper and mix them rightly; to give shape and comely proportion to the whole; and to impress upon it the best laws of motion, calls for no ordinary capacity in the framers of society.

Men of intelligence always aid in forming the character of a people; but they who occupy publick stations exert a peculiar and powerful influence, in this business. Knowledge is power; and no where is its force more displayed than in its effects upon the minds, and habits, and morals, of a forming community.—Happy indeed, if this formation takes place under the influence of men of wisdom, prudence, benevolence, and piety. The ministers of the Christian religion are publick men. They are usually esteemed men of learning, and for the most part are regarded as disinterested, benevolent, and serious. What then might we not expect, if these men were always in reality precisely such as they ought to be, and are commonly thought to be?

In societies already organized, in which nothing more is needed than to manage the machinery already prepared and in motion, diligence and faithfulness are sufficient; but in an unorganized society, something further than common abilities and the bare reputation of learning, is requisite, to produce salutary and permanent results. Here in the West, as in other places, false appearances in point of endowment, are soon detected; and a diminution of influence, and a secret mangled with contempt, are the just and certain consequences. A man to be extensively useful here, must be able to accomplish more than to win the affections of the pious: he must interest the attention of all; he must instruct ignorance; combat prejudice; answer the inquisitive; attack error, and defend truth. He must, at times, stand unsupported. Nay, there will be occasions in which he must oppose his friends; and it is important that he should do it so as not to alienate them—so as to insure victory, and yet so mildly and disinterestedly, as to obviate prejudice and secure confidence.

It is a very mistaken opinion with some in the Eastern states, that ignorance here, in the whole mass of population, is uncommonly prevalent. Hence not a few, unable to rise at home above mediocrity, come hither, in high expectation of being esteemed beyond their value. That such sometimes meet with employment, is at present a matter of necessity; for we need, in all departments, labourers of some kind; and unable fully to obtain the best, we are too often compelled to put up with the worst. But the people here are not generally mistaken, in the character of these pretenders. We use them as we do depreciated bank notes; we let them have currency, yet always with a regard to their relative value.

Why should ignorance be more profound and extensive beyond the Alleghany, than nearer to the Atlantic? Does a removal from one part of the world to another, necessarily deprive a man of the advantages of previous education—of his intelligence, or his talents? Certainly not, unless we affect to believe that a western atmosphere converts us all.
into Bœotians. Now, in many parts of our country, the mass of inhabitants consists of emigrants from every state in the union, and from several kingdoms in Europe—led here, some from a love of adventure, others by a spirit of curiosity and restlessness, and others again from a desire of speculation, or to remedy their misfortunes. These persons have all seen much of the world; and many of them have "mingled with good society," in all the extent of the meaning of that phrase:—are such men likely to be remarkable for ignorance? Besides, in places here where societies have been for some time established, let it be recollected that we have schools, and academies, and colleges, and libraries, and sermons, and Bibles. That we have, upon the whole, less of cultivated taste, less of refinement and elegance, less of philosophy, science and literature, is readily granted; but that we are at all inferior in general information, or more incapable of discerning and relishing excellence, or of profiting by able instruction, we are by no means prepared to admit. Perhaps in regions along the sea-board, destitute of the habitual ministrations of the gospel, and separated from the frequent intercourse of the towns, there may be found as numerous instances of gross ignorance and blind prejudice, as in the regions along the Ohio and the Wabash.

But let our comparative inferiority be admitted—let it be admitted that we are less enlightened than our Eastern brethren, and, consequently, that we are more disposed to listen to the pretensions of political, medical, literary, and religious quackery: ought an argument to be drawn from such a fact, in favour of sending either teachers considered as altogether incompetent at home? Because our disease is the most obstinate, shall we receive physicians the least skilful? Are our thicker mists to be dispelled by rays of light, or by shades of darkness? It should be remembered that the wilful errors, or absurd mistakes of an ignorant man, where intelligence abounds, are more easily detected and exposed, than where the people whom he professes to lead are no better informed than their guide: and will our brethren send mischief-makers, where they can do the greatest and most lasting injury? But I recall my admission; and I charitably warn every ignoramus from the East, that here exist light and knowledge amply sufficient to exhibit him in his proper colours; and that he would better by far seek obscurity at home, and save his time, his money, and his chagrin, by forbearing a removal to the West.

By no means, sir, are these remarks intended to deter any one from seeking to do good in the western country, according to the measure of his abilities: but they are intended to correct a prevalent mistake; the mistake of supposing that weak men can do more here, than in similar situations in the Atlantick states. It is evident that they can accomplish less here, than where they are.

Whilst, then, we sincerely invite hither ministers of all ordinary degrees of genius, information, and piety, still more earnestly do we implore young men of the soundest minds and best ministerial qualifications, "resolutely to turn their backs on the whole population of the old settlements of our country, and come and devote their lives and their labours to the inhabitants of the new states."

B. R. H.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

SPIRITUAL MNEMONICS.

By the word Mnemonics, we understand the doctrines and rules which relate to the Memory—furnishing regulations for the improvement of this faculty, and thus enabling us to remember with tenacity, and recollect with promptitude. But so vast is the sphere of memory, that any science or any system of practical truths respecting it, admits of a classification which would embrace in its details, all the distinct branches which we number among the objects of this faculty. But waving the consideration of all others, let us attend to that division which, from the ideas that are comprised in it, may be termed spiritual.

As this paper is intended for believers in Christ, many explanations are omitted, which under other circumstances might be expected. "The mind of the Spirit," is connected with "life," and is no strange thing to the children of God. Among the means of preserving and promoting the habit of soul which has been denominated spiritual, we find that few are more effectual than the frequent and lively turning of the thoughts to spiritual things; for instance, to appropriate facts, doctrines, commands, promises, and illustrations of the scriptures. By adverting to such topics, the wandering affections are often recalled, temptations are avoided or resisted, faith is enlivened, and a spirit of prayer and praise, preserved and quickened. It is, then, important that all means be used to facilitate this presentation of spiritual things to the believing soul; and one class of these means is that, which although familiar in various degrees to every Christian man—we have alluded to in the technical phrase prefixed to this essay; which any one is at liberty to dismiss, who deems the distinction superfluous, or who can suggest a better.

The method of promoting spirituality of mind which we would present to the reader by these words, is expressed by a plain direction, familiar in practice to every experienced believer. Make use of the external objects which are perceived by the senses, as memorials of some corresponding spiritual idea.—

* To de φρονήμα του πνεύματος, ζωή και σιγή.
those persons who have advanced most in the "life of God," have been led by a way, with which the rule above given is coincident. Let me name some of the great and the good men,—the profound theologians and faithful Christians—who adorned the various bodies of the Non-conformists in England, and the Kirk of Scotland, in the seventeenth century. Turn over the pages of Baxter, of Flavel, of Brooke, of Charnock, of Bates, of Rutherford, of Leighton, (for Leighton was once a Presbyterian) and you will find that they illustrate almost every important truth, by a striking resemblance from the external world. Whence was this, unless they had previously acquired the habit of comparing the expanded pages of the Book of Nature, with its great counterpart, the Sacred Scriptures. They "looked through nature up to nature's God." But this was no peculiarity of the Puritans, except as it is the peculiarity of all men eminent for spirituality of mind: and whoever would wish to acquire a habit of thought, at once so delightful and so profitable, will find it useful to examine the works of such authors as have possessed it in a high degree.*

But it ought to be remembered, that there is in some minds, a tendency to the abuse of the principle of association. There are those who have sought too much from natural objects,—sought in nature, what they should have sought more immediately from God. Such men have taken illustration for argument; have deduced important doctrines from dark and doubtful indications of natural phenomena; and have found types, symbols and allegories, where they should have recognised only the traces of the Divine perfections. The writers of the Roman church, went in many cases to this excess; and yet, some of "them might be consulted with advantage. The like abuse of a plain principle, may be observed among the mysticks and enthusiasts of our own and other times. The insane rhapsodies of Swedenborg, the Fathers of the Alexandrian school, with Origen at their head, and the Jews of almost every age, since they were rejected of God, furnish striking examples of the extreme, against which we should guard.

In applying the principle of association, we shall find some method useful; and a natural method is to be preferred, to one entirely arbitrary. To explain what is meant by a natural method, let the following example be stated. I pursue a natural method, when I follow the succession of the seasons, and connect with summer and winter, seed time and harvest, appropriate reflections.—In how edifying a manner has Newton exemplified this in his invaluable Hymns? The natural method is also observed, when I associate with the rising of the Sun, the meridian heat, the evening twilight, and the hour of solemn and midnight darkness, such topics for prayer, meditation and self-examination, as comport with these seasons. In like manner, the believer may profitably call to mind the words of the Scriptures, amidst his daily work, when any external object is perceived, which seems to have a connexion with passages of the Scripture specially important.

By thus using the transient and unimportant sights and sounds, and impressions of our daily walks, as marks to recall our minds towards heavenly things; the most trivial objects may originate devout and holy trains of thought. The rising of the sun, and the first ideas of the morning splendours, are, to every reflecting man, occasions of pleasing meditation. But more common, and less striking occurrences, may also have their use. The clothing

---

* Hervey's Meditations exemplify, more strikingly perhaps than any other book in the English language, the associations contemplated in this paper.—Ecrit.
of our bodies, may remind us of the "whole armour of God," and lead our morning ejaculations in aspirations after it. And when we lie down at night, we may, as Chrysostom is reported to have done, present to our view, the solemnities of death and judgment.

To amplify, as anyone might amplify, these familiar truths, would be only to detail the journal of a spiritual man. It is the humble aim of the present writer, to put into the hands of the plain reader, a Key, to what he considers a rich Treasury—not a repository of novelties, but the store-house, to which our fathers resorted, and which some among us, seem disposed to undervalue. If any man will improve upon these hints, and practise that which is here imperfectly pointed out, he will find among many good fruits, the following:

1. By thus exercising the memory about spiritual things, many vain, and many wicked thoughts, will be excluded.

2. The imagination, instead of rioting among unholy pleasures, and building castles in the air, will be engaged about heavenly realities.

3. The listlessness, and melancholy, and mental sloth, of many an hour, will be prevented.

4. The precious word of God, in doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness, will be frequently and seasonably applied.

And, finally, the soul will find, in afflictions, a new solace; and in prosperity, new matter of wonder, love and praise.

Δικαιος.

FOR THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

CHRISTIAN ADVICE FROM A MOTHER TO A DAUGHTER.

Mr. Editor,—The following letter, written about forty years ago, by an affectionate mother, and put into the hands of her daughter, for her direction while absent from the parental roof, may serve to show a mother's concern, in former times, for the spiritual, as well as the temporal welfare of her child—And it may be added, that the sentiments of the letter made a deep impression on the mind of her to whom it was addressed, which have ever since been cherished with an increasing sense of their importance.

My dear Child,—You are now about to take a voyage for your health, just turned of fifteen, young and unacquainted with the world. And as your inexperienced mind may not so readily suspect, or so cautiously avoid, a snare, as one of maturer age, I shall, having committed you to Divine protection, give you a word of advice.

And first; set it down as a solemn truth, that there is nothing to be depended on, beneath the unchanging Jehovah. This should teach you to lay your account to meet, and calmly to bear, the cross; ever considering that the invisible hand of Providence presides in what men are apt to call chance.

If you are afflicted, bear the rod with all the patience and fortitude of which you are mistress: for the common fate of frequent complaining, is contempt, more than pity, from those around us. But let all your complaints be poured into the bosom of that Almighty Friend, who truly pities all his afflicted humble followers.

Choose well the words which you speak on earth; and guard well your thoughts, for thoughts are heard in heaven. Let your ears be shut, resolutely shut, against the malevolent whispers of the slanderer; and imbibe not the contagious breath of the tatterer.

Let your conduct be regular; your mirth refined. Be not vainly sportive, nor stupidly melancholy. Nobly rise above noisy laughter;
and endeavour always to possess a sweet serenity of soul. Let not your fancy riot at the expense of reason; nor your eyes be allured
by the gaiety of dress, or the brilliancy of beauty. For however the outward charms of blooming youth
may attract the eye of the beholder, remember it is the intrinsick beauty of the mind, that is truly engaging; especially if it be adorned with integrity of heart and pu-riority of sentiment, joined with a cultivated understanding.

And as you, my dear child, have
the high honour conferred on you,
of being considered a hopeful heir
of glory, O, what a sanctity of disposition, and uprightness of conversation, should you maintain! How ought you to have a godly jealousy over yourself; and consider yourself as entirely dedicated to the Lord—as a living temple, for the living God! And may you ever be suitably awed, and reverentially pleased, with the thought of being continually surrounded by the omniscient, omnipresent, and omnipotent Jehovah. May this thought have an abiding place in your mind:
and may its influence be to direct your course, and to regulate your conduct—wisely teaching you to make it your study to maintain puriety of sentiment, and modesty of behaviour; ever remembering that virtue and piety give to pleasure an eternal reign in heaven.

Virtue will rise, when vice shall fall,
Religion reigns, when sin shall cease,
And those who yield to wisdom's call,
Shall reap the fruits of conscious peace.

O may celestial spirits keep
The trust committed to their care;
And waft you safely o'er the deep—
This is your Mother's ardent prayer.

M. L.

THE REV. MR. STEWART'S PRIVATE JOURNAL.

(Continued from page 506.)

May 31st. The last shades of a gloomy month have gathered around me—Gloomy, I say; for the almost total interruption of the appropriate duties of my station, confinement
to a sick chamber, the frequent,
and I fear too well grounded apprehension of one of the heaviest of calamities, have made it to me truly so.
Mr. Davis has been most kind and constant in his attentions, as has
Dr. Blatchley also, since his return from Hawaii; and, for a time, we hoped that Harriet's health was rapidly improving; but within the last few days an unfavourable change has taken place, and it is now doubtful whether she will ever be able to try the effect of the change of air, &c. contemplated by the proposed voyage. Should this be the case, it is impossible to say what may be the character of my next communication for America; it may be that which will fill many an heart with sorrow, and many an eye with tears.

For religious intelligence I must refer you to the Herald, for which publick communications will probably be sent by the Sea Star of Baltimore, which carries this packet.

A council of chiefs, all the most important of whom, (with one or two exceptions) are here at present,
will take place soon, and the peaceful and popular succession of the young king be publickly confirmed, and proclaimed throughout the island. It is expected that lord Byron will take this occasion to offer his advice to the government,
on a few points of civil polity, &c.
which need a better regulation; and as a respetable visitor, and not an authorized officer of his government, suggest a series of measures, which will best promote the interest of the nation.

The very favourable impression
of the character of this gentleman, received at a first interview, has been greatly strengthened and deepened by after intercourse. To the apparent quickness, vigour, and cultivation of intellect, which you would naturally expect to see in a Byron, he adds a kindness of heart and benevolence of disposition, that would secure your respect and affection, with any name. Few men of his rank, and indeed of any rank, would have completed the objects of his mission to the islands, in so condescending and unexceptionable a manner; and the influence he is exerting, is calculated to open more fully than ever to this people, a way for the introduction to all the imitable benefits and blessings of civilization and Christianity.

It is with no inconsiderable pleasure that I anticipate, from the excursion to Hawaii, a prolonged intercourse with himself, and some of his immediate friends with whom I have become more particularly acquainted.

Should we, in the providence of God, be permitted to go; before our return I may have it my power to introduce to you another Hoffman. I shall never forget, nor cease to love, that noble and warm-hearted Livonian.

Nothing I have yet known on missionary ground, causes me so deeply to feel the sacrifice of my situation, as the occasional society of such men. The lowness of our habitation, the plainness and poverty of our table, the known and unknown inconveniences and privations of our whole establishment, ever rouse the recollections of the mind and heart, excited by the intercourse of a week, a day, an hour, with the polished, the intelligent, the amiable, the virtuous—those who have heads to think, hearts to feel, characters to respect, and conversation and manners to win. When I meet and when I part with such, at this extremity of the globe, I feel and know that I am cut off from the choicest sweets of life.

But the midnight hour is past—With a warm benediction on you and yours, my beloved sister, and an humble prayer, for “blessings undisguised” on me and mine, I bid you farewell for the present.

CHARLES SAMUEL STEWART.

P.S. June 5th. Since writing the above, two or three incidents, of interest and importance to the mission, have occurred in the nation; the particulars will be transmitted in my next. Mr. Ely has been ordained; ten persons, all but one, of the first rank and power in the nation, have been examined and propounded for admission to the church, and a national council has been held, in which the chiefs have all, most unanimously and cheerfully, acknowledged the sovereignty of the young king, and pledged their allegiance to him. For some days, Harriet has been improving in health, our baggage is already on board the Blonde, and we expect to embark ourselves in the morning, and sail immediately for the Hido.

C. S. S.

On board H.B.M. Ship the Blonde Frigate,
June 5th, 1825.

My dear Sister,—The packet which I closed on Monday, for the letter bag of the Adonis, will have informed you of our expected voyage to Hawaii, and will prevent any surprise at receiving a continuation of my journal, dated on board this vessel. We embarked yesterday. At 11 o’clock, a messenger from lord Byron came to inform us he was in readiness, on the point, to take us on board in his boat. Harriet was carried down in an armchair, and his lordship’s gig being in waiting, we were immediately rowed off to the vessel, a distance of two miles, in the open roads, and were in a short time placed safely on her deck, with less fatigue to H. than we expected; the possibility of her not living to return to Oahu, made the separation from her children a severe trial. We left them, however, under highly favourable circumstances, for the country in which we dwell; with the persuasion, that they will receive every kind and affectionate attentions from our faithful friend Betsy, and from the ladies of the station.
Mr. and Mrs. Bishop accompanies us to the beach, and Mr. Bingham to the ship. Mr. Charlton also came off, and we were sorry to hear from him, that we had missed the pleasure of seeing Mrs. Charlton and Mrs. Taylor, by our hasty departure from the point.—They were in their boat near us when we shoved off, but we did not see them. We regretted this the more, as they expect to sail for the Society islands in a few days, not to return for some months.

The anchor was not taken till 4 o’clock, until which time Harriet remained on a sofa in lord Byron’s cabin: but beginning to be slightly affected by the motion of the ship, after she was under sail, before we sat down to dinner she was removed to her own cabin, adjoining the dining room. She has not been much sea-sick, though the wind has blown almost a gale to-day, with a heavy rolling sea. The Captain, and all the gentlemen of the ship, are exceedingly polite and attentive, and our whole situation is made by them as pleasant as possible. We shall feel ourselves under very lasting obligations to lord B., the development of whose character increases our respect, gratitude, and love. He is at all times affable and communicative; but while at the tea-table this morning, where we were joined by the chaplain Mr. Andrew Bloxam, his brother, and Mr. Dampiere, the artist, he exhibited powers of conversation possessed by few, and of a versatility which must make him a charming companion, to his intimate friends and family circle. He is a great favourite with the chiefs; and in order most fully to secure every attention and service to himself and ship, Kaahumanu and her sister Hospiri, Wahike, another of the queens dowager of Tumahemaha the Great, accompany him in his visit to Hawaii. Mr. Young, an Englishman, long resident on the islands, who, in right of his wife, ranks as an important chief, and has always been a weighty counsellor in the nation, is also on board. I think I mentioned at a former date, that Mr. Goodrich, of the mission, who has paid a short visit at Oahu, would improve this opportunity of returning to his station at Waiakea. You thus have the company on board, beside the officers, &c. of the ship.

Long confinement and anxiety render it necessary that the period occupied by this trip, should be given by me, as far as practicable, to a relaxation of body and mind; for which the circumstances and society into which we are thrown afford a happy facility: I shall feel at liberty to introduce into my casual notices of what is passing, matter less important perhaps, than in another case I might think myself at leisure to communicate.

A regard for Harriet’s loneliness, (not having been well enough to leave her cabin to-day) has compelled me to leave the gentlemen earlier than I otherwise would have done; and, finding her quietly asleep, I thus speedily resume my pen to you.

The Blonde is a 46 gun ship, of fine model and perfectly new, this being her first voyage. Lord B’s accommodations are, of course, on the main deck, and consist of an after cabin, fitted up as a reading and sitting room, in which tea is also served—a forward or large cabin, used as a breakfast and dining room—and a sleeping and dressing cabin. The whole are substantially and handsomely finished and furnished, particularly the after cabin. In this, in addition to the necessary articles of furniture, &c. there is a beautifully engraved likeness of his majesty, George 4th, from a full length portrait, by Sir Thomas Lawrence; a half length portrait of the present lady Byron; and one of the same size of Moore, the poet, who is an intimate friend of the Byron family.
lady B. we have heard an admirable character. The expression of her countenance is uncommonly munificent and amiable; large blue eyes, with long black eyelashes; thick eyebrows and hair; very fair blooming complexion, with full and habit. She is said to be gently pious, and the plainness of her dress and whole appearance, create a mind and heart, little devoted to the vanities of high and fashionable life. Having so much reason to believe we should have been highly pleased with her, we deeply regret her inability to make the voyage. She commenced, but suffered so much at sea, that returned to England from Rio Janeiro, instead of coming into the Pacific, as she first intended.

The library is in the after cabin, is of a character you would expect to meet with in a clergymen's study, than in a post captain's cabin; consisting principally of British classical writers, with standard works on morals and religion. History and Theology, are Byron's favourite study; and he is most fond and devoted attachment to his wife, if no other cause, has led him to cultivate a similar taste.

The ward room, in which all the gentlemen of the ship live, is on the next deck below. Most of the being young men of wealth and rank, they live as handsomely, perhaps, more expensively, the commander himself.

There is a fine band of music on board, which plays on the quarter deck, from 9 to 11 o'clock, every evening, and over the sky light of the dining cabin, from the drawing room, till sunset; alwaysbeginning with 'God save the king,' is majesty's health.

Friday, 10th. Yesterday morning we were close under the west shore of Hawaii, and with a strong wind and smooth sea, continued to coast along it to the east. We could easily distinguish the situation of Keokukana, where the IV.—Ch. Adv.

Cook was killed, and were so near Karua, as distinctly to see the houses and cocoa palms, along the beach. The whole coast during the rest of the day, was an unvaried waste of lava, overhung by heavy clouds, above which were seen the summits of the lofty mounts, Roa and Huara. Harriet had recovered from sea sickness, and spent the day on a mattress on deck, leaving her cabin early enough to see the marines and crew mustered, and go through the exercise at the guns, &c. She was also able to take tea with us, in company with Mr. Davis, and Mr. Bloxam, who dined to-day with lord B. Some one or two of the gentlemen of the ward room, usually dine, or take tea, and pass the evening, with the captain; more usually, some of the scientific class, as they have no duty on deck, to interfere with such invitations, Mr. Davis is a polished and amiable man, and manifests a deep interest in Harriet's situation, and has scarce failed visiting, once or twice, every day, since the Blonde sailed. The chaplain is equally kind and assiduous in his attentions. He is a young man of fine mind, an Oxonian, and highly accomplished; but with genius, has much of its most unpleasant characteristic, eccentricity. He has a good living in the parish of Bingle, Warwickshire, and obtained an appointment in the navy, for the pleasure of the voyage with lord Byron. It is not improbable that he will publish his journal, after reaching England.

Saturday evening, 11th. After being delayed all day yesterday, between Maui and Hawaii, we this morning, succeeded in doubling the north point of the latter island, and have been delighted all day, with the romantic and verdant scenery of the windward side of Hawaii, including the precipices and waterfalls, in the neighbourhood of the beautiful valleys of Wai-Pito, and Wai-Manu. One cascade, of which we had a full view for some time, could not have been less than 600 feet in height, extending almost from the very top of the mountain to the base. The quantity of water was small, or at least appeared so, at the distance at which we viewed it, but sufficiently great to be very beautiful, as it foamed from cliff to cliff, and from precipice to precipice, down the green sides of the mountain. The windward, or eastern parts of all the mountains, are much more picturesque than the leeward, and abound in romantic and beautiful scenes, peculiarly refreshing from their verdure, to an eye long accustomed to the parched and dreary aspect of the opposite sides.

Harriet spent the morning on deck, and the afternoon and evening in the after cabin. She cannot walk a step alone, but with my assistance, is enabled to take a little exercise, though without gaining much apparent strength by it. Lord B. and myself, are usually alone at the breakfast table, and his conversation then is less general, as to subjects, and often more interesting than at any other time. It was particularly so this morning, happening to turn on the character, &c. of his late distinguished predecessor, in the barony of the Byrons. He had often before, spoken of him as a writer, and in reference to his later publications, in terms of unqualified reprehension; but now his remarks regarded him as a man, and a member of his own family. They were of the same age—same education—and on terms of the closest intimacy, till after the poet's marriage. But that event which has so long been the subject of curiosity, conversation and surmise, in the fashionable and literary world—the separation of the new married couple—produced between the cousins, and friends also, an irreconcilable alienation—the captain having taken part with the lady. Previous to this circumstance, the will of the late lord B. was very much to the advantage of the heir apparent; but at their last interview, when the poet was bidding farewell to England forever, he said to the captain, "You have had reason to encourage the expectation of a handsome remembrance in my will—To save you future disappointment, I tell you now, I will never leave you a shilling;" and as lord B. says, "he was true to his word."

He greatly amused me with the character of one of the poet's executors—his lawyer and man of business. He did every thing in his power to embarrass the present lord B. in proving his right to the peerage; and put him to a vast deal of trouble and expense, which otherwise might have been avoided. Captain Byron's father was an officer (admiral I think) in the navy, and married abroad in the West Indies, a Miss Dallas, sister of the late Alexander James Dallas, of Philadelphia. It was necessary to prove this marriage, of which there was no certificate; and having been solemnized more than forty years ago, and the parties being dead, there was considerable difficulty in finding witnesses, who had been present on the occasion. In this, however, he succeeded. Another point was then agitated—the existence of an elder brother—and proof of his death was required. This was an officer of the army, who died, or was killed in the wars of the Peninsula, but under circumstances which rendered legal testimony of the fact, a matter of inconvenience and anxiety. It was however obtained. The patent of nobility was then missing, and was at last traced to this same executor, who refused to deliver it to the present lord; and persisted in the detention of it, till Mrs. Leigh, the sister of the poet, and one of the maids of honour to the late queen Charlotte, interfered and secured it for her cousin.—The whole matter was attended with so much perplexity, and protracted anxiety, as to ince a fit of severe illness, from which he had scarce recovered, he left England.

Lady Byron had also suffered excessively, from a cause somewhat ar—a suit in the court of Exchequer; in which, after long and solicitous, the Chancellor gave decision against her, in the sum I recollect right—of one hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars. The respect and tenderness with which he always speaks of her, is not less to his own praise, no less. She must be a most interesting and valuable woman; herself and children, are so the subjects of his conversation; when Harriet and myself are with him, that we almost feel we are well acquainted with .

Everything shows him to be affectionate and happy husband, and one whose home is scene of his highest felicity. He has been married nearly ten years; but he still keeps near him his scrittoire, on which he wrote all letters of a long courtship; and preserves the whole of lady Pole's—correspondence. Such little facts, when initially made known, speak well for a private character, and leave a favourable impression on my mind. He has drawn a prize in matrimonial lottery, and appropriately to appreciate his good fortune.

often speaks of lady Noel By the name of Byron. The title by which the former Millbank is now distinguished always in terms of respect for affection—I suspect she has a greatly injured woman. I did not detail so much of this here, were it not for the interest attached throughout the world to the name of Byron.

The conversation also embraced Newstead Abbey. The sale of that place, including the old baronial house, was a great mortification to the family. It fortunately fell into hands of a liberal and noble-minded man, and very intimate friend of the present lord, who, instead of modernizing, or in any way altering the establishment, by a substitution of armorial emblems, &c., &c., retains the whole in its original state, as carefully as if he himself were a Byron. The extraordinary genius, popularity, and whole character of its late proprietor, has thrown an interest around it that few purchased mansions can boast; and it will, even hereafter, be an object of curiosity to the scholar and traveller, to no others.

Lord Byron has a small estate in the vicinity of Newstead, and has been kind enough to say, if I ever should visit England, he should be happy to see me in Nottinghamshire, with the promise of accompanying me to the abbey. The conditional if, puts the event, humanly speaking, among the impossibilities of my life; but should such a thing take place, I am sure the gratification I might receive from treading the halls and cloisters of Newstead, would not arise from any feelings of veneration or respect for its former master. I admire the powers and brilliancy of his genius, less than I abhor their later monstrous perversion and prostitution. I do not believe that his writings ever did any one a particle of moral good, unless through the disgust they may have created: but to thousands living, and to thousands yet to live, they will prove a fruitful source of pollution and of sin.

Our nearness to the land and mountains gave us a beautiful sun-setting scene and evening—so much so as to call into exercise the poetic talent of our friend Mr. Bloxam, and secure the following effusion, which I found enclosed in a polite note on my writing-desk, on our return from the after cabin.

"Coasting along the island of Hawaii—Saturday evening, June 11th, 1825.

Eve gentle eve, the mourner's friend art thou,

Calming his lonely heart, his alter & biron:"

547
Bidding again his former pleasures live,
With added charms which thou alone canst give.

Seen through thy misty veil, the years gone
by
Are dearest far to pensive memory.

When thy soft blending hues, along the West,

Calmly reposing in their tranquil rest,

Strew Heaper's cradle with their rosy light,

And shed bright tinges o'er the brow of night;

Then let me hail thee! for thy dewy star

Opens the gates of blessedness afar;

And shining bright, and brighter from above,

Tells of a land where all is peace and love.

Fairst is Eve, where mild Ausonia's sky

Owes her bright hues; — and where the Zephyr's sigh

Breathes the sweet tones of melody or song,

Or bears the fragrance of the groves along.

Lorely is Eve where Britain's western cloud

Throws round the sun her purple glowing shroud,

While even childhood, ere it sinks to rest,

Turns its blue eye enraptured to the West.

But brightest, most sublime, is Evening's reign

Where Hawaii links her seven-fold chain, —

And where the leader of her giant band, —

Flings his broad shadows proudly o'er the land,

And soaring seeks among the snow charged

cloud,

His time-worn forehead's haughty height to shroud. He sees the twilight shed her softening

dyes

On Mauii's mountains that contiguous rise;

While his hoar brow is bright with hues of

day;

And glowing radiant 'neath the sun's last

ray,

With timid hand, may evening scarcely

dare,

O'er his dark breast to draw her mantle

fair.

But who at this soft hour is gaining now,
The heights that frown o'er yonder vale

below,

Who—winding down the craggy pathway

there,

In shadowy distance—seems some form of air!

'Tis he—the Pastor of the numerous flock,

Who waits his coming under yonder rock;

Where (far from mild Religion's soothing

ray)

Pale superstition late held direful sway:

* Seven islands.
† Mouna Kea.

But now—mysterious words—He speaks of Heaven.

Of Mercy—Hope—and Love—of sins forgiven:

He speaks of Him, omnipotent to save,

Who died—who lives triumphant o'er the grave—

E'en now the savage, with uplifted eyes,

Drinks the sweet words, "Christ is our sacrifice."

No more (for past omissions tostone,)

He bows to forms of wood or gods of stone;

But bends the knee, and humbly hopes to trace

Some glorious tidings of redeeming grace:

While gently stealing o'er the twilight

dim,

Falls the soft cadence of the Evening

Hymn.

Now all is peace. Each sound has died away;

The savage seeks his couch—till break

day

Again shall summon him, his vows to pay.

O blest seclusion! Solitude how blest!

Yes—soon on Mounakea's shaggy breast,

(Unless I idly dream) a Fane shall rise

To Him, the great Triune, who rules the earth and skies."

The whole is creditable to the writer, as an impromptu; and the later part is a pleasing and lively picture of our ordinary evening worship

with the natives.

It reminds me of noticing the appearance of the queens during our voyage. Their whole deportment has been very becoming and consistent. They have regular worship,

morning and evening, in their own apartment; and grace at their meals.

They occasionally take a seat at the table, and generally partake of some dish or dishes, regularly sent to them,

when they do not. Still their own food is served to them by their own attendants, four times a day. They have observed the ordinary weekly

prayer-meeting in our cabin, with their usual interest and satisfaction.

Kaahumanu gives as good evidence of piety as could be expected from any one born and nurtured in he-

thenism, and familiarized, for more than fifty years, with all its superstitions and abominations—setting

aside altogether her natural disposition and character, which I assure you are none of the wildest or sweetnd the habits acquired by a

and unlimited sovereignty of than thirty years. You may at the statement, but it ceris a fact, I have suffered more urbation from the hauteur majesty, in the less appre-
nts of her graceless than
r did in my younger years,
a novice in society, from the ntible pride of an old dowa-sequence, by whose pre-
I had the misfortune to be em-sed. To give an instance of price—I have seen half a dadies of the mission approach
say Aroha, &c., after service chapel—one she might receive graciously—perhaps with an af-nate kiss, and many kind looks le she would brush her satins velvet into the faces of the
, without the smallest notice:
ibly, on the very next si-ocasion, the individual thus
y favoured, might not be permit-touch the tip of her little fin-token of recognition. But he lion has become a lamb, and very one with complacency
indness.

(To be continued.)

MEmoir of Mrs. Leah W. Morris.
The subject of this Memoir was born
17th, 1761, near the Wicomico
Somerset county, Maryland.
belonged to one of the ancient ies of Maryland; was the young-
last survivor of ten children;
a sister to the late Hon. Levin-er, formerly governor of the Maryland, and also aunt to William Winder, late of baltimore bar.

ger father is thus noticed by Dr.
r, in his Life of Dr. Rodgers.
out a mile below Capt. Ven-
on the Wicomico, lived Mr.
der, a gentleman of great wealth
urbanity, a polite scholar and a ner of the Episcopal church.
ithstanding his religious com-
, however, he called with civility, at the house of his neighbour, to see the young Presbyterian preacher, and invited him to pay him a visit. Mr. Rodgers accepted the invitation, and went accordingly. He was apprized, by the members of captain Venable’s family,
who accompanied him, that Mr.
Winder was a zealous, high-toned Episcopalian, and, particularly, that he was a very determined and ardent opponent of the doctrine of election. He thanked his informants for this hint, and promised to be on his guard against any unnecessary collision with his respectable host,
on the topicks on which they differed. Mr. Rodgers, however, was scarcely seated in his house, before Mr. Winder himself introduced the controversy respecting election, by asking his opinion of a book on that subject, which was lying open on the table in the parlour, and which had been, probably placed there by design. Our young preacher replied that he had never seen the book referred to; but that he was a very firm believer in the doctrine of election; and could not help regarding it as a very important and precious part of the Christian system. This plunged them at once in the midst of a dispute; which was continued,
with a few intervals, during the rest of the day. Mr. Rodgers plied his opponent with the usual arguments,
drawn from the perfections of God;
from the inseparable connexion of pre-determination, with fore-knowledge; from the consideration, that if all men be not saved, and if salvation
be of God, there must be a choice—
a selection from the whole number of the human family; from express and pointed declarations of Scripture
on this subject; and from the utter impossibility of supposing prophecies to be either understandingly revealed, or certainly fulfilled, without admitting, at the same time, the doctrine of predestination. To all these he added an appeal to the articles of Mr. Winder’s own church, in which the doctrine of election,
precisely as held by Calvinists, is most clearly and strongly laid down.
Mr. Rodgers acknowledged that there were difficulties attending this doctrine, which he did not presume to be able to solve; but warned Mr. Winder of the danger of opposing a doctrine, which the pious and venerable fathers of his own church, with their collected wisdom, had pronounced to be 'full of sweet, pleasant, and unspeakable comfort to godly persons; though exceedingly liable, as they added, 'to be perverted by curious and carnal persons, lacking the spirit of Christ,' and to become, to such persons, a means 'of most dangerous downfall;' and above all, warned him against the rejection of a doctrine which appeared to be so plainly and decisively laid down, in many parts of the scriptures of infallible truth.

"Mr. Winder acknowledged himself silenced, but not convinced. He was evidently, however, less warm and positive toward the close of the visit, than when the dispute commenced; and dismissed his guest in the evening with much respect and friendliness.

"The next Sabbath Mr. Rodgers preached in the neighbourhood. Mr. Winder was one of his hearers: and the faithful and animated discourse, founded on Ephesians, ii. 8. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God," was made the means of reaching his heart.

"The next day, he called on Mr. Rodgers; not to cavil at the doctrine of election; not to speculate on the mysteries of religion, as matters of curious investigation; but as a convinced and humbled sinner, to ask, what he should do to be saved. His heart was now softened; his difficulties were in a great measure removed; he was convinced that if ever he were saved, it must be by grace alone; he was ready to acknowledge himself an instance of the sovereignty of divine grace; and in a short time found sweet peace and consolation, in those truths which a few days before appeared unscriptural and forbidding. Not long afterward, he united himself in communion with the Presbyterian church; was for many years, not only a distinguished, exemplary, and useful member, but also a ruling elder of that church in Somerset county; and often spoke of the evolution which his views and hopes had undergone, and of the circumstances attending it, with deep humility, and fervent thankfulness."

Mrs. Morris often spoke of this revolution of her father's sentiments, with interest and gratitude; as she considered it, under God, intimately connected with her own theological opinions and religious character. Though it happened several years before she was born, yet it gave such a character to her father's religious views, feelings, and conduct, and was the occasion of his placing in her hands, at an early age, such books as produced on her mind, an influence as lasting as life. Being the youngest of her father's family, and having no sisters near her own age, with whom she could associate in the amusements of childhood and early youth; and being, naturally, of an inquisitive, thoughtful, and discriminating mind, she sought from books that employment for her time which most persons, at that early stage of life, seek in childish toys and youthful trifling. And the father, observing the bias of his daughter's mind, and himself a man of reading, doubtless was careful to place in her way such books as he supposed would be best adapted, at once to improve her taste, strengthen her intellect, and instil into her mind those great principles of virtue and religion which, in after life, were so prominent in her character. Piously educated, she became early impressed with a deep sense of divine things, and an industrious student of theology and ecclesiastical history. At what time she became a member of the church, is not known with certainty. It was, however, early in life. On the 24th of February, 1783, she was married to James R. Morris, Esq., of Worcester county, Maryland, with whom
Memoir of Mrs. Leah W. Morris.

...ved happily until the 5th of 1795, when by the decease of... 551

...ing been long a member of the Presby-
...byterian church, and having con-
...ected with it all her earliest and
...ond associations, she viewed with
...orrow, the desolations which, in
... Dover, invaded that portion of God's
... Zion. About the year 1748, a Pres...byterian church was collected in that
... town, by the Rev. John Miller; o
...ver which he was pastor, for forty-
...three years. At his decease, in A.
... D. 1791, the congregation was in a ... flourishing condition, and had almos
... completed a new brick meeting-
... house, which is still standing and in ... repair. But after his decease, the ... congregations of Dover and Duck
... Creek, were entrusted to the charge
... of a man who, renouncing the faith
... once delivered to the saints, became
... a disciple of Dr. Priestley, and ... scattered, instead of edifying the
... flock. So paralyzing was his influ... ence upon the interest of religion,
... that many seriously disposed persons,
... who were formerly attached to the ... Presbyterian church, observing such ... an evident want of piety among the ... Presbyterians of Dover, broke off
... their connexion with them, and
... united themselves with the Metho... dist society. By the deaths and
... removal of the members, the church
... continued to diminish, until it was ... finally extinguished. Some of the ... descendants of the old members who ... were piously disposed, fell off to
... other societies; whilst others, retain-
... ing some of their Presbyterian par-
... tialities, neglected all the means of
... grace, because they possessed none
... of their own; and thus ultimately,
... became almost totally indifferent
... to religion in any form. And the ... consequence was, that though, at dif... ferent times, attempts were made to
... resuscitate that congregation, yet all
... was fruitless. On the one hand, from
... the laxity and irreligion which pro... duced its destruction, strong prej... udices were entertained against the ... whole denomination; and on the ... other, there was almost an entire in... difference to religion, by the great
... proportion of the people that had
... been reared under Presbyterian in-... fluence; so that, between the fires of prejudiced zeal, and the cold regions of religious apathy, a Presbyterian minister could scarcely obtain a hearing. Thus, when Mrs. Morris came to Dover, there was no Presbyterian church whose privileges she could enjoy; and no preaching by ministers of her communion, except, perhaps, once or twice a year, when some missionary passed along. Here she could truly say, "The ways of Zion do mourn because none come to the solemn feasts; all her gates are desolate." She felt for these desolations, and felt almost alone. But if she seldom was visited by the ministers of the gospel; and if she seldom heard it preached by those who proclaimed it in her most approved way, yet she never failed to refresh her soul by their ministra-tions, when opportunities were offered; and she ever made her house the theatre of hospitality, and of intellectual and religious entertainment, to those servants of Christ who did visit her. This state of things continued in Dover, until the spring of 1825; when, principally through her importunity, personal influence, and liberal benefaction, the gospel was once more preached, statedly, in the Presbyterian church of Dover. Presbyterian ministers, when passing, had for a long time preached in the state-house; but on Sunday, the 15th of May, 1825, the Presbyterian church was opened and occupied in public worship. Then, for the first time after Mrs. Morris's residence in Dover, she saw her favourite sanctuary unfold its doors, to welcome the worshippers into its long deserted and long lonely recesses. As she was going from her own dwelling, to attend divine service on that day, and drew so near the church as first to view its opened doors and windows, and the people standing ready to enter and hear the word, she seemed in a high degree to enter into the spirit of the hundred and twenty-second psalm—"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." The sight seemed almost to overcome her, and for a few moments to fill her soul with more than language could express—When she had a little recovered from the influence of her feelings, she exclaimed, "Oh, how does this remind me of other times! This is like what I have been accustomed to see from my youth." During the whole short remainder of her life, she continued to attend church at all times, so far as her infirmities would permit, and rejoiced in the privilege; and she also employed means and influence, in every way within her power, to promote the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. But the scenes of her earthly pilgrimage were soon to close. On the 2d of February, 1826, she was seized by the influenza, an epidemick that then prevailed, producing through the country very alarming desolations; which, from the debiltated state of her constitution by age and previous disease, found her a subject of very easy conquest. It soon produced in her a difficulty of respiration, and an indistinctness of speech, which rendered her condition truly distressing. Her disease continued some time to increase, until her life was despaired of; and all around her expected hourly her death. But by the indefatigable exertions of her physician, the rage of the devourer at last appeared to be assuaged, and her breathing became more easy, and her voice more clear. All, but herself, supposed her now almost out of danger. But from the commencement of her illness, she appeared to anticipate her dissolution; and her anticipations were just. Contrary to the expectations of her physician—when her acquaintances and friends were rejoicing in the hope of her speedy recovery—when she was supposed to be almost convalescent—on the morning of the 18th of February, her spirit, as if wearied with the shackles of earth and the incumbrances of mortality, and panting for the enjoyment of the glorious liberty of the children of Evidences of Christianity," which although not effectual to remove his scepticism, produced a conviction sufficiently powerful to make him "pray daily for Divine assistance," in the use of the Lord's prayer only. "This practice (he says) I continued for three years, my persuasion that Christianity was not one and the same thing with the Roman Catholic religion, growing stronger all the while." At length he became satisfied "of the substantial truth of Christianity." It then only remained for him "to choose the form under which he would profess it." In this he found no great difficulty; because, he remarks, "the points of difference between the church of England and Rome, though important, are comparatively few: they were besides the very points which had produced my general unbeliev". A year and a half after first receiving the communion in the church of England, he "resumed his priestly character" in that church. This was in the year 1814. He then retired to Oxford, and spent a year, chiefly in the study of the scriptures; and after this he acted as tutor to the son of an English nobleman, till he was compelled to resign his charge, in consequence of growing infirmities. The rest of his story shall be given in his own words.

"Neither the duties of the tutorship, nor the continual sufferings which I have endured ever since, could damp my eagerness in the search of religious truth. Shall I be suspected of carn in this declaration? Alas! let the confession which I am going to make, be the unquestionable, though melancholy proof of my sincerity.

4 A
"For more than three years my studies in divinity were to me a source of increasing attachment to Christian faith and practice. When I quit my charge as tutor, I had begun a series of short lectures on religion, the first part of which I delivered to the young members of the family. Having retired to private lodgings in London, it was my intention to prosecute that work for the benefit of young persons; but there was by this time a mental phenomenon ready to appear in me, to which I cannot now look back without a strong sense of my own weakness. My vehement desire of knowledge not allowing me to neglect any opportunity of reading whatever books on divinity came to my hands, I studied the small work on the Atonement, by Taylor of Norwich. The confirmed habits of my mind were too much in accordance with everything that promised to remove mystery from Christianity, and I adopted Taylor's views without in the least suspecting the consequences. It was not long, however, before I found myself beset with great doubts on the divinity of Christ. My state became now exceedingly painful; for, though greatly wanting religious comfort in the state of my body, when I was a prey to pain and extreme weakness, I perceived that religious practices had lost their power of soothing me. But no danger or suffering has, in the course of my life, deterred me from the pursuit of truth. Having now suspected that it might be found in the Unitarian system, I boldly set out upon the search; but there I did not find it. Whatever industry and attention could do, was all performed with candour and earnestness; but in length of time, Christianity, in the light of its own evidence, appeared more serviceable than all that my weakness would produce. I lost all hope of quieting my mind. With doubts unsatisfied whenever I turned, I found myself rapidly sliding into the gulf of Scepticism: but it pleased God to prevent my complete relapse. I knew too well the map of infidelity to be deluded a second time by the hope of finding a resting-place to the sole of my foot, throughout its wide domains: and now I took and kept a determination to give my mind some rest from the studies, which, owing to my peculiar circumstances, had evidently occasioned the moral fever under which I laboured. What was the real state of my faith in this period of darkness, God alone can judge. This only can I state with confidence,—that I prayed daily for light; that I invariably considered myself bound to obey the precepts of the Gospel; and that I was harassed with fresh doubts, and tempted to turn away from Christ, I often repeated from my heart the affecting exclamation of the apostle Peter,—"to whom shall I go? thou hast the words of eternal life.'

"For some time I thought it an act of criminal insincerity to approach, with those doubts, the sacramental table; but the consciousness that it was not in my power to alter my state of mind, and that, if death, as it appeared very probable, should overtake me as I was, I could only throw myself with all my doubts upon the mercy of my Maker; induced me to do the same in the performance of the most solemn act of religion. But I had not often to undergo this awful trial. Objections which, during this struggle, appeared to me unanswerable, began gradually to lose their weight on my mind. The Christian Evidences which, at the period of my change from infidelity, struck me as powerful in detail, now presenting themselves collectively, acquired a strength which no detached difficulties (and all the evident difficulties) could shake. My mind, in fact, found rest in that kind of conviction which belongs peculiarly to moral subjects, and seems to depend on an intuitive perception of the truth through broken clouds of doubt, which it is not in the power of mortal man completely to dispel. Let no one suppose that I allude to either mysterious or enthusiastic feelings; I speak of conviction arising from examination. But any man accustomed to observe the workings of the mind, will agree, that conviction, to in a real and durable form, comes finally in the shape of internal feeling—a perception perfectly distinct from syllogistical conviction, but which exerts the strongest power over our moral nature. Such perception of the truth is, indeed, the spring of our most important actions, the common bond of social life, the ground of retributive justice, the parent of all human laws. Yet, it is inseparable from more or less doubt; for doubtless conviction is only to be found...

* * *

* "These Lectures were published at Oxford, in 1817, with the title of Preparatory Observations on the Study of Religion, by a Clergyman of the Church of England."
objects of sense, or those abstract ones of the mind, pure number and \text{ion}, which employ the ingenuity of the \text{ricians}. That assurance, reasoning things not seen, which the Scrip-textual, is a supernatural gift, \text{volution} can never produce. This ence between the conviction resulting from the examination of the Christian \text{nces}, and \text{Faith}, in the Scriptural word, appears to me of vital tance, and must be attended to
as, having renounced the Gospel,
\text{it disposed to give a candid hearing
\text{advocates}. The power of the Chris-\text{evidence}, is that of leading any \text{late mind, unobstructed by prejudice
\text{to the records of Revelation, and \text{ready to derive instruction from \text{source of supernatural truth; but it
\text{Spirit of truth} alone, that can impart \text{ternal conviction of \text{Faith).
\text{have now gone through the religious \text{y of my mind, in which I request
\text{to notice the result of my various si\text{ns}. Under the influence of that \text{I despotic, which would prevent \text{igation by the fear of eternal ruin, by \text{mocks reason by granting the \text{nation of premises, while it prevents \text{right of drawing conclusions; irresistibly urged into a denial of \text{ation: but no sooner did I obtain \text{an, instead of my mind run
\text{riot in the enjoyment of the long-de-\text{boon, it opened to conviction, and \text{ledged the truth of Christianity.}
\text{emperor of that mind shows, I believe,
\text{general character of the age to which \text{ongs. I have been enabled to make \text{imate of the moral and intellectual \text{Spain, which few who know me
\text{t country, will, I trust, be inclined to \text{d. Upon the strength of this know-\text{I declare again and again that very \text{my own class (I comprehend \text{ly) think otherwise than I did \text{my removal to England. The tes-
\text{y of all who frequent the Continent
\text{imony, which every one's know-
\text{of foreigners supports—represents \text{atholic countries in a similar condi-
\text{Will it, then, be unreasonable to \text{se, that if a \text{fair choice was given be-\text{the religion of Rome and other \text{of Christianity, many would, like \text{f, embrace the Gospel which they \text{rejected? Is there not some pre\text{ion of error against a system which \text{where revolts an improving age
\text{Christianity? Let us examine that \text{a itself."}

near the beginning of his second \text{Mr. W. observes—from the attention which I have of late given to the books which issue out of the English Roman Catholic press, I am \text{vinced that there exist two kinds of \text{writers of your persuasion; one, who \text{write for the Protestant publick, and for \text{such among yourselves as cannot well di\text{gest the real unsophisticated system of \text{their Roman head; the other, for the \text{mass of their British and Irish church,
\text{who still adhere to the Roman Catholic \text{system, such as it is professed in coun-
\text{tries where all other religions are con\text{demned by law. In your devotional books, \text{and in such works as are intended to keep \text{up the warmth of attachment to your \text{religious party, I recognise every fea-
\text{ture of the religion in which I was edu-
\text{cated; in those intended for the publick
\text{at large, I only find a flattered and almost \text{ideal portrait of those, to me well-known \text{features, which, unchanged and unsop-
\text{erected by age, the writers are conscious, \text{cannot be seen without disgust by any of \text{those to whom custom has not made them \text{familiar."

We can ourselves bear testimony
to the justice of the representation made in this paragraph. The \text{Papists do conceal some of their most \text{revolting doctrines, as much as they can, from the eyes of Protestants;
and especially from any individual whom they are seeking to proselyte
from Protestantism to Popery. A \text{lady of our acquaintance, some \text{years since, the daughter of emi-
\text{nently pious parents in a Protestant \text{church, was, within a few hours of the time at which she actually renounced Protestantism for Popery, earnestly entreated by us, to con\text{ider whether she could embrace a \text{system, which consigned to hope-
\text{less perdition, all who understand-
\text{ingly refused the Popish commun-
\text{—and of course, her pious pa-\text{rents among the rest. She professed to shudder at the thought; and insist-\text{ed that the church which she was about to join, held no such opinion.
It was utterly in vain that we of-\text{ffered to show her, from unquestion\text{able Popish authorities, that in this \text{respect she was in error—she would \text{listen to nothing of the kind. In\text{deed it was sufficiently manifested, \text{although not explicitly avowed, that \text{her mind had been prepared to re-conceive with perfect incredulity, every thing that we could offer—notwithstanding that this very individual had been accustomed, till within a short antecedent period, to receive every thing stated by us as fact, with reverential confidence, and to treat our opinions and reasonings with the utmost respect and deference. But now, every thing uttered by us, might as well have been spoken to a deaf mute.

Hence we are led to remark on another Popish artifice. It is that the devotees of this religion labour to make those whom they are endeavouring to proselyte believe, not only that they ought to regard the statements and opinions of Protestants as unworthy of regard, as coming from interested parties, but that the general character of those who oppose the Popish creed is so base and vile, as to render all they say undeserving of any serious consideration. The monstrous and disgusting falsehoods circulated by writers of note, the friends of the Papacy, touching the moral characters of Luther, Calvin, and other Protestant reformers, are known to all who are moderately versed in this subject. Nor does it appear that this artifice is forborne at the present time, and in this country. A letter now before us, from a gentleman in a neighbouring city, as worthy of credit as any man in the United States, gives this information—"A lady of this city, about going over to the Catholicks, had Secker and Porteus put into her hands. When asked what she thought of them—Oh, she said, she was informed that they were infamous bad men, and of course she could think nothing of what they had written." We do not imagine that we need to inform many of our readers, that it would not be easy to select two men of more unspotted character, or more worthy of credit, than Bishops Secker and Porteus. Not only in moral worth and purity, but in intellectual force and extent of erudition, they had few equals. What then are we to think of the information that these were such "infamously bad men," as to render every thing they said unworthy of regard? The letter of Mr. W., now under consideration, furnishes indeed an answer to our interrogatory, that might satisfy the mind of a devoted Papist. Mr. W. says—

"Murder itself is less sinful, in the judgment of the Roman see, than a deliberate separation from her communion and creed. I need not prove this to those who are disposed to recognize the Roman Catholic doctrines in the face of the world; but if any one still doubts the place which heresy holds in the Roman Catholic scale of criminal guilt, let him explain away, if he can, the following passage of the papal bull which is every year published in the Spanish dominions, under the title of The Cruzade. By that bull, every person who pays a small sum towards an imaginary war against infidels, is privileged to be released from all ecclesiastical censures, and receive absolution at the hands of any priest; of all, whatever sins, he may have committed, "even of those censures and sins which are reserved to the apostolick see, the crime of heresy excepted."

Now, as "the crime of heresy" was chargeable on Bishops Secker and Porteus, and is chargeable on every one who speaks or writes against the Roman Catholic Church, it may furnish a plea to those who are disposed to use it, that all who thus speak and write, are "infamously bad men."

Let us not be misunderstood—We would carefully avoid the slander we condemn. In every period since the Protestant reformation, there have been men in the Roman Catholic Church, and some among her clergy, who we do not believe would, on any consideration, have partaken in the detestable false-

"Que puedan elegir Confesor Secular o Regular, de los aprobados por el ordinario, y obtener de el plenaria indulgencia, y remision de qualquiera pecados y censuras, aun de los reservados, y reservadas a la Silla Apostolica, excepto el crimen de heregia." Bula de la Cruzada.
hood which we reprobate. Mr. Butler himself, with whom Mr. White is at issue, brands "the dogma of intolerance with the epithet of detestable." Fenelon, Massillon, Du Pin, Father Paul, and others whom we could easily name, would never, we are confident, have identified Protestantism with immorality. We wish we could say as much of the learned, eloquent, and courtly Bossuet. He, we think, (and we find evidence of the justice of our opinion in the letter before us,) would not have hesitated to represent it as improper, to concede that Protestants could be upright men—unless their Protestantism was chargeable to "invincible ignorance." But the liberal minded Roman Catholicks to whom we have referred, it is well known, were not considered as the best friends of the papacy—They were tolerated by the rigorous Papists, rather than approved—some of them indeed were grievously persecuted; and to this hour the thorough-going adherents to that church do not hesitate, as we have shown, to represent Protestants, however unimpeachable in veracity, as unworthy of belief in plain matters of fact—as men of such infamously bad character, that all they say ought to stand for nothing.

Mr. W.'s second letter, on "the real and practical extent of the authority of the Pope," is chiefly taken up with a controversy on this subject with Mr. Butler, the author of "The Book of the Roman Catholic Church." He convicts Mr. B. of a most palpable misrepresentation, in translating from the Latin, part of a sentence, in which certain deputies from the city of Palermo are stated as having prostrated themselves at the Pope's feet, and addressed him "as if they were saluting Christ the Lamb of God," and of applying to him the words of the mass—"Thou who takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us." Mr. B.'s translation purported, that the deputies from Palermo, after they had prostrated themselves at the Pope's feet, "Saluted Christ the Lamb of God," and addressed him as "taking away the sins of the world."

We have already said that we conscientiously believe that Popery is "the man of sin" of the New Testament; and on reading this address of the deputies of Palermo, stripped of the artful disguise put upon it by Mr. B., we were reminded of Dr. Doddridge's paraphrase, notes and improvement, grounded on 2 Thess. ii. 1—12. We think that what this excellent commentator, whose piety, learning and candour, are admitted by all Protestants, has said in his paraphrase on the 4th verse of the chapter referred to, is so much to the point before us, and so important in reference to the entire subject, that we shall not hesitate to insert it, as well as the note relative to the meaning of the original word σεβασμός, with the improvement of the whole section. The verse in our translation stands thus—

"Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

The translation and paraphrase of Doddridge are as follows—

"I now speak of one who opposes himself to the interest of true religion, by arts and enterprises in former generations unknown, and, as pride often goes before destruction, insolently exalts himself above all that is called God, or the object of religious worship," taking upon him to control Divine institutions, and to model every thing according to his own arrogant pleasure. So that he himself, as God, sets

* "The usurpation of the papacy in Divine things is so unequalled, that if these words are not applicable to it, it is difficult to say, who there ever has been, or can be, to whom they should belong. The manner in which the pope has exalted himself above magistrates is equally remarkable and detestable; but I do not apprehend it so immediately referred to here, as his taking upon him to control every thing in religion. Σεβασμός has exactly the signification here given it. See Acts ν.ν. 25."
himself in the church, which is the temple of God, showing himself with such pompous parade, and such despotic authority assumed over the consciences of men, that so far as actions can speak, he in effect asserts that he is God, nothing human, and indeed nothing created, having a right so to dictate."

The improvement of the whole passage, of which this 4th verse and its paraphrase are a part, will be most impressively perceived, by first reading from the common version the first 12 verses of 2d Thess. ii. It is as follows—

"Let us behold with humble reverence the depths of the Divine counsels and judgments: God hath been pleased to suffer the craft of Satan to display itself, in reducing from his allegiance a great part of the Christian world, yet has he taken the wise in his own craftiness, so far as to make that very apostacy from Christianity an additional proof of its Divine original. Who that had only examined the genius of that holy religion, could have imagined that such a mystery of iniquity should have arisen in it, and that man of sin have been revealed? Surely, when the particulars of the description come to be compared with the accomplishment, it may seem owing to some judicial infatuation, that men of deep policy and great penetration, with this very passage of scripture in their hands, should have suffered the marks of antichrist to be so very apparent, and in many instances, beyond what might have seemed absolutely necessary for establishing that secular kingdom which they sought; particularly, that the pope on high day should set himself on a high throne, in the temple of God, to be there solemnly adored, and should have permitted his parasites so expressly to boast that he is God, and to give him, in some of their licensed and authorized works, Divine titles."

"The scandalous and extravagant pretences which the followers of the papacy have made to miracles, exceeding in number, and some of them in marvellous circumstances, those of Christ and his Apostles, plainly display the energy of Satan, that father of frauds, pious and impious. And the most incredible lies, which they have, by solemn and irrevocable acts, made essential to their faith, show the strength of delusion, beyond what could have been imagined, had not fact led us into the theory. How dreadful is it to think of some of the expressions which the Spirit itself uses, when speaking of these artifices in deceit—that they should be abandoned by God to believe a lie, that they may all be damned who have pleasure in unrighteousness—that they might bring upon themselves eternal aggravated damnation. Who would not tremble, who would not grieve for so many of our fellow men, yea of those, who, degenerate as their form of Christianity is, we must yet call our fellow Christians, who are thus dishonoured, enslaved, and endangered? The Lord grant that they may not be utterly undone! Let them despise us, let them, by most solemn execrations annually repeated, devote us to destruction, and prepare against us all the instruments of it in their power, yet will we still pray for them. The Lord grant that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are led captive by him at his pleasure! (2 Tim. ii. 26.) Let us recommend to Divine compassion the souls drawn after artful and wicked leaders, in the simplicity of their hearts, and take comfort in this thought, that the time will come, when the Lord shall then crown this son of perdition with the breath of his mouth and the brightness of his coming. May the remnant of God's people among them take the alarm, and come out from them in time, and be separate, that they may not be partakers with them in their plagues. (Rev. xviii. 4.)"

We hope to be excused for giving so long an extract from so well known a book as Doddridge's Family Expositor. But although well known to scholars and clergymen, it is found in but few hands in this country: And we wished to exhibit to our readers the sentiments, in regard to the Papacy, of a man eminently distinguished for mildness and charity, as well as for talents and erudition.

Mr. W. concludes his second letter, with exposing the concealment or duplicity of the Head of the Roman Catholic Church, in regard to the binding nature of any oath, which would limit the opposition of the members of that church "to doctrines and practices condemned by Rome."

"The persevering silence of the Papal see in regard to this point, notwithstanding the advantages which an authorized declaration would give to the Roman Catholics of Great Britain and Ireland, is an indubitable proof that the Pope cannot give his sanction to engagements made in favour of a Protestant establishment. Of this, Bossuet himself was aware, when to his guarded opinion upon the scruples of James II. against the coronation oath, he subjoined the salvo:—"I nevertheless submit with all my heart to the supreme decision of his Holiness." If that decision, however, was then, and is now, withheld, notwithstanding the disadvantages to which the silence of the Roman Catholics, it cannot be supposed that it would at all tend to remove them. To such as are intimately acquainted with the Catholic doctrines, which I have just laid before you, the conduct of the Roman see is in no way mysterious.

"It would be much more difficult to explain upon what creditable principle of their church, the Catholic divines of these kingdoms can give their approbation to oaths tendered for the security of the Protestant establishment. The clergy of the church of England, who have been involved in a man of genius, and indiscriminate charge of hypocrisy and simulation, upon religious matters. It would ill become one in my peculiar circumstances to take up the defence of that venerable body; yet I cannot dismiss this subject without most solemnly attesting, that the strongest impressions which enliven and support my Christian faith, are derived from my friendly intercourse with members of that insulted clergy; while, on the contrary, I knew but very few Spanish priests whose talents or acquirements were above contempt, who had not secretly renounced their religion. Whether something similar to the state of the Spanish clergy may not explain the support which the Catholic priesthood of these kingdoms, seem to give to oaths so abhorrent from the belief of their church, as those which must precede the admission of members of that church into parliament; I will not undertake to say. If there be conscientious believers among them, which I will not doubt for a moment, and they are not forced into silence, as I suspect it is done in similar cases, I feel assured that they will earnestly protest against and condemn all engagements on the part of the Roman Catholics, to support and defend the church of England. Such an engagement implies either a renunciation of the tenet excluding Protestants from the benefits of the Gospel promises, or a shocking indifference to the eternal welfare of men.

"If your leaders, whom it would be uncharitable to suspect of the latter feeling, have so far receded from the Roman creed as to allow us the common privileges of Christianity, and can conscientiously swear to protect and encourage the interests of the church of England, let them, in the name of truth, speak openly before the world, and be the first to remove that obstacle to mutual benevolence, and perfect community of political privileges—the doctrine of exclusive salvation in your church. Cancel but that one article from your creed, and all liberal men in Europe will offer you the right hand of fellowship. Your other doctrines concern but yourselves; this endangers the peace and freedom of every man living, and that in proportion to your goodness: it makes your very benevolence a curse. Believe a man who has spent the best years of his life where Catholicism is professed without the check of dissenting opinions; where it luxuriates on the soil, which fire and sword have cleared of whatever might stunt its natural and genuine growth; a growth incessantly watched over by the head of your church, and his authorized representatives, the Inquisitors. Aha! "I have a mother," outweighed all other reasons for a change, in a man of genius; who yet refused not to show his indifference to the religious system under which he was born. I, too, "had a mother," and such a mother as, did I possess the talents of your great poet, tenfold, they would have been honoured in doing homage to the powers of her mind and the goodness of her heart. No woman could love her children more ardent, and none of those children was more vehemently loved than myself.—But the Roman Catholic creed had poisoned in her the purest source of affection. I saw her, during a long period, unable to restrain her tears in my presence. I perceived that she shunned my conversation, especially when my university friends drew me into topics above those of domestick talk. I loved her; and this behaviour cut me to the heart. In my distress I applied to a friend to whom she used to communicate all her sorrows; and, to my utter horror, I learnt that, suspecting me of anti-catholic principles, my mother was distracted by the fear that she might be obliged to accuse me to the Inquisition, if I incautiously uttered some condemned proposition in her presence. To avoid the barbarous necessity of being the instrument of my ruin, she could find no other means but that of shunning my presence. Did this unfortunate mother overrate or mistake the nature of her Roman Catholic duties? By no means. The Inquisition was established by the supreme authority of her church; and, under that authority, she was enjoined to accuse any person whatever, whom she might overhear ut-

* Pope: see his letter to Attarbury on this subject.
ering heretical opinions. No exception was made in favour of fathers, children, husbands, wives: to conceal was to abet their errors, and doom two souls to eternal perdition.—A sentence of excommunication, to be incurred in the fact, was annually published against all persons, who having heard a proposition directly or indirectly contrary to the Catholic faith, omitted to inform the inquisitors upon it. Could any sincere Catholic slight such a command? "Such is the spirit of the ecclesiastical power to which you submit. The monstrous laws of which I speak, do not belong to a remote period: they existed in full force fifteen years ago: they were republished, under the authority of the Pope, at a later period. If some of your writers assume the tone of freedom which belongs to this age and country; if you profess your faith without compulsion; you may thank the Protestant laws which protect you. Is there a spot in the universe such a command? Catholic may throw off his mental allegiance, except where Protestants have contended for that right, and sealed it with their blood? I know that your church modifies her intolerance according to circumstances, and that she tolerates in France, after the revolution, the Huguenots, whom she would have burnt in Spain a few years ago, and whom she would doom to some indefinite punishment, little short of the stake, at this present moment. Such conduct is unworthy of the claims which Rome contends for, and would disgrace the most obscure leader of a paltry sect. If she still claims the right of wielding "the sword of Peter," why does she conceal it under her mantle? If not, why does she not put an end to more than half the miseries and degradation of Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Spanish America, by at once declaring that men are accountable only to God for their religious belief, and that sincere and conscientious persuasion must both in this and the next world, be a valid plea for the pardon of error? Does the Church of Rome really profess this doctrine?—It is then a sacred duty for her to remove at once that scandal of Christianity, that intolerance which the conduct of Popes and councils has invariably upheld. But if, as I am persuaded, Rome still thinks in conformity with her former conduct, and yet the Roman Catholics of these kingdoms dissent from her on this point, they have already begun to use the Protestant right of private judgment upon one of the articles of their faith; and I may hope that they will follow me in the examination of that alleged divine authority by which they are prevented from extending it to all.”

We find that we are running too much into detail, for our very limited space, in the review of this book. But the subject is one of great present interest in the United States; and therefore, although we shall shorten our quotations from the following letters, we shall extract something from the most of them, and take the liberty to add some observations of our own at the close.

(To be continued.)

Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, etc.

The Glaciers of the Alps.—Glaciers have been most inaccurately termed mountains of ice:—They are on the contrary more properly valleys of ice. They are uniformly found in the deep valleys or ravines between the mountains, and in the deep hollow cliffs in the sides of the mountains themselves. They have been obviously formed by the immense avalanches of snow which fall in spring and summer from the precipices and sides of the bordering mountains, into the ravines below. The percolation of the melted water through the snow, which is again frozen in that state, renders it an entire mass of ice. As the enormous heaps which fall are not nearly melted before the close of summer, and the winter’s snow still increases the mass—which the avalanches of the succeeding summer again continue to augment—it is not wonderful that in the course of ages, the enormous valleys of ice, we now behold, many of which are six or seven leagues in length, and of unknown and incalculable depth,—(which however in some places has been ascertained by the fissures to be upwards of three thousand feet,) should have been accumulated. The surface of the glaciers of the Alps from the Tyrol to Mont Blanc, is now computed to exceed twelve hundred square miles.

Potatoes.—When these useful roots are boiled for the purpose of feeding swine, or other animals, they should be put into bags or sacks, leaving room for them to swell; and when sufficiently boiled, the sacks should be taken out and left to or the water becomes so strongly ated by the poisonous properties not, as to be highly detrimental to in general. This will account for appointment of those persons who for pigs with potatoes, mashed with in which they have been boiled. prepared agreeably to the above by, potatoes become a most benefi for pigs; but they are by far less as in the raw state; for the nut qualities not being drawn out by it counteracts the benefit of the sours qualities of the root.

unkfort paper speaks of uniting me with the Rhine, and thus of a water communication between and Havre de Grace, through the France.

rity.—It appears by Worcester's on Longevity, that New Hampshires a larger proportion of cen than Sweden or Russia. Of the three persons in New Hampshire, reched the age of from one hun one hundred and ten, fifty-nine men and thirty-four men; while ive who arrived at one hundred wards, were men. Mr. W. consi e case of Peter Torton or Zoten, gary, the most remarkable instance evinity known in modern times.— in died on the 5th January, 1724, age of 185. A few days before his e walked, with the assistance of a to the post house in Horcock, to so al Invention.—An instrument is to be engraved, invented by the School of Limekilns, will be of very great practical unction, but particularly in it is called the "Nautical gun, or Seaman's Portable Correct or." It is a most ingenious, yet and accurate, instrument, and does honour to the inventor. By one on it shows both the difference of and departure—and with more ness, and in one-tenth of the time, be done by any instrument or publilished. It is so constructed that distance, in difference of latitude porture, is ascertained from one dth part of a mile to one thousand ad infinitum. It has been submitted trial and examination of seve exceed seamen, besides mathemati who are all of opinion that it cannot being highly serviceable, in facili that difficult and important part of ery.—The operation of crushing L. IV.—Ch. Adv.

the stone in the bladder was performed at the Hotel Dieu, in Paris on the 23d of Sept. in the presence of Baron Dupuytren, several physicians, and all the pupils of the Medical School. The operation was completely successful, as it was performed with great facility, and gave so little pain to the patient that he betrayed a disposition to fall asleep.

From the Charleston Courier, Nov. 22.

The following singular case has been communicated to us for publication. The facts, as stated, may be relied upon.

On the 24th Oct. 1826, about 12 o'clock at night, a negro girl belonging to a gentleman of this city, aged about 20 years, of a robust constitution, and apparently in perfect health, in consequence of strong excitement, caused from setting up with a black corpse, in company with a large assemblage of coloured people, who were singing, &c. as is common with these people on such occasions, fell into a lethargy—from which she was not roused, notwithstanding the application of blisters, the shower bath of cold water, &c. until the 31st of the same month, when she awoke, but could not separate her lower jaw from the upper one, until she was electrified, which was done on the 21 inst. when she ate food for the first time since being in that situation; but her tongue being contracted, she could not speak until the 21st inst. when she spoke and said she felt quite well, and free from any kind of pain. She was four weeks in this state. During the first entire week she was asleep, her pulse was good and natural, and her slumbers appeared calm and comfortable; but there was a total suspension of all the other animal functions except perspiration.

Two brothers, paper makers, at Turin, Lewis county, New York, have discovered a mode of manufacturing paper, from the bark of poplar, willow, and other kinds of wood.

The Memory of Summerfield.—The Young Men's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have erected a beautiful Cenotaph to the memory of their late President, the lamented Summerfield. It is placed in front of the church in John-street, New York, near the western corner. The tablet is of black marble, finely polished, in the shape of a cone, and inserted in the wall of the church. Upon and near the base of this an urn is affixed, standing upon a pedestal, with a few volumes of books upon either side. From one side of the urn, a mantle hangs down in graceful folds, and at the right of it is a half-unrolled scroll. The whole is beautifully sculptured from a block of very fine and beautiful white marble.

Among the favours granted by the emperor of Russia, at his coronation, was the gift of 120,000 peasants to different persons: Count Nesselrode received four thousand.

Dr. Parr used to express his sentiments of his three favourite divines, Hooker, Barrow, and Jeremy Taylor, as follows—

"Δεδεσμένον μεν τεσσάρων—διακωματικόν καὶ βασιλείαν—καὶ Φίλως Τειλαμον."
Religious Intelligence.

Beside the want of well qualified ministers of the gospel to fill many important vacancies in our cities and towns, as well as numerous destitute congregations in the well settled part of our country, the immense regions to the west and south are almost wholly without the stated administration of gospel ordinances—to say nothing, at present, of the want of suitable men for foreign missions. Whence the necessary supply of well qualified religious teachers is to be obtained, except from Education Societies, we are unable to tell. The wealthy do not generally educate their sons for the sacred office—If they are without piety, it is not desirable that they should. And however pious and willing to offer themselves for the gospel ministry, any of the offspring of the poor, and even of those in middling circumstances, may be, their parents cannot, without at least some assistance, give them the necessary education. The consequences of this to the church of Christ, are at this moment felt; and they must every year be felt with an incalculably increasing force, if not prevented by a great augmentation of aid to Education Societies. The prospect does and ought to pain every heart that prizes the institutions of the gospel, loves the Saviour, and knows the worth of an immortal soul.

An appeal is just now making on this subject to the members of the Presbyterian Church, and we do hope that it may not be made in vain. The Board of Education, established by the supreme judicature of this church, may, at the present hour, be considered as destitute of funds—All they had at command have been pledged—Nay, pledges have been given even beyond the amount of funds immediately at command; and a number of youth, of piety and talents unquestionable, and even distinguished, are earnestly entreatyng for aid which cannot be given them. Let professing Christians, whom God has entrusted with.
a liberal portion of this world's goods, consider their responsibility. We say no more.

REVIVALS OF RELIGION.

We have been trying, from the various accounts we have seen of revivals of religion in our country, both in the statements of ecclesiastical bodies and in those of private individuals, contained in the publications of the day—to ascertain whether vital piety has apparently increased, or declined among us, within the year which closes with the present month. Our estimate is, that there has been, on the whole, an increase—although, from the nature of the case, the means of judging are not such as to afford certainty; and although in no one extended region of country, have there been those extraordinary appearances, which in some former years have been witnessed. But taking together the various places and congregations from which accounts have been published, of the special manifestation of Divine grace in the conversion of sinners, we are led to the conclusion, that the number of hopeful converts has been greater in the aggregate, in the present year, than in that which immediately preceded it.

We must however be permitted to remark, that in too many instances we have seen accounts, which we have wished had been more modestly and guardedly made.—We have sometimes seen broad statements of a revival of religion, which when examined, appeared to be little more than an incipient awakening, and this only among a small number, and of which the ultimate effects could not be known: And in other instances, we have observed a positiveness in pronouncing on the spiritual state of individuals concerned, and on the numerical amount of converts, which it seemed to us were exceedingly precipitate, and which perhaps, in all cases, would better be forborne. Let it not be supposed from this, that we are at heart hostile to revivals of religion, (as we have been told that some have chosen to represent us) or opposed to a discreet and proper announcement of them to the publick. Would to God, that revivals were a thousand fold more numerous than they are, if really deserving of the name—And even when there is much alloy of human imperfection, mingled, as there often is, in a work of saving grace, we still rejoice that some souls are won to Christ; for "what is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." We also sincerely wish, that proper representations of the special manifestations of Divine power and grace, in particular places, should be suitably promulgated. The knowledge of them rejoices the heart of every sincere Christian, and animates his prayers and his labours in his Master's cause, in hope that a similar blessing may be experienced among those with whom he is immediately connected. But we do certainly most earnestly wish that revivals may always be conducted, so far as human agency is concerned in them, in such manner as to be productive of the greatest good and the least evil—the most of the permanent fruits of genuine holiness, and the least of that intemperance of mere human feelings and passions, which is not only evanescent, but which often ends in increased hardness of heart, and sometimes in absolute skepticism or infidelity. We also wish that all appearance of ostentation and exaggeration should be carefully avoided, in the accounts of revivals—Yea, that there should be modesty and reserve in speaking of them, and especially in speaking of the operations of that blessed Spirit, by whose agency alone a renewal from sin to holiness is ever effected. Were what we have here intimated to be duly regarded, we believe that the credit of true religion, and the benefit of young converts, and the reverence due to God the Spirit, would be alike consulted.
MISSIONS.

We have heretofore stated that the communications on the subject of missions have become so voluminous, that we cannot pretend to give them in detail—except such as are made immediately to us. We have however endeavoured, agreeably to our pledge in the Prospectus of our work, to give, in the course of the year, such a view of missions, as we thought would apprise our readers of the state of them throughout the world. We are somewhat in arrear at present, in consequence of assigning so large a part of our work to the Minutes of the General Assembly—But we shall, in our present number, give a selection of such communications relative to missions, in various places, as may be sufficient to exhibit the state of them in those places; and it is our purpose to pursue this plan for some months to come, till we shall have published as much as comports with our plan and our promise.

Comparative Claims of the Bombay Mission.

Though we are in need, as we have often stated, of help to carry on to the best advantage, the several departments of our missions, still, we have no claims, which, in our own opinion, would compare with those of our brethren at Bombay. We feel like pleading their cause, rather than our own. They are greatly afflicted, and are reduced to a very small number. Where can they look but to the Board, and to the young men in our Theological Seminaries? They certainly occupy one of the most important stations in the world, and at present, the entrance of labourers is unnoticed by government. Why not enter while there is room? We believe there is no mission, whose claims are greater, and we should be happy, also, to believe, that the prayers and faith of Christians in America concerning them, are in proportion to those claims.

In conclusion, the missionaries remark, with respect to the anxieties and responsibilities of their own situation, and as a reason why they should be remembered in the prayers of the churchmen.

Our friends suppose, very justly, that every addition to our church is so much gain to our cause, and so much loss to the enemy; but all will very readily understand, that the care of watching over so many lambs of the flock in the midst of wolves—the labour of teaching so many babes in Christ the grand principles of the gospel—and the anxiety we feel for them in many ways— all unite to show us the necessity of great faith and constant prayer.

The additions to the church, mentioned in a preceding letter, increase the number of admissions from the native population, to ninety. Of these, it appears that four have died, and that three, at the date of the letter, had been guilty of such misdemeanors, as to render discipline a matter of Christian duty.—Miss. Herald.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Serious Attention to Religion at Kauaui.

Extract of a Letter.

Very dear Sir,—Permit me, as an individual, to address you once more, and relate what the Lord has done towards us, since my communication in June last. As it is expected Mr. Thurston will prepare a joint letter for this station, embracing the most interesting particulars, I am thus enabled to dwell the more on those of a personal nature.

Soon after my return from Oahu, about the first of July, the Spirit of the Lord appeared evidently at work among the people of our charge. An increased attention to the preached word; the great concourse of people at the church, so as to fill it to overflowing, while numbers thronged the doors and windows to catch the sound; together with the establishment of several weekly prayer meetings—all indicated that the Lord was with us in reality. Among the most prominent individuals, who profess to have enlisted themselves in the ranks of the faithful, resolving to become the followers of the Lord Jesus, are, Keoua, wife of Governor Adams, Kekupuahi, an aged chief woman, formerly the wife of Taariopu, King of Hawaii at the time of its discovery by Capt. Cook, and a large proportion of chiefs of less distinction, both male and female. Since the commencement of this religious excitement, our houses have been daily more or less frequented by inquirers, who anxiously desire instruction in the principles of Christianity. We entertain hopes, that some have indeed experienced that change, which shall be their passport unto everlasting life, among whom are several young men, teachers in our schools. It is desirable, however, that none be admitted to churc membership, till after a suitable season of trial and instruction.

We look upon many of these first fruits as our future helpers in our labours of love. Others appear well, but are so disposed to trust to their own righteousness, that we have never encouraged them to think that they are truly interested in a Saviour.

Before I was laid aside, in August last, by sickness, I had received the names of sixty-three persons, of both sexes, who had visited me to inquire what they should do to obtain salvation; and since that time many more have been added to the number. The removal of Honorii to Hiro, (Byron's Bay,) was severely felt by all those who were disposed to serious inquiry. He had been with them daily, visiting from house to house, and in conducting their social meetings for prayer, so that the continuance of his presence was thought by them indispensable. But the return of Mr. Huggies to Taual renders his assistance to Mr. Goodrich an important object, in order to keep possession of that interesting station, until further aid shall arrive from America.

Our schools, scattered up and down the coast, form so many radiating points of Christian knowledge. The books put into their hands are all of a religious character, and whatever a native learns, he communicates to his friends who cannot read. I have often been surprised to hear those, who came from a distance, and had never heard preaching, or obtained a knowledge of the alphabet, repeat whole hymns by heart. It is now ten weeks yesterday, since, in compliance with several previous invitations, I visited some of the neighboring villages to preach and inquire into the state of the schools. I was accompanied by five or six young native men, hopefully pious, who acted as a choir of singers. I sent them forward by two and two, to call at the several houses, which we were to pass, and invite the people to assemble, while I walked slowly in the rear to prepare my discourses. The day was clear, and the noonday sun shone fully upon my path, while not a noise was to be heard, save the dashing of the surf upon the rocks of lava that bound the shore. Those who have felt the direct rays of a tropical sun can best judge of its debilitating influence. But the interesting scenes before me sustained me through the day, during which I preached six times to more than 2,500 people. It was the most pleasing day that I have spent on missionary ground, because it appeared the most useful one. But it was the last, on which the righteous providence of God permitted me to speak in his name for ten weeks. I returned home late in the evening exhausted with fatigue and hunger, but inwardly rejoicing in the glorious prospects now opening among our schools. Whenever a school-house is erected, a place is provided for the worship of the true God, and the voice of prayer is heard morning and evening to ascend up to the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. I had intended the excursion above mentioned as the beginning of a series of visits to different parts of the island, but the Lord was pleased to order otherwise, at least for a season.

Illness of Mr. Bishop.—Two days after this, I was taken ill of a fever, which continued ten days, when I became convalescent. But when I had nearly recovered, I was, in consequence of over exertion, seized with a relapse, which continued longer than my former sickness, and brought me to the lowest extremity. But the Lord heard my petition, and raised me from my low condition, to preach once more the tidings of salvation. Yesterday, for the first time, I ascended the pulpit, and spoke from these words of the Psalmist, "I love the Lord because he hath heard the voice of my supplications," I am now restored to nearly my former health, and am enabled to sing of his mercies, and of his chastisements. My beloved companion has been afflicted for the last four months, with a severe bowel complaint, which has entirely prostrated her strength. I trust that she is now somewhat better. During my late illness, she was mostly confined to her room, and wholly unable to render me that assistance, which my case demanded. I was not left, however, without a helper. Mr. and Mrs. Thurston said aside all other avocations to attend upon us, and proved themselves truly worthy the appellation of brother and sister. Night and day Mr. Thurston watched by my couch, both as nurse and physician, till he was exhausted, and Mr. Ely came to his relief.

I remain, Dear Sir, yours in the Gospel.

A. BISHOP.

Missionary Herald.

Contrast of the Present with the Past.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM MR. ELY.

Dear Sir,—When we first landed here, the people as a body were unbelievers, determined to remain in ignorance, rejected the proposals made for their instruction, and despised the word of life. They were profligate in their lives, and bent on every evil work. We have seen the mother beat her son-in-law for his efforts to screen her daughter, the wife of his bosom, from being corrupted by a foreigner. We have witnessed the whole village, with few exceptions, intoxicated from day to day—heard their horrid yells; and, in the domestic circle, seen the effects of their rage. I have heard the daughter of eight years, pleading for the life of her mother at the hand of her intoxicated father, and anon waiving over him, who had fallen by a stone wielded by the wife of his bosom.
Religious Intelligence.

But now they are changed; externally they are universally changed. They have abandoned their evil practices. No female is known to visit a ship, for the infamous practice of prostitution. No one is intoxicated. There are no family broils. All may be said to be believers in Christianity, so far as the question of its divine origin is concerned. Family worship is generally prevalent, and kind attentions everywhere prevail.

The natives are engaged in learning to read, and calls for books are much too numerous for our means of supply. Often we are solicited to hasten the translation of the Scriptures, that they may have them to read in their own language; and the principal topic of conversation among the natives, concerns the word of God. The inhabitants of neighboring villages flock by hundreds to our church, at our seasons of worship.

Three females, a few weeks since, came from a distant village to inquire into the new way. They said they had heard, and that they were convinced, that this word was from the Lord; and they begged, with tears, that some one might go over and teach them the way of life, that they, too, might be saved. Nor is this a solitary instance. Such calls have become very frequent.

When the inhabitants of Kasavara visit distant villages, where the news of this great-salvation is abroad, the natives lead them to their houses, and inquire eagerly of them concerning it. And in my excursions, they voluntarily collect in large companies to receive the word at my mouth.

Specific Cases of Serious Inquiry.—Kapookoulou, who lives here, was formerly the high priest of Tamehamacha. A son of his died a short time since, a hopeful convert. His daughter, about 18 years of age, a very intelligent girl, is also, we hope, a true penitent. When her brother died, she expostulated with her parents, and earnestly entreated them to prepare for death. “Can you remain in hell?” she said, “My brother is dead. He we hope, has gone to heaven; you are in the bounds of death. We had hoped to forgive him in this world. Shall I go and meet my brother in heaven, and leave you to go to hell? Shall we be separated in the future world?” With such words she exhorted them. They are now very interesting inquirers.

Last Sabbath I propounded Kapiofani for admission to the church. Kamakau, and his wife, and Alahai, a young chief who lives with Naihe, are expecting to unite in the course of three or four months. A number more give encouraging evidence of piety, though we think it not best to hasten their baptism. And a still greater number are silently inquiring the way of life.

Native Missionary Society.—A few days since, a number of the natives formed themselves into a society, to aid by contributions in the support of their missionary. They have already contributed to the amount of 50 dollars, in articles of clothing and provisions. This, considering their poverty, we think liberal. They say they love God, and they wish to aid their missionaries, whom God has sent to them to preach the Gospel of Christ.

It should be far from us to boast of any thing that we have done, or to speak of the work as affected by our agency. We would give glory to God as the only efficient Agent in the conversion of sinners. Little did I expect, when I first removed here, that my eyes would in so short a time, be permitted to see so much that is favourable for Zion. Indeed, I had calculated to witness a long dreary night of toil, and care, and discouragement. But God has been better to us than our fears; and in his name we have abundant cause to rejoice. And could our Christian friends in America witness what we have witnessed, they, no doubt, would rejoice with us, and be encouraged to do more for the enlightenment of the gentiles.

Requesting an interest in your prayers, and in the prayers of our patrons and friends, that we may be sustained to perform faithfully the work assigned us as missionaries, and that, by a Divine blessing, we may be instrumental in gathering the gentiles into the church of Christ, I subscribe myself yours in the Gospel.

JAMES ELY.

Missionary Herald.

Ceylon.

Stated Weekly Exercises.

Immediately after morning prayers, on the Sabbath, the members of the church, belonging to the school, and such others as are inclined to attend, hold a religious meeting, conducted by the pastor at half past nine o'clock, the members of the school attend public worship. In the afternoon, eight or ten students, who are considered best qualified for the service, are employed, either in teaching Sabbath schools in the adjoining villages, or in distributing tracts and conversing with the people. We think it important, that all who cordially receive the Gospel, be made distinctly to understand, and cheerfully to obey, the injunction of our Lord, "Freely ye have received, freely give." The other members of the school attend a meeting at three o'clock in the afternoon, and repeat, in answer to questions proposed, the substance of the sermon delivered in the morning. This exercise may, with propriety, be considered the "improvement" of the sermon. The subject is made more personal, and a deeper impression is often made on the occasion, than at the public preaching of the word.

In the evening, all assemble to recite a biblical lesson, prepared by them in the course of the day.

On Monday morning, as there are no recitations, the time is spent in settling the monitors' bills, and in attending to other things relating to the discipline and government of the school.

On Tuesday evening is held a religious meeting, attended by the two missionaries at the station, the students, and a few others, for the purpose of expounding Scripture. The portion selected for this purpose, for several months past, has been the Acts of the Apostles.

On Wednesday morning there are no recitations. About one half the members of the school, being associated for the purpose, hold, at that time, a meeting for prayer and conversation on religious subjects.

On Friday, at noon, it being a weekly season for fasting and prayer, a religious meeting is held, from half past 12 to 1 o'clock. The object of setting apart this season for fasting and prayer is, to supplicate the special blessing of the Spirit of God upon the school—to enable all the members of it to become contributors to the Bible Associations established in this place—and to communicate information relative to the progress of the Christian cause.

On Saturday evening, a meeting is held with the members of the church at the station, and with the candidates for admission.

At the quarterly public meeting of the Bible Society, six or eight students in turn, prepare translations from English into Tamil, or write themselves addresses in Tamil, for the occasion.

These meetings have generally been interesting seasons.

General Remarks.

From the statement here given, it will be seen, that most of the students are pursuing two courses of study—the one in Tamil, and the other in English, which have but little connexion with each other, and that the occasional exercises of the school are numerous. Consequently their progress in any particular branch, will be proportionately slow, and their studies must be continued during a long period, if they would complete that course of education, which we now contemplate, and deem highly important.

When it is remembered, that several youths of the best promise now in school, were raised from a state of indigence, and commenced not only the English, but even the Tamil alphabet in our Charity Boarding Schools, their present attainments must be considered highly creditable to themselves, and encouraging to all immediately concerned in their education.

Moral and Religious State of the School.

On a review of God's dealings towards the school the past year, we perceive numerous reasons for special thanksgiving and praise. In addition to a constant succession of common mercies, we have repeatedly been favoured with special blessings of the highest order. By the effusion of the Holy Spirit at two different periods, in the course of the year, almost every individual has been roused to a solemn consideration of those subjects, which relate to his present state, and future destinies. Many, as we are taught from the word of God to expect, though much alarmed on the first discovery of their being in an imperient state, straightway forgot what manner of persons they were.

Others, though for a time in earnest to secure their salvation, have rendered it evident, that their impressions were superficial. How many of those, who appear to be thriving plants, will wither and die, or be choked by the thorns and briers that surround them, it is impossible now to say. Judging, however, from present appearances, we may and do rejoice in the belief, that some of them are like seed sown on good ground, that will bring forth fruit, some an hundred fold, some sixty, and some thirty fold.

Even those, who are now the most thoughtless, received a degree of light and knowledge, during the season of general excitement; which now renders them much more susceptible of good impressions, when the truths of the Gospel are brought before them, than formerly. As the fallow ground has been broken up, it is comparatively easy to cast in the good seed.

Whether, therefore, we contemplate the condition of those, who, we hope, have been recently converted, or of those who have but begun to seek the blessings of the Gospel, or of those who are at present the most inattentive to their spiritual concerns, it is impossible dutly to estimate the magnitude of the blessing bestowed upon the school, by those special visitations of Divine grace, with which we have been favoured. The school assumes a new aspect. A powerful impulse has been given, highly conducive both to the literary and religious improvement of all its members.

Those who were formerly members of the church, have been greatly strengthened and encouraged by new accessions to their numbers. Those who have recently made a profession of their faith in Christ, are now watching for the souls of their school fellows, labouring by prayers and exhortation to bring all within their reach to the knowledge of the truth.

Those who are almost persuaded to be Christians, but dread the consequences of openly avowing their convictions of truth and duty, are constantly exhorted, both by the precept and example of those whom they love and respect, to make an unreserved surrender of themselves to the Lord.

And those who are apparently farthest from the kingdom of grace, are constantly, and in various ways, reminded, that now is the accepted time, and the day of salvation. We have often prayed, and invited our friends and patrons to unite with us in praying, that God would bless this infant seminary, that it may be made a blessing. We have laboured for the conversion of those instructed in it, that they may become instrumental in converting others. Our hearts are affected by the expectation before us, that the Lord has listened to the voice of our united supplications, and crowned our feeble efforts with a larger measure of success, than we had dared confidently to expect. By these precious tokens of Divine favour, we have already received a hundred fold reward, and are greatly encouraged to persevere in our labours.

The members of the Central School, in September of the last year, were 34 in all. Beside these, there were ten others, who had not English names. At page 303 of the Missionary Herald for last month, it was mentioned, that 16 were received into the school early in the present year, making the number in the school at that time 50; of whom twenty-two were members of the church. It would seem, that there had, meanwhile, been some dismissals, of which no notice has been received. The institution was never more flourishing, than at the latest dates. It was beginning to attract the attention of learned natives, and was growing in popularity.

The school at Tillipally has been made, as has already been stated in this work, a preparatory school, in which the incipient stages of education have a special regard to the course of study pursued in the Central School at Batticotta.

CHILDREN IN THE CHARITY BOARDING SCHOOLS.

A late letter from Mr. Winslow to the Treasurer of the Board, contains remarks on the subject of giving names to children in Ceylon, to which those who are or design to be, benefactors of such children, are invited to direct their attention.

Your letter, containing a list of children to be supported, has, I am informed, reached Jaffna. The directions concerning the naming of children, and of schools, will be attended to. It is our custom to keep lists of the children to be supported, taking the names from your communications, and from the Herald. This list we correct, and add to, from time to time, as we find that payments are discontinued, or new ones made.

In naming the children, our general practice has been, to take the names in order, giving preference to such as have been longest supported. We have not been able, consistently with other duties, and with what we conceived to be the best interests of the mission, to take, at one time, as many children, as there are names on the list to be appropriated; but we design to give every benefactor his turn, and are now enlarging the number of children, so as more than to make up for what fell off, or were dismissed, when we formed the preparatory school at Til-

These schools are now coming under such regulations, as will enable us to receive as many boys, as the prospect of continued support and future usefulness will probably make it expedient to take. We have not heretofore pushed the system so fast, perhaps, as our friends have wished, or have thought expedient; because we have seen and felt difficulties, which they could not; and have been constrained to go more slowly on this untried ground, than we had ourselves even anticipated.

The benefactors of these children will, it is hoped, have long patience, and continue their support, in which case there is no doubt a fair trial of the effects of their charity will be made.

As to disappointments arising to the benefactors, from their beneficiaries not turning out well, they may comfort themselves in the thought, that the money given by them to the object, though it does not produce all the immediate fruit which they hoped, has assured in such
Religious Intelligence.

Bourne's journal of his voyage, containing very gratifying statements relative to the progress of the gospel, amongst the natives of the islands visited.

HARVEY ISLANDS.

Island of Manasia (or Mangeea).

It will be recollected that Davida and Tiere, (or Tepaira) were left at Manasia by the Deputation, on their way to New South Wales, in June, 1824. Tiere died about three weeks before my arrival. During the first two months of their residence on the island, a few embraced the Gospel, and that number has since increased to one hundred and twenty. These were easily distinguishable among the crowd that collected on our going on shore, by the neatness of their dress and their orderly behaviour. We proceeded to the teacher's house, which we found equal to any, and superior to most of the houses of the natives at the Society Islands. Not far from the teacher's house is the chapel, around which the dwellings of the Christian converts are scattered.

After the curiosity of the crowd had been a little satisfied, I requested them to adjourn to the house of worship, which was soon filled. Great numbers, who could not get inside, surrounded every part of the house, and listened with attention. Davida began with prayer; after which I addressed them on the love of God, in sending his Son to die for them. I then exhorted those who had embraced Christianity to remain steadfast, and those who still adhered to idolatry, to forsake it, and receive the light sent down from heaven. I returned with Davida and his little flock to his house, where we spent some time in conversation, and again exhorted them to constancy. I addressed a word of affectionate advice to Davida, in reference to the work in which he was engaged, and promised that another labourer should be sent to him the first opportunity. After supplying him with elementary books, &c., and what few articles we could spare, for his own use, and for barter, I commended him to God, and bade him farewell. We then returned on board, and bore away for Rarotonga.

The number of inhabitants in Manasia, is from one thousand to one thousand five hundred. The people who have embraced Christianity, are diligent in their learning. Some can read the Spelling-book, and a few are beginning to read the Scriptures. Family and private

From the Missionary Chronicle of the Evangelical Magazine.

PROGRESS OF THE GOSPEL AMONG THE NATIVES OF THE HARVEY ISLANDS, &c.

Among the important objects which engaged the attention of Messrs. Tyerman and Bennett, the Society's Deputation to the South Seas, &c., prior to their leaving the islands and proceeding to the Colony of New South Wales, was the adoption of some plan for keeping up a regular intercourse between the Missionaries and the Tahitian teachers, who had been stationed in the surrounding islands. The plan, which appeared to themselves and the Missionaries to be most eligible, was, that a vessel should be every year engaged for this specific purpose. On the proposal being submitted to the Directors, they agreed to allow, on behalf of the Society, an annual sum for the object, on condition that one or more of the Missionaries should always proceed on this service. In pursuance of this arrangement, the brig Haueta was, in the autumn of last year, engaged by the Missionaries for a voyage to the islands in question. Messrs. Bourne and Williams having visited Harvey Islands in 1823, it was considered proper by their fellow-missionaries that one of them should take the lead in the present undertaking. The lot fell on Mr. Bourne, who accordingly embarked, on the 30th of September, on board the Haueta, accompanied by a deacon from each of the two churches of Raiaeta and Tahiti, and proceeded to the Harvey Islands, and from thence to the islands of Raivavae, whence he returned to Raiaeta. It is with great pleasure that we communicate to our readers the following extracts from Mr.

* Situated between 19° and 22° S. Lat. and 169° W. Long., and between 400 and 600 miles S. W. by W. of Tahiti.
1826. Religious Intelligence. 351

prayer is strictly observed among them, and they pay great respect to their teacher; and although the king and the principal part of the people are still idolaters, yet they are all upon friendly terms with Davida, frequently visiting him, and bringing him presents of food. All idolatrous distinctions have been abandoned by those who have embraced Christianity in the island, and there is reason to hope that the Gospel will be embraced by every individual in it.

Infanticide being here unknown, the children are numerous. There is little sickness among the people, and the diseases are few. They display great ingenuity in the fabrication of their cloth, canoes, stone axes, and ear-ornaments. Their heads are profusely covered with figured cloth, red beads, and sinnet of beautiful workmanship. Their language approaches nearer to that of New Zealand than Tahitian.

The teachers have been industrious in cultivating yams, pumpkins, and melons, all of which were before unknown here; fowls, also, and hogs have been introduced, and are upon the increase. We left with the teachers some sweet potatoes for seed, which will prove a valuable addition to their stock of eatables.

Rarotonga, October 5.—Arrived at Rarotonga. We went on shore, and were welcomed by the teachers (Papeiaha and Tiberio), and a considerable number of the people. It being the evening of the week-day lecture, I addressed a congregation of about one thousand-five hundred persons, from Psalm cxviii. 1.; O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, because his mercy endureth for ever. The greatest applause accompanied what was spoken. I spent the evening with the king and teachers, who consulted me upon the general affairs of the islands, and informed me what had taken place during the past six months.

Since the vessel was here last, the most determined hostility had been manifested by the remaining idolaters, against those who had embraced the Gospel, and had eventually led to a conflict, which terminated, without loss of life on either side, in victory on that of the Christians. The vanquished have since entreated their names to be emblazoned among the shrines of Jehovah, and the cumbrous deities, fourteen in number (being about 20 feet long, and 6 feet in diameter), are now lying prostrate, like Dagon of old.

The chapel, 240 feet by 42, is an excellent native building, well plastered. The king’s house, 35 feet by 24, is plastered, and tastefully fitted up in the interior, with painted cloth and ornamental shells. It contains eight rooms, with boarded floors. Adjoining, is another plastered house, 138 feet by 20, in which the king, cats, and where his servants and dependants reside. Makea is a fine handsome man, much resembling, in his features, the late King Pomare. He has eight sons and four daughters. The house in which the two teachers reside, is another good building, 90 feet by 30, most of it floored with boards, and containing various apartments, furnished with beds, sofas, arm-chairs and tables, all of native manufacture. There are several hundred houses in the settlement, of which one hundred and eighty are plastered.

The king and principal chiefs can read well in the Tahitian Spelling-book, and hundreds, yes, I may say, thousands of men, women and children are making rapid progress in learning. Dr. Watts’s Catechism of Scripture Names they have learned perfectly, as well as the Tahitian Catechism. Family and private prayer is generally observed. Plurality of wives is entirely abolished. The people show great respect to their teachers. Three kings (or principal chiefs) formerly governed the island, (viz. Makea, Tinomanu, and Pama,) between whom frequent and bloody wars were formerly waged; but now, by universal consent, the whole power is vested in Makea; and thus contention for power, that apple of discord, has been wisely cast away by the islanders. Cannibalism and infanticide* also have ceased.

The population of this island may be safely estimated at from six to seven thousand. The people are much given to cultivation, and men, women and children are continually employed on their plantations.

In the evening, those who had been baptized made a feast, to which we were invited; and while we were partaking of the luxuries of the island, several of the natives got up and made some sensible speeches. One observed, that our Lord foretold Peter’s denial; let us also (added he) beware lest we deny him in our hearts. Another made some judicious remarks on John iii. 6; That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. And I must confess, I was surprised to hear such addresses from those who so short a time ago were ignorant idolaters. After this meeting was concluded, we retired to the chapel, where I was employed in re-writing down the names of the candidates, previous to baptism on the morrow.

* Infanticide was confined to female children. There were formerly arresis among the people of this island, but they never murdered their children.

October 7.—About noon, the people assembled at the chapel, to the number of about two thousand. I addressed them from Matt. xxviii. 20, Teaching them to observe all things, &c. &c.; after which I baptized one hundred and ninety-four adults, and one hundred and two children. The greatest number present were singing the whole service. In the afternoon I had a meeting with the young people and children. About seven hundred attended. They correctly answered every question in Dr. Watts's Catechism. I afterwards addressed them, and concluded with prayer. On this island, the Lancasterian system of instruction could be fully acted upon, as the young people and children cannot leave home, such is the extent of the population, without danger of starvation. In the evening, the people held their stated Friday evening meeting, in the chapel, which was lighted with candle-nut oil. About three thousand were present. I commenced with prayer and an address, after which several passages of Scripture were correctly quoted and appropriately applied by the natives. The two deacons who accompanied me then addressed them in an encouraging manner. I could not help contrasting the behaviour of the people now, with what I witnessed on our former visit. We were then afraid to land, conceiving our lives would have been endangered; but now we felt as easy as though we had been among our own people. Then the natives came alongside the vessel without any clothing at all, but now the greatest propriety in dress was manifested among all classes. At our former visit, the Tahitian teachers were compelled to keep watch the whole night, to preserve their wives from the violence of Makea; but now he has given up all his own wives (formerly eight in number) except one. He is constant at school, is diligent in his attendance on the means of grace, and approves of every plan that is proposed for the spiritual and temporal benefit of his people. There is also, apparently, more modesty among the females of this island, than on any other in the South Seas with which I am acquainted.

October 8.—In the morning the people again assembled at the chapel. I addressed them on the subject of the new birth, after which, I baptized one hundred and twenty-nine adults, and seventy-one children, making altogether four hundred and ninety-six, who have been baptized during our present visit. One thousand were baptized formerly, so that the whole number of those who have now received the ordinance of baptism on this island, is one thousand four hundred and ninety-six. On this occasion, the number of natives present could not have been less than from three thousand five hundred, to four thousand.

The Tahitian teachers, Papeia and Taliero, deserve great commendation for their activity and diligence in their work. They have taught the people to make bedsteads, sofas, chairs, &c. They have themselves acquired a great deal of the Rarotongan dialect, and, when reading and teaching the Scriptures, giving out the Tahitian Hymns, and in their prayers and addresses, they write and use the whole of the Rarotongan dialect instead of the Tahitian, that the people may more clearly understand the Word of Life; so that I am now more convinced than ever of the necessity of a Version of the Scriptures, for the use of the natives of the Society Islands, and the sooner it is commenced the better.

Much has been said in Europe, &c. concerning the success of the Gospel in the Society Islands, but it is not to be compared with its progress in Raratonga. In the Society Islands, European Missionaries laboured for fifteen long years before the least fruit appeared. But two years ago, Raratonga was hardly known to exist; was not marked in any of the charts, and on our last voyage we spent much time in endeavouring to ascertain whether or not there really was such an island; and all the guidance we were able to obtain, was from the king of Atiu, who had never seen it himself. Two years ago the Raratongians did not know there was such a name as Jesus, or such good news as the Gospel. And now, I scruple not to say, that their attention to the means of grace, their regard to private and family prayer, their diligence and their general behaviour, equals, if not excels, whatever has been witnessed at Tahiti and the neighbouring islands. When we look at the means, it is the more astonishing. Two Tahitian teachers, not particularly distinguished among their own countrymen for intelligence, have been the instruments in working this wonderful change, and that before a single European Missionary had set his foot upon the island. I have here been accustomed to see such changes as have taken place in the various islands of these seas, but I must confess, what I have seen in Raratonga has, nevertheless, excited in me surprise.

* In the Society Islands, where, before the people embraced Christianity, the population had been so much reduced by wars, infanticide, &c. the children ramble from place to place, and from island to island, always sure of procuring the means of subsistence.
could not help earnestly desiring the presence of my Brother Williams, that as he had shared some disappointments with me last voyage, so he might share with me the joy, which the change which has since taken place is calculated to produce. From the great number of its inhabitants, and the general aspect of affairs in the island, there appears reason to expect Rarotonga will become one of the most important among the missionary stations in these seas. We left a large supply of elementary books, and, after giving the teachers a word or two of encouragement, and taking leave of the king and people, we went on board, and stretched across for Aitutake.

The missionary visited the other islands in the group; but we cannot give the details.—The appearances were much the same in all.

_The Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church acknowledges the receipt of the following sums for their Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. during the month of November last, viz._

Of L. Desouque, six months' rent of the stable back of the house occupied by Rev. John W. Scott, for the Contingent Fund

$20.00

Of Rev. Robert W. Condit, collected by him in the Presbytery of Hudson, for the Professorship to be endowed by the Synods of New York and New Jersey, viz.,

| In Bethlehem | $5.00 |
| Goshen      | $28.43 |
| Chester     | $3.68  |
| Florida     | $13.00 |
| And Ridgbury| $6.31  |

$56.42

Of Rev. Wm. M. Enges, the balance in full of his subscription for the Professorship to be endowed by the Synod of Philadelphia

$50.00

Total $126.43

_View of Publick Affairs._

The last month has afforded no news, either foreign or domestic, of much general interest. We shall however, as usual, briefly chronicle what we have noted.

EUROPE.

Britain.—The latest advices which we have seen from London, were of the 18th of October, and from Liverpool of the 21st. On the 18th of that month, the period expired in which any lotteries in Britain could be made under sanction of law; and it was the hope of the friends of good morals, and the enemies of gambling, that no law would ever again authorize any lottery in that kingdom. It appears that the avails of the governmental lotteries, did not exceed £230,000 per annum.—This was surely selling public morals cheap. Our country is more given than we could wish it were, to the imitation of whatever is done in Britain. But an imitation now, would, in our opinion, be highly beneficial. We are well persuaded that all lotteries—no matter for what purpose made—are injurious to the virtue, industry and happiness, of those who deal in them; and the dealers in them are numerous and increasing. We wish that they were forever banished from our land.

We think there is evidence that the wide spread distress in England, Scotland and Ireland, arising from the want of employment, and of commercial credit and activity, is gradually diminishing.—Trade and business in general, are certainly reviving.—The poor, however, still suffer greatly.

The Duke of York has been seriously ill. He is represented as dropsical, and the prospect of his succession to the British crown, to be far from flattering.
cause no regret to the friends of Catholic emancipation; as the Duke is literally the sworn enemy of that measure.

The issues from the bank of England are reported to have been £30,000,000 sterling. It is said that a cabinet council was called to require the bank to withdraw from circulation a portion of its paper; but that the measure was opposed and defeated by Lord Liverpool, on the ground that "the country could not yet bear a repetition of the contracting operation."

The Roman Catholics in Ireland, or their priests rather, are making vigorous exertions to impede the operation and influence of Bible Societies; and riotous proceedings are in some instances the result.

FRANCE.—We have not been able to note any information from France, within the last month, of more importance than that the British minister, Mr. Canning, was receiving the most marked expressions of respect in Paris, from the king, the court, and the foreign ministers;—and that the king's return from St. Cloud, his summer residence, to the palace of the Tuileries, was a spectacle of royal parade and magnificence, that made a great impression on the Parisians.—Our minister, among others, is said to have given a dinner to Mr. Canning. We do not believe for ourselves, that Canning is staying at Paris for no higher objects than to eat French dinners and receive French compliments. What has been the main scope of his visit, we pretend not to say—possibly a commercial treaty—something, it may be, in favour of a more effectual suppression of the African slave trade—or the removal of the French armies from Spain—or some arrangement in behalf of the poor Greeks—but the secret will be out before long.

SPAIN.—We are not able to conjecture when the miseries of this unhappy kingdom are likely to be terminated, or materially diminished. We have lately become convinced that the source of the national calamities which afflict Spain, lie deeper than we had supposed. We are now thoroughly persuaded that the remedy is not in the power of the Prince and his ministers, even if they were disposed to apply it—which we are satisfied they are not. The lamentable fact is, that the people and the prince are suited to each other. There is a portion of the people indeed, that would rejoice in a change favourable to freedom; but this is a small portion. The mass of the population do not wish it, and would not even bear it. They would revolt against any prince who should attempt to unbind their chains. They are infatuated with the love of tyranny, both civil and ecclesiastical; and how and when they are to be disenchanted, we know not.

The last accounts state, that large corps of soldiers have deserted, and taken refuge in Portugal. The King is ill of the gout; and bands of robbers are infesting the environs of Madrid. The Constitutionalists are, if possible, worse persecuted than ever.

PORTUGAL.—The new constitution of Portugal, although hated and opposed by a party, the friends of absolute power, seems likely to go into complete effect. The Princess Regent is popular; and the last accounts represent that she was receiving flattering addresses, and assurances of support, from various parts of the kingdom, expressive of gratitude to Don Pedro for the gift of the new constitution. The elections of members of the legislature have been completed, and a full list of the house of Deputies and the house of Peers, has been published.—Primary schools have been opened; and a society for the promotion of national industry, has been organized. In the mean time an insurrection has broken out at Algarve, and 3000 troops have marched from Lisbon to suppress it; and 300 English troops have been disembarked from ships of war in the port, for the protection of the palace, in the absence of the national guards.

TURKEY.—A fire broke out at Constantinople on the 31st of August, and raged for thirty hours without being checked. Several thousand houses were consumed—one account says 25,000—but this we think must be erroneous. It appears, however, that about a sixth part of the city was destroyed; and the destruction of property was immense, as the dwellings consumed were chiefly those of the wealthy.—Several palaces were burned, containing the hoarded treasures of years. We think we have seen it stated, that the losses sustained by this fire, will contribute not a little to embarrass the Grand Senior—very much embarrassed before—in providing for the payment of his armies and allies, employed to subjugate Greece. If so, some good may come out of the evil. We do believe that, from several causes, the Sultan Mufussul has no other plan but to raise money to pay his troops and carry on his military operations. It appears also that the affair of the Janissaries is not yet settled.—It is said that the populace even imputed the fire to the vengeance of Heaven, inflicted for the destruction of the Janissaries, and refused to do any thing to stop the flame.
RUSIA.—The emperor Nicholas has published a manifesto, or formal declaration of war against Persia. He makes out a strong and plausible case—but this is a matter of course. We do believe, however, that in this instance the Persians were the aggressors; and there can be little doubt that ultimately they will pay dearly for their temerity and folly. They have already been defeated in one battle, with the loss, it is said, of a thousand men.—The matter in dispute is a portion of territory, which, after a former war, was ceded to Russia; and which, it appears, the Persians have endeavoured to reclaim by force, without even setting up a claim of right. This at least is the Russian statement—but audi alteram partem. We do not know what the Persians might say in reply. Yet it is clear they commenced hostilities without warning, and very unexpectedly.

The prospect of war between the Russians and Turks seems to be at an end. The last accounts represent the Turks as having yielded every claim that Russia deems important, and that peace between the two powers is likely to continue.

GREECE.—Within the last month we have read numerous articles in the publick papers relative to Greece; from all which we gather the following facts, which we think may be relied on. Greece is reduced to the greatest extremity, in consequence of the successes of her inveterate enemies, and from the want of money to pay her troops, and the want indeed of clothing, food, and every article necessary to maintain an army in the field. The hope of being able to make head against the Turks was, at the last accounts, suspended on the assistance to be received from abroad. Yet the Greeks had no disposition to submit to their invaders, but were rather determined to die fighting, or to retire—those that might be left—to the mountains and fastnesses with which their country abounds. Ibrahim Pacha was at Tripolitza inactive—waiting for reinforcements from Egypt. Athens had been besieged by three Turkish corps on different sides. Its relief was attempted, but after a desperate engagement, the Greeks were repulsed. The city of Athens was in possession of the Turks, but the Greeks still held the Acropolis, or citadel. The Turkish fleet was inactive before Mytilene.—The Greeks had attempted without success, and with the loss of two fire-ships, to burn it. Lord Cochrane was anxiously expected, but had not arrived. General Boyer and his corps of Frenchmen, who assisted in taking Missolonghi, had left the Turkish service, in consequence of some misunderstanding with their Egyptian masters. It was said that the funds of the Viceroy of Egypt were so exhausted, that he could not send reinforcements to the Morea; and that without them, the war there could not be maintained.—The belief appears to gain ground in Europe, that the Christian powers are about to interpose in behalf of the Greeks. It is stated as a fact, that the British minister, Stratford Canning, had made a strong representation to the Porte, but was treated in a very cavalier manner. If this be true, we shall hope that the poor Greeks will ere long receive some efficient aid.

ASIA.

We have nothing new to state from Asia.

AFRICA.

The last London Quarterly Review, after giving some account of the progress of captain Clapperton and Mr. Dixon into the interior of this vast continent, says—"We have now every reason to hope that the interior of Northern Africa beyond the Great Desert, will no longer remain a Terra Incognita."

The Ashantees, on the western coast, are still making military demonstrations of a formidable kind; and causing no small alarm both to the native princes, and to the British establishments.

It is mournful to see by the last reports of the African Institution in Britain, that after all the efforts made to suppress the slave trade, there are probably as many slaves now carried from Africa annually, as at any former period. The French, Portuguese, and Brazilians, are chiefly engaged, at present, in this abominable and infamous traffic. Driven from one place, they only resort to another; and we see no way in which this diabolical business can be terminated, but by destroying the market for slaves in the West Indies and South America. While slavery is permitted, there will be slave traders—sellers and buyers—foreign and domestick. The cries of injured Africa will never cease, till there is no demand for slaves in any part of the world; or till the influence of Christianity shall prevent the wretched natives of that continent from making slaves of each other.
SOUTHERN AMERICA.—No changes, or events of much importance, have transpired within the last month, in the southern part of our continent. The general Congress of the South American States is sitting at Tacubaya, but their proceedings are not known. War still exists between the Emperor of Brazil and Buenos Ayres; but no operations of importance have taken place. There has been another naval action of some little consequence, in which the republicans claim to have had the advantage—The Buenos Ayrians are looking for a fleet, which they have obtained from the Chilians, and which the Brazilian fleet hopes to intercept.

Nothing among our southern neighbours has of late interested us half so much, as the reports and statements recently become current, that the Liberator Bolivar is likely to prove recreant to the cause of liberty. It is confidently stated in letters from Lima, not only that he has acted in the most tyrannical and offensive manner in Peru, but that it was there confidently believed, that he was taking measures to form Colombia, Peru, and Chili into an empire, to place himself at the head of it, and to form an alliance with the Emperor of Brazil. It is even intimated that the late movements in Colombia by General Paez, have been, and still are, with his connivance. We hold it, however, to be equally the dictate of justice and candour, when a man has, for a length of time, acted so nobly as Bolivar has confessedly done, not to place reliance on accounts that deeply implicate his character, till they are fully authenticated. The accounts in question are not so authenticated, and therefore we do not credit them. The long, and to us unaccountable, absence of the Liberator from Colombia, is a circumstance which gives us some anxiety; but we still hope that in time, the whole will be explained; and that the well earned laurels of Bolivar will not be blighted, but remain unsullied and even increase in lustre.

UNITED STATES.—We regard it as a part of our special duty in editing a religious miscellany, to notice particularly every thing in our country which, in a moral view, is injurious to our national character. Thus injurious—highly so, in our estimation—has been the conduct of the crew of a vessel belonging to the American navy, on a late visit to the Sandwich Islands. What can be more reproachful and disgraceful, than that the crew of a Christian vessel (and we hope the vessels of the United States are yet to be reckoned Christian) should be so maddened by the disappointment of their brutal desires, as to insult those who had rendered savages more chaste and temperate than themselves. This insult to the Christian missionaries and Christian chiefs of the Sandwich Islands, assumes a more disgusting aspect, because it forms such a perfect contrast to what was witnessed in the late visit of the British frigate, the Blonde, commanded by Lord Byron. His deportment, and that of his whole crew, left a most favourable impression on the minds, both of missionaries and natives. We sincerely hope that this business will be thoroughly investigated by our government. The missionaries at the Sandwich Islands are all Americans; and that they should be insulted by a ship of war from their own country, is grievous in the extreme: and if it be of some national importance, as we suppose it is, that the natives should cherish friendly feelings in regard to American vessels, it behoves us to see that such feelings are cherished, and not exchanged for those of fear and hatred. We wish that the parties concerned in this alleged outrage, may have a fair and candid trial; and we shall be glad to find that report has exhibited their conduct worse than it was; but the statements given to the publick, could scarcely have existed without a foundation in truth.

Since we began to write, we have seen the President’s Message to Congress, and have given it a hasty perusal. On such a perusal, it has struck us as, in general, a production of uncommon excellence. But we have neither time nor space for particular remark. Let us be permitted to suggest, that those who wish that the ensuing session of Congress may be more honourable and useful to our country than the last, have one thing in their power which, to that end, may be of much avail.—It is to pray earnestly that Almighty God may give such wisdom and grace to our legislators and rulers, as shall enable and dispose them to discharge all their functions with fidelity, and under a deep sense of their responsibility, both to their country and to the Supreme and final Judge of all.
INDEX TO VOLUME IV.

A.
Alexander on the Canon, 420.
Arabs in Spain, 89.
Americans, Longevity of, 90.
Africa, 94. 184.
Atonement, on the, 99. 147. 198. 244. 294.
340. 388. 435. 483. 531.
Automaton Chess-player, 133.
American Soldier, 138.
Assembly's Digest, Notice of, 139.
Apartments, how to light, 179.
Anecdote, 218.
Astronomy, 231.
Antediluvian Age, 203.
Ambergris, 336.
Alligators, 327.
Alexander I., Memoirs of, reviewed, 368.
A Plea for the West, 536.

B.
Bombay, 40.
Bristol, 44.
Bogue, Dr., Death of, 44. 92.
Bengal Schools, 390.
Buenos Ayres, 94.
Bush's Sermon reviewed, 174.
Britain, 183.
Blatchford's Sermon reviewed, 223.
Boston Schools, 276.
Burmese Witnesses, 469.
Bhurtpore Treasure, 512.
Babe of Bethlehem, 536.

C.
Christ's Reproof and Call to his Disciples, 17.
Children taught in France, 36.
Canal at Isthmus of Florida, 36.
College in Ceylon, 44.
Christmas Hymn, 50.
Christian Course retarded, 301.
Copperas in Vermont, 90.
Cotton, Egyptian, 132.
Convention, Missionary, 181.
Comets in 1835, 229.
Cruelty to Animals, 230.
Coverdale, Life of, 250.
Cornellus' Sermons reviewed, 274.
Comets, 321.
Chinese College, 327.
Copper Sheathing for Ships, 374.

VOL. IV.—Ch. Adv.

Chlorine an antiseptic, 375.
Canal, Pacific, &c., 420.
Calcutta School Society, 469.
Cotton Tree Seed, 513.
Christian Advice from a Mother to a Daughter, 541.
Cenotaph to the Memory of Summerfield, 561.
Ceylon, 567.

D.
Deaf and Dumb, 133. 213. 229.
Dies Irae, Translated, 222.
Death of Rev. P. Fisk, 235.
Douglass on Religion, &c., reviewed, 269.
Diana, Temple of, 275.
Desert shall blossom, 318.
Death of Missionary, 487.
Distress, Spiritual, Case of, 494.

E.
Expedition across the Rocky Mountains, 36.
Emigrants to Canada, 134.
Exposition of Rom. viii. 19.—23. 203.
—— a common saying, 217.
Expedition, Arctic, 275. 512.
Expedition Travelling, 270.
Emigrants, 327.
Earthquake at Richmond, 420.
Egyptians in France, 468.
Education Societies, 563.

F.
False Honour, Man of, 209.
Forest, Submarine, 231.
Fish, Sword, 275.
Fund, Connecticut School, 276.
Fraser's Travels in Persia, 468.

G.
Guatemala, 90.
Grasshoppers, Winter, 134.
Gas from Cotton Seeds, 178.
General Assembly's Meeting, 236.
Gurney's Essays reviewed, 318.
Grist Mills, Family, 327.
General Assembly, Minutes of, 376. 420.
474. 515.
Gretta Green Marriages, 468.
Granville Sharp's Bust, 532.

4 D
INDEX.

Glaciers of the Alps, 560.
Gift of 120,000 Peasants, 562.
H.
Hint to Publishers of Books, 71.
Health, Secrets of, 90.
Hymn by Doddridge, 107.
Horne's Introduction reviewed, 126.
Hymn to my Infant, 442.
Hall's Legacy to American Churches, 470.
Hymn, 482.
Harvey Islands, 570.

I—J.

India, 40, 91.
Invention, Important, 89.
Iron pierced by Sulphur, 89.
Island, New, 275.
Juice of Lemon, 275.
Jordon, Daniel, Memoir of, 405.
Indian Penance, 469.
Junction of the Rhine, &c., 512.

K.
Knox’s Monument, 35.
Kemm’s Midnight Hymn, 348.

L.
Letters from a Mother to a Daughter, 18.
64. 107. 154. 261. 308.
Letter from the State Clerk of the Assembly, 28.
Languages of India, 37.
Liberia, 41.
Lectures on the Catechism, 49. 145. 193.
Letters from an aged Minister to his Son, 53.
Languages of the New World, 230.
Lewes’ Presbytery, Minute of, 304.
Literature, Pursuits of, 327.
Locusts, 408.
Lopam’s Letters, 513.
Language, Ancient, 512.
Longevity, 561.
Lethargy, 561.

M.
Miracles, 36.
Mechanics' Institutes, 90.
Massachusetts, 90.
Missions in the World, 91.
Miller’s Letter reviewed, 177.
McDougell’s Theology reviewed, 169.
Marine Railway, 175.
Microscope, large, 179.
Missionary Society of Pennsylvania, 179.
Mustard Tree of the Bible, 229.
Meridian, General, 374.
Mammoth, 420.
Map of New England, 420.
Marble Statue of Ciceron, 512.
Memoir of Mrs. Leah W. Morris, 549.
Missions, 504.

N.
New Year, Voice of, 15.
North-west Coast, 37.
North Carolina settled, 90.
Newspapers in India, 512.
New South Wales, 512.
Newspapers in United States, 513.
Narrative of State of Religion, 513.

O.
Owen, R., remarks on his Address, 29, 72.
Observatory at Washington, 178.
Origin of Coal, 326.
Obituary Notice, 361.
Oil as Manure, 430.
Obituary of Rev. W. J. Wilson, 429.
Original Portrait of Milton, 512.

P.
Public Affairs, 45. 95. 140. 188. 236. 285.
333. 381. 429. 477. 595. 573.
Psalms, 60.
Potato, productivity of, 90.
Paint, 90.
how to prepare, 561.
Population in South America, 230.
Philosophical Questions, 230.
Powder, Mechanical, 231.
Philosopher, Christian, 327.
Pompeii, 374.
Porcelain, American, 374.
Patriotism not Pasty, 400.
Prophecy verified, 449.
Paragreels, 469.
Paper from the Bank of Poplar, &c., 561.

Q.
Questions relative to Slavery, 30. 258.
Quills, new, 327.

R.
Review of Discussion of Universalism, 32.
Russia, 39.
Review of Milton on Christian Doctrine, 84. 139.
Horse’s Introduction, 126.
McDowell’s Theology, 169.
Bush’s Sermon, 174.
Miller’s Letter, 177.
Religious Poetry, 227.
Douglas’s Sermon, 274.
Jourdain’s Sermon, 274.
Gurney’s Essays, 318.
Lloyd’s Life of Alexander I., 368.
White on Catholicism, 507, 553.
Controversial Tracts on Christianity and Mohamedanism, 415, 455.
Report of Missionary Society, 134.
Report of British and Foreign Bible Society, 231.
Report, Fourteenth Annual, of Theological Seminary, 561.
Railway, 336.
Rose, Habits of the, 396.
Review of Blatchford’s Sermon, 223.
Revivals of Religion, 564.

S.
Stewart’s Private Journal, 31. 77. 121. 165.
Sugar Manufactury at Otaheite, 36.
Sandwich Islands, 37. 182.
State of the Jews, 53.
State of Religion, 93. 277.
Slavery Society of Maryland, 93.
Spectacles, new, 134.
Syrian Metropolis, 229.
Suicides in London, 275.
Salt in Alabama, 275.
Stewart, Rev. C., Letter from, 323.
Spirituality of God, 345.
Steam Ship, large, 574.
INDEX.

Small Pox, 375.
Steam Boiler, new, 419, 420.
Silver in Pennsylvania, 420.
Song of the Angels, 536.
Spiritual Mnemonics, 538.
Seaman’s Correct Calculator, 561.
Surgical Operation at the Hotel Dieu, 561.
Southern America, 582.
Sandwich Islands, 565.

T.
Travels in Europe, by a Clergyman, 21.
68. 111. 158. 254. 353. 443. 488.
Transatlantic Recollections, 24. 117. 162.
358. 402.
Treasurer’s Receipts of Theological Seminary, 45. 95. 140. 186. 236. 284. 332. 381.
422. 476. 525. 573.
Time, what is, 153.
Truth and Charity, how to maintain, 345. 394.

U.
Universalism, Discussion of, 32.
Ultra Ganges, 183.
Ukase, Russian, 332.

V.
Voice of the New Year, 15.
Variolous Eruption, 90.
Voyage of Discovery, 133.

W.
World, Inhabitants of, 36.
Weather, 36.
Weights and Measures, British, 133.
Webster’s Dictionary, 178.
Whale caught, 179.
Wood, fire-proof, 179.
Wool, Camblet, 275.
White on Catholicism, 420. 553.
__________________________________________________________________________ reviewed, 507. 553.

Y.
Yeast, to make good, 177.